The NCAA Division II basketball championships will be held at the Springfield Civic Center on March 24-26. Semi-finals will be held on the 24th and 25th, and finals of both men's and women's teams will be held on the 26th. For more information call 781-6500.

A Saint Patty's Day parade will be held at noon on March 20 in Holyoke. For more information, call John O'Neil at 536-5111.

After weeks of inactivity and studying, hiking can be a welcome change. Mount Sugarloaf, located on Route 116 between Sunderland and South Deerfield, provides a 30-minute hike and a good view.

Amherst's conservation areas are equipped with a variety of trails. Trails are located on Pine Street, by Puffer's Pond, and at the Miller River Recreation Area, near the center of North Amherst.

Quabbin Reservoir has miles of hiking trails picnic area, and a scenic area. Quabbin, the largest body of water in Massachusetts, reports that 24 eagles are residing on its watershed area. To get to Quabbin, take Route 9 east through Belchertown center.

The Chesterfield Gorge, located in nearby Chesterfield, is an idyllic place to spend a sunny day by enjoying its natural beauty.

While another is a short ride away

By EILEEN GALLIGAN

Students arriving in western Massachusetts from other areas soon discover the natural beauty found in the Pioneer Valley and beyond in the Berkshire Hills.

Many of these spectacular sites are only a few miles away from the University of Massachusetts and make enjoyable day trips for those wanting to hike, bicycle, picnic, or just stretch out and discover spring all over again. A good place to do this is Chesterfield Gorge, a scenic canyon located in the tiny hilltown of Chesterfield, about 30 miles from UMass.

Granite cliffs carved by glacial ice and centuries of rushing waters from the Westerfield River has formed the sides of the canyon, which was recently made a historic natural landmark by the Massachusetts Trustees for Reservations, an organization located in Milton which is in charge of state reservations.

At the upper end of the gorge where the waters flow downstream to the west, are the crumbling remains of a bridge constructed in 1739 as part of the old Boston to Albany Post Road. Since the gorge was made a reservation in 1929, several adjoining acres that are filled with spruce and hemlock trees have been purchased and donated by both private citizens and local companies.

The gorge is still officially closed and exploring along the narrow high paths above the canyon is not recommended yet because there is still plenty of snow and ice there. However, the ice formations suspended from the cliffs are beautiful this time of year, said Naomi Sturtevant, a Chesterfield resident and town librarian.

Starting May 1, a full-time guide will be stationed at the gorge from 10 a.m. until sunset and scenic viewing, fishing, hiking, picnicking in designated areas, and white water canoeing are allowed.

Swimming is not allowed due to the dangerous rushing waters, and overnight camping and fires are also prohibited, said Warren Drew, superintendent for Windsor Management, the local firm that oversees Chesterfield Gorge and several other area reservations.

Drew said he has been kept busy year-round for 15 years at the reservations by outdoor enthusiasts who come in both winter and summer. Other sites include Notchview reservation in Windsor where cross-country skiing is popular, and Pettycoat Hill in Williamsburg, about 25 miles from campus, where stone was once mined in the high ground.

Also under Windsor Management are four other reservations including two waterfall sites, one called Glendale Falls in Middlefield, about 33 miles away, and Chapel Brook Falls, also a good rock climbing area, 22 miles away in Ashfield. Bears Swamp, also in Ashfield, has extensive hiking trails, and for those interested in the prehistoric era, genuine footprints from some of the delightful creatures back then can be seen at Dinosaur Footprints on Route 5 in Holyoke, only a 15 miles drive away.

So for the price of a few gallons of gas and maybe some picnic essentials of fried chicken and beer, students can rejoice in the coming of spring by exploring these natural wonders right in their own backyard.

It's more than the sun that attracts students to Florida

By LISA MOSLEY
Collegian Staff

Every Spring, thousands of college students swarm to Florida to frolic on the beaches and go on extended alcoholic binges. And while chugging cans of Old Milwaukee in a crowded motel room will produce the desired physical effect, most people prefer a more social setting in which to imbibe. So when the sun goes down, students abandon the sand and surf and head for their favorite nightspots.

Ft. Lauderdale, a veritable student haven, boasts several fine drinking establishments. The bar that seems to be the hands down favorite is the Button. This Ft. Lauderdale institution features daily wet T-shirt and jock strap contests, college drink-offs, and 50 cents drinks during happy hour.

No one seems to take the contests too seriously, and most students at the least seem mildly amused by them. Sam Bargod, who spent last Spring break in Ft. Lauderdale, describes the Wet Willy (wet jockstrap) contests as "very funny."

According to Patrick Gallagher, a sophomore and a Bluewall bouncer, it's the Button's atmosphere that people enjoy.

"It's pretty wild. Everyone's all over it," said Gallagher.

Another popular Ft. Lauderdale bar is the Candy Store. Like the Button, it holds wet garment contests for both sexes, drink-offs that pit rival college teams against each other, and sensual banana eating contests in which the male contestant holds a banana between his legs and his female partner eats it. The Candy Store, however, has the added attraction of its own pool.

According to Gina Potito, a junior who spent last Spring break in Ft. Lauderdale, "The Candy Store was wild. There were crazy people, good times. It was fun."

For those who require live music to compliment their poison, there's Mr. Pips. This club usually features big name bands and draws a large student crowd.

Daytona Beach, another frequent choice for Spring break vacationing, is also packed with student tailored bars. Perhaps the most popular here is The Hole, where the DJs spin exclusively oldies and Motown, the beer is relatively cheap (75 cents), and there's no cover charge. This is the easy relaxed sort of place where you drink hard and dance hard all night long . . . It's also reputed to attract the best looking women in Daytona.

Another Daytona Beach favorite is Big Daddy's. According to Kevin Fachetti, as far as bars in Daytona go, "Big Daddy's is it." This sprawling bar consists of five levels, four bars and three bandstands. Although there's a $5 cover charge, patrons receive free visors and T-shirts at the door. Big Daddy's also boasts some of the most fabulous drink specials in town. From noon until 6:00 p.m., the drafts are 50 cents, there are 3 for 1 drinks, and even 25 cents hot dogs. Early in the evening (7 p.m. to 9 p.m.), a $7 cover charge lets you drink for free.

Not everyone who ventures south for Spring break is looking for a seven day long keg party, and Florida has bars that cater to the more mellow of us as well. They are usually found in the cities located more inland, where there is a chance that there will be fewer students.

A favored bar in St. Petersburg, for example, is the Hurricane Lounge. It's a jazz lovers paradise that features hot instrumentalists nightly. Sal Mariglio, a recent UMass graduate, calls the Hurricane "a hip place." Says Mariglio, "It's not on the east coast, so it's not real touristy. It's definitely not meant for northerners."

Whatever your preference in nightspots, Florida probably has something that'll suit your tastes. So, drink up, and remember, keep those T-shirts dripping.

Florida is the popular place to be for Spring Break, and lounging around on a sun-drenched beach is a great way to spend time there. These people have the right idea in that respect.

This sculpture by Degas is one of many fine works of art that are on view at the Clark Institute of Art in Williamstown.

Even though Brodie, Jiminy Peak and Butternut Basin are not making promises of snow during spring break, there are still other options for activity in the Berkshires.

For some interesting indoor entertainment, and maybe some culture if you are not careful, head to the Clark Art Institute in Williamstown. They claim to have the third largest collection of paintings by the Impressionist Renoir in the world.

Clark Art will also have on display a special show of Japanese and American Art called "Eastern Winds," and an exhibit of spanish art. The hours at the Clark Art Institute are from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and they are closed on Mondays.

If you are still interested in museums, you can try the Hancock Shaker museum in Hancock and the Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield.

Mount Greylock, the highest mountain in Massachusetts, offers some scenic hiking and eight miles of the Appalachian trail.

For those interested in wildlife, there is an active beaver colony at the Pleasant Valley Wildlife Sanctuary in Lenox. One can walk up Lenox mountain from Pleasant Valley to a fire tower for an excellent view of the Berkshires, and if it is a clear day you can see New York state.

College student guide a must for Florida-bound neophyte

The Rites of Spring
By Bruce Jacobsen and Rollin Riggs
Priam Books

By LISA MOSLEY
Collegian Staff

If you plan to spend Spring Break in Florida, the last place you'd probably seek information on what's hot and what's not is in a book, but a brand new guidebook to Florida by 1982 Yale graduates Bruce Jacobsen and Rollin Riggs might change your mind.

The Rites of Spring could be a lifesaver for the student on a first-ever adventure to Florida. Written expressly for college students, this guide contains a separate chapter on each major vacation spot in the state. Jacobsen and Riggs not only provide endless listings of hotels, restaurants, bars and clubs, but also provide invaluable information about the establishments, like prices, how the management reacts to students, and how many and what kinds of students frequent the establishments. The authors were even good enough to disclose the prices of beer at various Florida nightspots.

Jacobsen and Riggs also provide sections advising the traveler on how to have successful one night stands, curing hangovers, avoiding sunburn, and packing. I suppose a little comic relief is necessary to keep any travel guide from becoming too dry and tedious, but these chapters are inane and offensive. Reading them made me wonder why I was ever led to believe that Yale only admitted intelligent people.

For its thoroughly researched listings, however, this book is worth every penny of the five dollars it costs. If you're headed for Florida next week, definitely sacrifice a few beers and make the small investment. You'll be glad you did.

'Spring Break' is a movie

By ANDY GORDON
Collegian Staff

Spring Break has traditionally been a time when UMass students and tens of thousands of other college students across the country pack their bags and swarm to Ft. Lauderdale. After a week of rest, relaxation and extensive partying, they return and tell the rest of us what a great time we missed.

This year will be different. In addition to hearing about what a great time we missed, we the underprivileged will get to see it as well; thanks to a new movie called Spring Break, which is being released to coincide with the vacation.

Billed as an epic of "sun, sand, surf, sex and suds," the flick was directed by Sean S. Cunningham. This may not mean much to non film-buffs, but Cunningham's name on a credit is almost synonymous with exploitation. When The Bad News Bears turned a profit, Cunningham made Here Come the Tigers. When Halloween turned a profit, Cunningham made Friday the 13th. Last summer, Porky's turned a profit.

I don't mean to trash the movie before it opens. The spirit of the film will be a deciding factor. The cast seeems interesting. In one leading role, Corinne Alphen plays a "seductive siren." Alphen was 1982's Penthouse Pet of the Year. The production values all seem admirable. The picture was filmed on location all along the strip last July. It includes scenes at Button-on-the-Beach and The Candy Store, two popular clubs, and has such famed competitions as the wet T-shirt, the teenie-weenie bikini and the erotic banana eating contests.

Seeing the whole deal as free advertising, store owners gladly allowed the streets to be tied up by film crews. For the record, over sixty percent of the business on the Ft. Lauderdale strip for the entire year is done during Spring Break.

Dormitory closings force housing search at break

By E.L. BIRK
Collegian Staff

Upwards of 500 dormitory residents will find themselves without housing for Spring Break as of 6 p.m. on Friday March 18.

That will be the result of a decision to completely close UMass dormitories made by executive Director of Housing Services Joseph Zannini, according to Gerald Quarles, director of the Housing Assignment Office.

Quarles said between 300 and 500 residents usually remain in the dormitories during spring break. Their reasons for staying vary.

Some stay because they are members of athletic teams and practice during the week off from academics to gain a competetive edge. Some stay because they live far enough away that the cost and inconvenience of traveling is not justified.

Joanne Levenson, director of the Off Campus Housing Office, said she had heard of the change in policy over the phone in a conversation with a Collegian reporter. As a result, she said her office could not guarantee short term placements.

In order to aid a student in finding temporary housing, Levenson provided the list of agencies printed below. She suggested students work with her office if working on their own proved fruitless. Quarles of the Housing Assignment Office said his office always make referrals routinely to the Greek system and to the Off Campus Housing Office.

One of the most attractive housing opportunities is the Campus Center Hotel which has set aside 20 rooms for students at a special rate, according to Hotel manager Merideth Schmidt. While most of the houses in the Greek system contacted had no plans for renting, students are urged to contact house treasurers for possible arrangements.

Good luck finding a room but if none turn up, make a sign that reads "Ft. Lauderdale," and head south.

Break doesn't stop drinkers from making rounds

By SCOTT HERSEY
Collegian Staff

Chances are that most of you are probably looking forward to the upcoming spring vacation.

And chances are even better that you plan to do something over this vacation.

Some people, who just can't seem to get winter out of their systems, will head north to Vermont or New Hampshire and spend the week skiing on the little amount of snow that's left on the mountains. Others, who have had enough of the cold, will head south to Florida and spend the week lying on the beach trying to get a tan. Still others will go home, or use the week to catch up on sleep, cleaning their houses or, if they are really bored, homework.

But chances are the best that no matter what you do over spring vacation you will spend a great deal of time drinking.

And more than likely you will be drinking beer.

The University of Massachusetts is a beer drinking school.

Anyone who has driven by Stadium Liquors on a Friday afternoon knows that this is true.

By 5 p.m. on any Friday, the Amherst Shopping Center's parking lot, where Stadium is located, is filled with cars and students going to buy beer. Attempting to drive up to the store is tough. Even Joey Chitwood — of "Joey Chitwood Auto Thrill Show" fame — would have trouble negotiating around the dozens of bodies carrying cases of Molson, Miller, Lite and Budweiser.

UMass is also a Budweiser school.

Just walk by any dormitory early on a Monday morning and watch the janitors take out the trash. By Monday morning, you see, all those cases that people bought on Friday afternoon are finished.

And of those thrown away, most are the brown, thick-necked bottles of that mean Budweiser.

Personally, I can't tell the difference between most domestic beers, and therefore prefer the cheaper brands like Schafer and Rolling Rock. But there seems to be some mystique about the red, white and blue labels that drives people to drink the beer.

So if you're going north, I'm sure you will be spending as much time in the ski lodge as on the slopes. If you're going south, everyone knows that although you will be on the beach all day, you will be in the bars all night. And even if you're going to stay in Amherst, when there is nothing else to do, you can always head for the Drake, The Pub, Charlie's or any of Amherst's other drinking establishments.

And I hope for everyone's sake that no matter where you are, they have Bud on tap.

The searching has begun for fun in the Florida sun

By JOHN HUDSON
Collegian Staff

The pamphlets and advertisements always make it sound so fantastic. "Daytona Beach and Fort Lauderdale for Spring Break!," they say. "A hedonistic haven for the harried, hasseled college student!" Yet, like all so-called inexpensive travel plans, the descriptions given in the brochures or promised by bright-eyed, enthusiastic travel agent must be taken with a grain of salt (or perhaps sand, as the case may be).

When they say, "Travel will be provided in the comfortable atmosphere of our custom-built, chauffer-driven motorcoach," they really mean you'll have to sweat out at least twenty-four hours of grueling travel in a beat-up, used, rusty, slightly dangerous yellow school bus. When it gets too hot, the air conditioners will refuse to open, just as they refused to close when you hit that freak snow storm in Georgia.

For the men, the sad fact is that the ratio of men to women in Fort Lauderdale, for instance, is estimated to be three to one during spring break. As the Boston Globe so eloquently put it, "Despite its romantic reputation, beer drinking is a more popular activity than necking at Lauderdale because of the high male to female ratio. There is also an active gay scene." So you can forget the idyllic picture of man and woman, romping barefoot down a sun drenched beach.

After reading my put-down of the so-called hot-spots for spring break, the reader may wonder why all the animosity, why the bitching, the moaning and the groaning, cold coffee, ex-convict bus drivers, and fume-filled beaches? Jealousy, envy — never. I'll be spending my break in beautiful, sun-filled Bedford, New Hampshire watching Love Boat reruns, Leave it to Beaver and The Richard Simmons Show — what more could one ask for? A post card would be nice.

Home: the vacation hideaway

By BILL WALL
Collegian Staff

While many of your friends and acquaintances may be fortunate enough or determined enough to escape the confines of UMass or home and enjoy spring break in the sunny climes of Fort Lauderdale or Miami Beach, there are those amongst us who, by choice or no, intend to spend the vacation at home.

But despair not, as there is much at home one can do during the upcoming nine days of freedom from classes and area jobs.

For instance, a student has that rarest of opportunities during the break, time to catch up on academics. There won't be the distractions of extra-curricular activities or the demands of a job to deter the student from potential studying. Others may come back with tans, but those who get caught up academically can find solace in their accomplishment.

With an entire week to spend in the home area, the diligent searcher will be able to scour high and low for that elusive summer job. Although success is by no means assured, the conscientious job-hunter has a head start in the market on those who choose to idle away their hours on a sun-drenched beach. The future benefits of summer employment will hopefully outweigh the instant gratification obtained in Florida enough to justify missing out on the fun and sun.

If studying or searching for a job doesn't make your boat float, then a seldom seen home offers a student varied comforts purportedly unavailable in the Amherst area, such as a comfortable bed and food that is distinguishable from dogmeat.

A great way to expand your cultural horizons, especially if you live near a metropolitan location, is to visit a museum or the tourist attractions that are always ignored by the locals, most of which are worthwhile. What with special student rates and occasional freebies, these are places not to be overlooked by the student who aspires to do more than watch "Happy Days" reruns during the days of relaxation accorded students in March.

But whatever one chooses to do this break, one should remember that after it is over, it is back to the books and jobs and lack of sleep, with very little relief until finals are over. (No, let's not think about finals). So it is incumbent upon us who are free for nine days to take advantage of it. As they say in Econ 104 — Maximize your utility!

Summer's outdoor athletes should begin spring training

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

As the sun begins its slow southward rotation and the days gradually begin to lengthen, shedding more light and warmth on this barren campus, a trend will begin to take place.

Joggers, increasing from the few dedicated to the streaming masses of spring-fevered sprinters, will join the hordes of frisbee freaks and sun worshippers. People are in the mood to break free from winter's clutches into summer's open arms. But they have to get into shape first.

The yearly transition from winter's sluggish forces and all the pounds they put on to spring shorts and shaping up is never easy. This guide is designed to provide a little motivation before summer surprises anybody with thighs too flabby to show off. The list is composed from available information on fitness centers both on and off campus.

The Fitness Testing Service gives a thorough examination, including a resting electrocardiogram, a treadmill stress test, a flexibility test, a pulmonary test, a blood lipid analysis and a body composition/body fat test, to evaluate the initial fitness level and prescribe individual fitness programs. The cost of testing is $50 for students, $100 for faculty, staff and alumni, and $150 for others.

The service is open Tuesday and Thursday from 8 a.m. to 12 p.m. and Friday from 8 a.m. to 11 a.m. Appointments can be scheduled at University Health Services, 549-2671, ext. 225.

The Body Shop

The Body Shop offers a hydraulic resistance exercise machine which provides a circuit-type workout to improve endurance and strength. The program is open to both faculty and students for $45 a semester; facilities are located in NOPE and Boyden gyms. Interested parties can call Frank Katch of the exercise science department at 545 1337.

Women's World
Northampton Plaza, Northampton

Woman's World, a facility featuring exercise bikes, three and five pound weights, 30 minute aerobics classes, and aerobics/exercise classes for 50 minutes, has an introductory program, six weeks for $25. Nutritional guidance is available and weigh-in is not required. Monday through Friday, from 9 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. and Saturday from 9 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

Racquet and Fitness Center
Rte. 116 and Plumtree Rd., Sunderland

This club offers tennis, raquetball and sauna facilities to students for a $55 a year membership fee, $85 for non-students. Nautilus equipment is available for a separate of $85 for three months, less with membership. Suntanning facilities are also available at $5 a shot. Courts can be booked from 7 a.m. to 12 midnight seven days a week.

Hilltop Health Club
Webster recreation room, Orchard Hill

Planning to open in April, this facility will offer fitness testing and will prescribe personal programs. Weight training, aerobics and jogging programs and health workshops will be available. A membership fee will be charged and participation is limited to Orchard Hill residents.

Aerobic Dance

Taught by graduate student Kirsten Costello, who has a thorough background in training and conditioning, these classes meet twice weekly for ten weeks and last an hour and fifteen minutes. Tests are administered at the beginning of every program to evaluate cardiovascular fitness and to determine the percentage of body fat and are repeated at the end of the program to show progress. However, the program only begins at the beginning of each semester; for future reference, the cost is $50 per semester.

Change in season, change in clothes

By JODI GOLDSTEIN
Collegian Correspondent

As I sit in the Hatch, my daily ritual, I observe the fashions that parade by me and let me tell you, they are a sight to see. People parade by in their cotton pants worn with wool sweaters and boots, the so-called fashionable with their mini mini-skirts and stockings, legwarmers and boots. The bizarre stroll in their socks and sandals and then there are always a few who walk by clothed head-to-toe in their polyester. I said to myself, they definitely need help on how to dress.

So students, as we prepare for our spring break in those warm climates that we all have chosen, here are some ideas on spring fashions for you.

Many fashions have nipped-in waists and hip hugging skirts. Big hats are back and so are gloves. Polka dots are showing up on everything from stockings to shirts. Skirts with slits, fifties circle skirts, capri pants, jumpsuits and drop evening gowns are the other new fashions.

If you can't afford to spend a lot on clothes, then why don't you buy something in white? Whether it is a white cotton shirt or a skirt or even a pair of pants, white is a must have because it is crisp and clean; what typifies spring more than white?

The hottest look in bathing suits this spring is the bikini in pastels or brights, solids or prints. Covered-up by t-shirts and bermuda shorts.

T-shirts are big this year, oversized and worn with the sleeves rolled, and layered one on top of the other. Along with the t-shirt tops are the v-neck backed dresses and blouson dresses which come just above the knee.

Not only are t-shirt dresses falling above the knee, but so are skirts. The ever popular mini-skirt is around again but this time in blue or dyed denim, cotton or sweatshirt material; all the best dressed legs are wearing them.

One needs the right accessories to look their best. Cotton sweaters and tops look best with mini-skirts. Other accessories for this spring are wide belts, denim jackets and vests and jewelry made out of steel. When one wants to dress up, one only need use the right accessories and the outfit will look great.

So, when you're ready to purchase your spring wardrobe, remember, white, pastels, polka dots, t-shirts, mini-skirts and dresses and you will look like you walked right off the pages of your favorite fashion magazine.

UMass employee claims discrimination

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

Mary Wentworth, the Poor Women's Task Force Coordinator at the Everywomen's Center and former U.S. House of Representatives candidate, said yesterday the University of Massachusetts administration is "trying to get rid of" her by not renewing her one-year contract.

Wentworth, who spoke at a press conference yesterday, said she might lose her job because the administration feels she is publicly too vocal about women's issues and because she is not paying enough attention to the admissions aspect of her job.

Wentworth said that in the annual performance evaluation done by her immediate supervisor last spring, her performance was rated "outstanding." Yet in July, she said, another evaluation was done by Robert Welch, special assistant to the vice chancellor, rating her performance as "minimally satisfactory."

Wentworth questioned both the reasons behind the second evaluation and Welch's qualifications to evaluate her because it is supposed to be done by her immediate supervisor.

She said the decision to fire her was made at the same time the second evaluation was made.

However, Ruth Weekes-Washington, Director of the Everywomen's Center said the second evluation was done by Welch who was acting as interim supervisor before she (Weekes-Washington) became the director. The new evaluation was made because the first evaluation "had problems."

Welch refused to comment on Wentworth's allegations because they involved confidential personnel information.

"I am extremely reluctant to say anything. If I do so I am guilt of violating her confidentiality," he said.

Wentworth said that in December, she received a note from Weekes-Washington which said she wasn't prepared to make a recommendation for reappointment after reading her second evaluation, and that a decision would be made at the end of March.

Wentworth filed a written grievance against the University Office of Student Affairs because she said she had not been given sufficient notice about whether her contract would be renewed in June. She said non-professional University employees have a right to six months notice before a contract is renewed or discontinued.

Weekes-Washington said the delay in the decision to renew Wentworth's contract was not made as a result of the evaluation. Weekes-Washington said there was not a clear policy about contract renewals.

Wentworth said the second evaluation concluded the work she had done was excellent except for her admissions work.

The University divides her job responsibilities into two categories, she said. The "welfare" category includes providing information about daycare, housing, and legal problems. The other category is "admissions" which includes providing poor women with information about attending UMass, she said.

Wentworth described her job as the "most overloaded" job at an already "overworked" center, and said she only has 30 hours per week in which to perform it.

"I'm expected to sit down and plan a program and do outreach to target the population of women who want to go to school. But I have set priorities," she said.

New shelter opens in April for area homeless

By VIRGINIA WARFIELD
Collegian Correspondent

Starting next month, area homeless will find more beds and longer hours as a new county-wide shelter opens in Northampton, replacing the Amherst-based Prospect House.

After eight months of providing food and temporary shelter for individuals and families of Amherst, Prospect House will shut its doors for good at the end of this month, Priscilla Braman, director of the new shelter, said.

The new shelter, which is partially funded by the state and Hampshire County communities, will have 20 beds and be open 24 hours each day at its 82 Bridge St. location.

According to Braman, who did an initial survey to determine the need for a new center, the shelter will be open to all the people in the county.

"We have a need for more shelter than Prospect House can provide," she said.

Currently, Prospect House is only open from 6 p.m. to 9 a.m., and can old up to 13 people, who may stay no more than two weeks.

The seven-bed shelter is located behind the Village Inn on Amity St., and its doors are locked during the day.

Food for the center is provided by the Western Massachusetts Food Bank, though only dinner and breakfast are served.

Ms. Braman said the two shelters will merge their services, and none of the eight people at Prospect House now will be inconvenienced or left homeless.

Patty Smith, one of three University of Massachusetts interns on the staff at Prospect House, said that students usually do not have to seek lodging there, so they should not be hindered by the change in location.

However, she said, many of the volunteers at Prospect House are college students who will not join the staff of the new shelter.

"They don't want to travel all the way to Northampton," she said.

Vice chancellor proposes deferred tuition payment plan

By MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Correspondent

Beginning next fall students may be able to pay their tuition and fees in installments rather than in one lump sum if a plan proposed by Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson is approved.

"If the plan goes into effect for the 1983 school year opening, payments will begin around May first," said Madson.

The plan proposed would be under the management of one of two companies, EFI-Fund Management or Academic Management Services (AMS).

Both companies offer budget plans which provide students or parents the opportunity to budget educational expenses over a period of months. There are no interest charges on the plans. The only cost is a fixed annual non-refundable application fee.

If payments were to begin on May first, the University of Massachusetts would receive the first payment in June. This means the cash flow during the summer months would be greater than normal, according to the proposal. The interest earned on these advance payments would offset the interest lost currently on delinquent bill payments.

Nationally the average participation in these two programs is 650 out of every 10,000 students, the proposal said.

The percentage of delinquencies has been 1 percent or less. No financial charges are levied on delinquent accounts, but they will be dealt with by the management company and the University.

Other proposals have been suggested, Madson said. Two of them were in-house installment plans based on those at Boston College and Cornell University. These two plans are similar to the plan already mentioned, but Cornell's in-house plan includes a $50 late payment charge.

Non-OPEC oil producers hold key to any possible future price cuts

LONDON (AP) — Britain and other oil-exporting nations outside OPEC may determine whether world oil prices fall further following the cartel's decision to cut its base price from $34 to $29 a barrel.

Already, the Soviet Union, the world's biggest oil producer, has raised a possible threat to the new OPEC price.

The Soviets, eager to hold European customers in a shrinking oil market, cut the price of their crude by $1.25 to $28 a barrel, oil industry sources in Rome said yesterday. The Soviet Union exports about 1 million barrels of oil a day to Western Europe, with an additional 2 million a day going to Communist nations.

The main spotlight, however, has turned to Britain.

Its price cut of $3 a barrel last month was the main reason the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries held an emergency meeting in London to devise a strategy for stabilizing prices.

OPEC decided Monday, after 12 straight days of haggling, to reduce its price about 15 percent and to limit the oil production of each of the 13 members. They argued, as one minister put it, "until our tongues became heavy as lead," before agreeing on the first price cut in OPEC's 22-year history.

Staffing levels draw transportation safety board fears of fatigue danger

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board said yesterday the government is allowing air traffic to reach normal levels too quickly amid continuing questions about the training and long hours of air traffic controllers.

The Federal Aviation Administration ordered strict ceilings on air traffic after the 1981 controllers' strike and the firing of 11,500 controllers, but FAA officials say they intend to lift all restrictions by the end of the year.

The volume of traffic nationwide is expected to return to pre-strike levels by next month, although there are still far fewer controllers working than before the strike and many supervisors are still directing aircraft, rather than only watching over their staffs.

Jim Burnett, chairman of the NTSB, suggested the FAA should slow down its push to lift restrictions, which have put ceilings on air traffic at 20 major airports.

"I feel that we're dropping the traffic controls faster than we should," Burnett remarked during a break in the board's discussions of a three-month study of the control system by an NTSB task force.

Later he said in an interview that his concern about the pace of returning air traffic levels, which began with the strike, continued now that the FAA was planning to lift all restrictions.

Republicans delay defense spending vote to force Reagan concessions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republicans yesterday reluctantly postponed critical votes on defense spending in hopes of working out sharp differences with President Reagan, while House Democrats announced a "consensus" budget blueprint of their own for fiscal 1984.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. and other Democratic leaders spelled out a Democratic alternative budget calling for much slower growth in defense spending than Reagan wants, additional spending for domestic programs and new job-training and education programs.

"This is a consensus budget," O'Neill said of the $863.5 billion plan, conceding there are still some differences among Democrats on increasing tax revenues and other issues. Reagan's budget proposal is $848.5 billion.

Meanwhile, senior Senate Republicans deadlocked with the president over cuts in his proposed 1984 defense budget reluctantly agreed yesterday to a personal request from Reagan to delay action on the plan.

Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, said Reagan promised to look for ways to slow the proposed increase in military spending for next year and beyond.

But Domenici said Reagan made no specific promises to reduce his $238.6 billion 1984 Pentagon budget plan far enough to meet the demands of a broad majority of Republicans and Democrats on the committee.

Meanwhile, at the White House, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan "obviously prefers" that Congress adopt his defense program with no changes.

In the House, work was to begin on the Democratic spending plan in the Budget Committee today.

The plan includes defense spending of $235.4 billion, a 4 percent increase over this year after inflation but 6 percent less than Reagan asked for. It also include $30 billion in additional tax revenues, $11 billion in 1984 for a long-term job training program and $8 billion for extending unemployment benefits.

O'Neill said no decision has been made on whether to recommend eliminating the third year of a personal income tax cut which takes effect in July or whether to cap it so that middle-and low-income people would get the reduction, but those earning more would not.

Reagan wants the tax reduction, enacted in 1980, to take effect.

If the alternative budget were adopted, it would mark the first time in three years that House Democrats have lined up behind a single spending plan.

In the Senate, some Democrats said they were skeptical that Reagan really intends to compromise on his defense proposal, but instead was hoping a White House campaign would succeed in changing votes on the issue in Congress.

The hearing is scheduled April 13-14.

Fiske said he and his wife, Marilyn, have had a wide variety of requests for help since the successful surgery on Jamie, who had her first birthday on Thanksgiving Day.

House approves gas tax

BOSTON — The Massachusetts House gave initial approval yesterday to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' proposed increase in the gasoline tax.

The vote was 85-62 and the measure — which would be effective April 1 — has additional hurdles to clear before going to the Senate.

The bill sets an 11 cents per gallon floor on the levy, which is set at 10 percent of the wholesale price, computed quarterly. At current costs, this is a 1.1 cent per gallon increase — a hike of more than 10 percent.

Before the Legislature, under Gov. Edward J. King, switched the gasoline tax to a percentage of wholesale prices, it had been 8.5 cents per gallon.

CAMBRIDGE — More than 70 faculty at Harvard University have appealed to Soviet Secretary General Yuri Andropov to end the imprisonment of Anatoly Shcharansky, a professor of engineering.

In a letter made public yesterday on the sixth anniversary of Shcharansky's arrest in the Soviet Union, the group also asked for an end to harassment of other Jewish scholars.

"Many of our colleagues have been demoted or dismissed, have had their scholarly works suppressed and have been prevented from collaborating with the rest of the Soviet academic community," the letter said.

Manson asks transfer

MOUNDSVILLE, W.Va — Charles Manson wants to come home to West Virginia — to the prison where his relatives once did time, says state penitentiary Warden Donald Bordenkircher.

In a letter, Manson asked Bordenkircher to accept him as a transfer from the Vacaville, Calif., Medical Facility, where Manson is serving multiple life sentences for the murders of actress Sharon Tate and six other people in Los Angeles in 1969.

"Some of his relatives did time in the facility here, and he said they helped build a lot of roads in the area," Bordenkircher said.

"He just wanted to carry on the family tradition, I guess."

WASHINGTON — Final Senate action on a stalled $5.1 billion jobs bill was delayed yesterday by a battle over an amendment that would kill the federal withholding tax on interest and dividends.

In addition, the jobs bill was weighed down with three more amendments to allow the government to use surplus crops to feed the needy in inner-city areas, speed up federal payments to repair San Francisco cable cars and express Senate opposition to administration plans to sell government weather satellites.

SPRINGFIELD — A truant squad questioning and apprehending youths who roam streets during school hours may violate their civil liberties, a lawyer says.

"There are a lot of loose ends to this," Springfield lawyer Archer Battista says of the "Springfield New Attendance Policy."

Under the program, police and school officials question youths spotted in stores and parks during school hours. Youths who are students in Springfield public schools are brought to school. Youths who refuse to identify themselves are detained until police determine their names.

Bicycle Committee requests road renovations for safety

By JANICE ANDERSON
Collegian Correspondent

A recent report on bicycle safety in Amherst recommended that major roads be widened to accomodate bicyclists along with the flow of traffic. The report, compiled by the town Committee on Bicycling, has been taken under advisement by the Amherst Board of Selectmen.

The report found bike paths too expensive to construct as well as dangerous, and bike lanes to be an unsafe alternative. Bike paths would remove bicyclists from the flow of traffic, but the most likely place for an accident to occur would be at the intersection of a bike path and a road. Bicyclists would have to cross the road at points where motorists would not be looking for crossing traffic. Bike lanes along the side of the road would force bicyclists into "dangerous maneuvers" at intersections, the committee's report stated. Another reason that bike lanes would be unsatisfactory is that without the "sweeping action" of passing cars, the lanes would quickly become debris covered.

The report recommends that instead of separating bicycles from traffic, roads be widened to accomodate bicycles within the flow of traffic. Instead of the standard 12 feet from the center line to the white line on the right side of the road, lanes would be widened to 14 feet wide, plus a paved shoulder. Bicyclists would ride just on the inside of the line on the edge of the road. Motorists would have room to overtake bicyclists without having to go into oncoming traffic, yet not enough room to encourage them to travel two abreast.

Naturally, the plan has its obstacles, Arthur Swift, chairman of the committee said of the recommendation. "The plan has its problems — there would be pretty trees in the way, it would require the taking of land by eminent domain, and a 14-foot roadway is not standard. There is a question of the willingness of the town to construct a nonstandard road." When North Pleasant Street was reworked it was agreed to make it 14 feet wide, which it is. But in some places 14 feet is right to the curb, so it does not make it that much better for bicyclists.

The committee does not expect all major roads to be widened right away. It would like to see the recommendations endorsed by the Board of Selectmen, and agreement made to construct new roads to the specifications recommended in the report. "The selectmen are amenable to placing signs at dangerous intersections," Swift said.

The report recommends that Amherst enforce bicycle laws for the safety of the riders themselves.

Law enforcement, too, presents problems. "The town's initial reaction was against" fines because they would have to be collected in District Court in Northampton, Swift said. Amherst is reluctant to clog up District Court with bicycle tickets.

Another problem of enforcement is that "the Amherst Police Department is already very busy, and a step-up in enforcement would probably require more manpower," said Swift.

Selectmen are considering the report, but they have raised some concerns. Chairwoman Edith Wilkinson said, "If roads are wider, will cars go faster? Also, I'm concerned about the idea of young children learning to ride in traffic." Wilkinson said the selectboard is considering more immediate aids to bicyclists such as sweeping roads better and more often, and fixing drains and curbs so they aren't hazards.

Haverhill murder suspect draws local group's help

By ONAIDA FOX
Collegian Correspondent

The arrest of a University of Massachusetts student for the murder last January of a Hampshire College student in Haverhill, has resulted in a battle of words between the Essex County District Attorney's office and Medusa, a local organization struggling for the rights of mental patients.

Shulmit Fishman, a member of Medusa said the organization, located in the South Hadley area, was established after the murder of Gina Sindoni, 21. The organization is acting as "Defense Committee' for the defendant, Gena Spero, 19. Members include ex-mental patients, lesbians and friends of the victim or defendant, who have collected money for lawyers fees and expert witnesses, she said.

"She (Spero) said she did not do it. The only reason she was arrested is because she is black, a lesbian, and an ex-mental patient. It is a perfect witch hunt," she said.

Robert Zieman, the Essex County district attorney handling the case was not available for comment; however, Karen McLaughlin, a spokesperson for Zieman said, Fishman's accusation of a witch hunt is "off-base."

"Does she recommend we not prosecute a murderer, just because she is a lesbian and a black, regardless of evidence," McLaughlin said.

Fishman said hundreds of poor and black people are prosecuted yearly, and they are the same ones on death row. The justice system is used to prosecute these people "down the line."

There were other possible suspects who were not thoroughly questioned, she said. Spero's past made it easy to pin the murder on her.

McLaughlin said the distiet attorney does not have evidence to implicate anyone other than Spero.

"If anyone has information on a suspect, they should write a letter to the district attorney, and he will follow through with it," she said.

The D.A.'s office would not prosecute a person whose father and uncles are on the police department unless they had 'strong evidence of her guilt," McLaughlin said. "The person who has made these speculations is out to lunch."

Often friends and family members of the defendant try to put up smoke screens to hide the facts," she said.

All of the information released about Medusa to the media came from the D.A.'s office. "Of course they do not want other viewpoints," Fishman said.

Struggling to change the labeling system, for the rights of mental patients, "They hope to re-educate the public on the facts of mental institutions," she said.

"Institutions are like meat lockers. Society does not know what it is to be without rights," she said.

Judy Louis Cyr ordered Spero to Framingham State Prison for psychiatric observation. She was found not competent to stand trial for six months.

"It does not look as if she will be going to trial," Fishman said.

Campus-wide space shortages cause Campus Center crowding

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Campus Center is one of the largest of its kind in the country, yet many problems over office and meeting room space exist.

Both student groups and administrators are in search of more office space in the Campus Center but there is nowhere to go.

Conference Services needs more administrative space to accommodate their drive to bring in more sales and generate more revenue for the Campus Center but currently no room is available.

"Conference Services would like to expand in this building but there is no real space," said Bill Harris, director of the Campus Center.

Students are also feeling the effects of the lack of space. Steve Berg, space allocations coordinator for the Campus Center Board of Governors said that he has a list of over twelve organizations which are trying to find office space in the Campus Center but there is nowhere to put them.

"Student groups are now in competition with each other in the search for more space, to work out of. There is so little room in the Student Union Building," he said.

This problem, he added, will be complicated when the student radio station WMUA moves into the building toward the end of this semester. The station is in the process of being evicted from its current location at Marston Hall by the engineering department.

Harris said a main part of the problem is the lack of available meeting-room space on campus which forces many groups to use office space in the Campus Center.

Other issues over space in the Campus Center continue to arise. Currently, there is a problem in the Hatch Restaurant and the Coffee Shop of customers not being able to find a free table during lunch because many people are using the tables to study. "The Hatch is so crowded between 12:00 and 2:00 with people doing homework that it creates a serious problem for those who want to sit down and eat," he said.

Harris said his office is going to put up table tents in the Hatch asking people to eave after they have finished eating in order to prevent the problem in the future.

Escort Service to lose its office

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

Two weeks after they received approval to offer student escorts academic credits, the Student Government Association Escort Service has found itself without an office.

The Campus Center Board of Governors last Thursday night voted to remove the Escort Service from their office in the Student Union Building room 415 following arguments that "the Escort Service never used their office space or made moves to secure it after they come up for reapproval," according to Steve Berg, space allocations coordinator for the BOG, and other members.

"It was a matter of enforcing Board policy on the use of student office space," Berg said.

The Escort Service was not utilizing its space this semester or last and that other people who work in the same office never saw anyone from the Escort Service, Berg said.

Due to the lack of office space in the building and the increase in student demand for space the BOG has to make sure that every room is used properly. Twelve other students groups have put in requests for office space.

"We had six organizations whose status was questionable so we sent out letters asking them to come to an appeals hearing," he said.

Two of those groups responded but the Escort Service didn't. "We gave them notice but they never replied. I feel badly but you have to be fair to the other groups," Berg said.

Response from the Escort Service has not been one of regret but that they would like an appeal from the BOG. "I can understand why it happened because we had a lot of problems last semester but right now I would like the Board to reconsider since we have worked so hard to offer student escorts credit," said Laura O'Shea, co-coordinator of the service.

"It is going to make it real hard if we don't have an office because we will be holding workshops in the Campus Center and we need a place to organize and keep our files," she said.

Berg said the BOG and the Escort Service may be able to work out something and also suggested the library as a place to which they could possibly go. "I would like to help them find space but there is so little room in the Student Union building," he said.

Berg said he wanted to emphasize the fact that every group has a space on a year to year basis rather than retroactively.

"All the rooms come up for reapproval and as long as the space is being utilized the BOG won't take it away. We give everybody the same treatment," he said.

Judges deny seat plea; action already taken

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

The University Judiciary last night refused to order the Undergraduate Student Senate to seat 12 new members before tonight's elections for senate officers.

Presiding Judge Lawrence Mestel announced the unanimous decision, ruling that a petition for a writ of mandamus was not the proper judicial action. A writ of mandamus would compel an officer of the senate to take some action.

"Action was taken by (Senate Speaker Sharon) Davies in tabling the motion," Mestel said. "The real question is the propriety of that action," and such a decision would be covered under a different procedure, Mestel said.

The three-member judicial tribunal was convened to act on a petition filed by Southwest Area Government Treasurer Carol Rafferty, who was chosen by the McKimmie House Council last week to fill the dorm's vacant seat.

The senate last week refused to seat Rafferty and 11 other newly-appointed senators following charges by some senators that an attempt was being made to "stack" the senate before tonight's election of new officers. The senate tabled the appointments until after the elections.

Television set theft and cash larceny end up on police log

By LAURIE FISHER
Collegian Staff

Amherst police yesterday reported arresting a 29-year-old man in connection with an attempted theft of a television set from an Amherst store on Monday.

Police said the man and two companions walked into Mientka Radio-TV Inc. on Monday morning. While the two companions talked with the owner, the third man ran out of the front door with a 19-inch RCA television, valued at $449.

Police said the owner, realizing the set had been taken, ran out the door after the man, screaming at him. The man and the two companions fled the scene in a car that was later identified by a passing pedestrian, police said.

Using information supplied by the pedestrian, police were able to track down the car and later arrest the man, who was charged with larceny over $100 and with giving police a false name. The suspect was then turned over to state police, who had a warrant for his arrest. Police said the two companions were not arrested.

Ater inquiring about different bicycles in Peloton's Monday afternoon, a man jumped on a $400 12-speed Univega bicycle and rode out of the store, police said. The man was chased by an employee on another bicycle down East Pleasant Street.

A resident of Meadow Street reported the theft of $495 in cash and three checks worth $64 at 8:45 a.m. Monday, police said. The suspect is thought to have entered through an unlocked front door, police said.

A New York man was arrested at 8:30 p.m. Monday for operating an unregistered motorcycle without a license, police said. Police noticed the older motorcycle plates on the vehicle while patrolling on University Drive.

A car stero was reported stolen from an Audi Fox on Monday. Police valued the stereo at $150 and believed it to have been stolen between 4 a.m. Feb. 12 and midnight Feb. 13.

Summer Session continues this year

By GLENDA CAREY
Collegian Correspondent

The Division of Continuing Education will again be offering its Summer Session despite anticipated economic difficulties due to Reaganomics, according to the Coordinator of Credit Programs Angel G. Ramirez.

"It is difficult to project if the enrollment will suffer because of the present economic conditions," Ramirez said. He added the enrollment in a class is the key factor in determining if it will be offered.

The Summer Session, which has been run by Continuing Education since 1975, receives between 3,500 and 4,000 registration applications annually. For the most part, all courses offered are requirements for a particular major within the department which offers it.

Not surprisingly, the most popular courses in the summer are often the ones which are most difficult to get into during the academic year. "There is a tremendous demand due to scheduling conflicts, especially by the School of Management," he said.

Students also find the Summer Session allows them to shorten their stay at the University, thereby decreasing their educational costs. Said one student, "I couldn't find a job anyway, so I took some classes that will allow me to graduate early."

No significant increases in the tuition for Summer Session are projected, said Ramirez. He added that further information will be available during mid April.

Women's development projects subject of Peace Corps talk

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

The needs and wishes of people living in Third World countries must be considered in development programs, according to a member of the Africa bureau of the Washington D.C. Peace Corps yesterday.

Carol Wzorek spoke about what development programs need during a panel discussion yesterday on "Women and Development" at the University of Massachusetts.

"I cannot think of a phrase that gets more people's backs up than 'women in development.' People think women in development is a program. It is not a support system for western women. It is not an export of western feminism to other countries," she said.

However, women have been neglected in development projects, she said. Consideration of women's roles must be taken into account by the projects.

Consideration of women's liberation in Third World countries must by nature be different because of the difference in cultures, said Nancy Herman, a UMass graduate student in anthropology and former Peace Corps worker in Senegal.

"Assuming universal subordination of women can cause misconceptions," she said.

Panna Putnam, coordinator of the Third World Women's Task Force at the University of Massachusetts and a student at the Center for International Studies at the University, said inequality and oppression have many reasons behind them.

"Development projects must not become a tool to prevent basic social change. They must work with the people themselves," she said.

Speaker calls for democratic approach to higher education for stopping bias

By REBECCA L. THATCHER
Collegian Staff

Last night at Smith College a former University of Massachusetts professor urged administrators and educators to promote a democratic, pluralistic approach to education that helps eliminate the Anglo-American, ethnocentric bias.

In a speech titled, "Democratizing Higher Education In A Pluralistic Society: A Challenge to Higher Education," Dean of Graduate Studies and Research at California State University at Los Angeles Bob Suzuki explained the need for pluralism in higher education and how to translate his theories into practice.

During the sixties there was a rise of ethnic consciousness which paralled the feminist movement, Suzuki said. "It has been within the context of this ferment that the concept of pluralism appeared in higher education," he said.

There are dangers in a simplistic view of cultural studies," Suzuki said. "It is not enough to say there is going to be unity with diversity."

Suzuki cautioned against an incorrect interpretation of the study of ethnic groups which can result in "runaway laissez-faire ethnicity" of "the concept of pluralism which perpetuates inequalities instead of eliminating them.

"The institutions of higher learning have a responsibility to help solve the problem," he said. "When any group suffers oppression, the entire society is degraded by this dehumanization."

They have a responsibility, Suzuki said, because they have a virtual monopoly on intellectual resources, and they train world leaders, administrators and voters.

Institutions have abdicated their responsibility, Suzuki said. "The schools are not meeting the educational needs — either the academic or social — of many racial and ethnic minorities, particularly those who are poor, because they are victimized by the sociocultural milieu of the schools," he said.

"White schools preach a lot about democracy, freedom and equality, but the social structure of most schools promotes values and behavior that are quite antithetical to their ideals," he said.

Selectmen approve plan for road width

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen unanimously voted to endorse a plan for bicycles and cars to share area roads by widening them and to promote consideration of bicycle safety at their meeting last night.

The motion was made following a discussion on a report released by the town committee on bicycling last month which called for a widening of roads from the center line to the shoulder line from 12 feet to 14 feet, according to Arthur Swift, committee chair.

"This distance will leave room for cars to pass bikes but won't encourage cars to pass other cars," Swift said.

However, adopting this motion will not call for any road construction or alteration, chairwoman Edith L. Wilkenson said.

"This motion entails a psychological rethinking on the part of bicyclers and motorists," said Selectman Richard H. Minear.

The 14 foot shared roadway will serve bicyclists as an alternative to bike paths, according to the bicycling committee report.

Currently, Swift and Del Castilho are discussing recommendations issued to the selectmen by the town manager.

In other business, Wilkenson reminded town members of the date Town Meeting Warrant closes, March 18, and reviewed a tentative list of articles for the meeting, which begins May 3.

The contract with the Town Manager was also unanimously approved by the selectmen.

Thinness ideal gets the blame for poor health

By MARY BALDWIN
Collegian Staff

The media and their efforts to promote consumerism is a major cause of eating disorders such as anorexia nervosa, bulimia and obesity according to a consensus of women at a workshop Monday at the University of Massachusetts.

"Consumerism, the force that created this country is keeping women down and unhealthy. It is a destructive thing," said Laurie Orton, a member of the women's issues team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy.

The women there expressed their feelings regarding societal pressure on women to be thin.

The media, and their promotion of thinness was blamed by the women for influencing eating habits and shaping the way women think about themselves.

"Profit is what the people who run the media are interested in," one woman said.

"Advertisers don't care what you look like as long as they are making money and the consequences of these advertisements oppress and handicap women," Jane Zbyszynski, also a women's issues member, said.

The women discussed fat discrimination and the physical fitness, body building craze advocated by Jane Fonda and others.

"Fat discrimination is a type of discrimination that is completely overlooked," one woman said.

The other women agreed that women are often hired as ornaments.

"Never mind your mind, just look good," another woman added.

One member recalled an incident that happened to her at work. She called her boss out of his office to meet a woman who was there for an interview. The woman was overweight and wore little makeup. The man took one look at her and refused to see her because she was not good looking, the woman said.

Incidents such as this cause women to believe that their whole sense of success or failure is centered around eating, one member said.

The women agreed that having some sense of yourself and some successes so that you do not judge yourself according to social standards of thinness and beauty is very important.

The physical fitness craze was believed by most women to be a positive force, however, they agreed that the people out there in the industries related to the craze are capitalizing on and exploiting women.

"In other words, won't you look cute in your new Nike sweatpants," one woman said.

"Body building is still geared towards looking good and getting a man," she said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

We will have to repeat our past

In the second week of November some 150,000 veterans of the Vietnam War walked past the Washington, D.C. monument erected to their sacrifice. While to a large extent the conflict has receded from public memory, one lesson has still held. The vast majority of Americans do not want to fight another war of this type again.

Unfortunately, the Reagan Administration is not interested in learning from the past, or from public opinion. In 1980 the United States government requested 5.9 million in military aid for El Salvador. Reagan is now asking for $110 million to support the El Salvadorian armed forces against the guerrillas. Plans are also afoot for El Salvadorian troops to be trained in the United States, and for an increased presence of U.S. advisors.

Brooke States

The parallels with Vietnam are irresistible, but not totally accurate. The government will not be able to hoodwink the public as it did during Vietnam. The economic problems in the country are such that it will be extremely difficult to finance the conflict on a scale remotely approaching Vietnam, without tremendous political fallout at home.

But sending more advisors is a problem. In describing the American buildup in Vietnam William O'Neil, in his book Coming Apart, states: "America was now wedded to the war, by the blood of the men it sent to die there." Once Americans are killed, or once we reach a certain number of advisors, the situation changes. For more troops will be needed to protect those there. At this point the advisors stop being advisors, and the casualties become not dead Americans, but take on a political aspect. This is where it is similar to Vietnam, the slow build-up, in this case, very slow. Each step seems like a little. We are told there are no plans for a "wider war." But the sum of the steps being taken is much more then the parts.

The increase in aid is little, compared with overall figures being thrown around in the budget battles up on Capitol Hill. But that money could go to better things. Those standing in the unemployment lines today, or those that are not because their benefits ran out, will be glad to know that the cause of freedom is being defended in El Salvador.

The real question is what are we doing in El Salvador at all? We are told that we are defending a country with a moderate leader from hordes of degenerate dupes, backed by the Soviet Union and Cuba. This is a lie. It is true that the rebels get help from the Cubans in the form of weapons. It is very little. After all, they can hardly expect the United States to help them. We are giving aid in far greater amounts to the official government. It's legitimacy rests on the previous elections. These were a farce. The rebels were not able to participate, because they would have been killed. The "leftist opposition" includes many former Christian Democrats, and numerous other independents. It is not only Communist.

El Salvador has had fifty years of military rule. In these fifty years the exploitation of the peasants and urban workers, has changed little. The rural oligarchy still pulls the strings. We are backing a government that is looking back towards the past. The rebels represent the future of the country, whether that is negotiated or militarily accomplished. To further mire ourselves in the conflict will not help.

El Salvador is not essential to the survival of America. It is essential to Ronald Reagan's attempt to define "American interests" in terms of a political philosophy. We cannot and do not have the right to police the world. Nor can we keep socialism out of Central America, because to do so would mean attacking institutions and governments that support us now. "Those who choose to ignore the mistakes of the past are doomed to repeat them."

Flyer lacked social responsibility

On most college campuses there exists a certain degree of political idealism. Students learning more about our government and coming to terms with it failures as well as its triumphs see, perhaps more clearly than others, the promise for improvements. From the socialist movement of the 1930's to the nationwide crusade for peace in the 1960's, history has shown this to be the case. The generation of the 1980's is no exception. We, also eager to right the wrongs of a powerful government, are often prepared to take our causes to the public. There are those who wish to abuse that sense of promise to achieve their own motives which may be totally contrary to the ideals that they're professing to. In the name of democracy, they actually obscure it; in the name of fairplay, they discredit their opponents through unfair tactics; in the name of broad-based human rights, they support regimes that know no such concept.

Don Narey

Last Friday an organization, which chose not to identify itself, distributed a pamphlet proclaiming that "Reagan wants to escalate the war in El Salvador." There was no attempt to explain why a president plagued by a historical national debt would want to increase the war effort of a nation greatly dependent on American financial support. The point, however, is that it stated that Reagan wants to escalate the war, not the government of El Salvador nor the Marxist guerrillas that they're fighting but Ronald Reagan. Are we then to believe that the President of the United States is the aggressor in this conflict rather than the Marxist who chose military confrontation over the electoral process that they were invited to take part in a year ago? Granted, American presidents have instigated foreign wars, but in this case the opposing forces must bear some of the responsibility.

The unauthored pamphlet then describes what "constitutes the escalation" as the President's alleged interest in increasing the "number of U.S. military advisors from 55 to 100." This implies that there are currently 55 American military advisors in El Salvador. 55 is the administrations self-imposed limit on advisors not the number of advisors currently in that country. The current issue of Newsweek numbers the advisors at 37. Whether there are 37, 55, or 100 advisors is not the issue here. The issue is that this pamphlet makes an implication that it does not attempt to defend.

The "likely outcome," we're told, is that the U.S. "will offer the Salvadorian dictatorship counterinsurgency training and high-tech weaponry." Sources for this and other claims are cited as "compiled from several sources particularly from The Nation March 12." The above assumption is based on an editorial that ran in that issue of The Nation, however, The Nation offered no news coverage of the situation in El Salvador in that issue. The "several sources" remain a mystery.

This pamphlet was endorsed by the Northampton Comm. On Central America, Gay and Lesbian Activists, Students Against Militarism, Radical Student Union and several other student organizations, none of which have claimed responsibility for its allegations or distribution. Nowhere in the pamphlet is it stated who funded this campaign to raise support for the March 12 rally on the Amherst Common.

Certainly, there have been well-formulated cases against U.S. support for Salvadorian autocracy, as there have been solid cases supporting it. The issue here though, is one of social responsibility. The tactics used to drum up support for this rally were irresponsible and deceiving, but more importantly they stand as an insult to the intelligence of UMass students and a travesty of serious political movements.

Is Senate vote stacked?

To the Editor:

We would like to call attention to an objectionable decision made by the Undergraduate Student Senate this past Wednesday night. When a motion was brought before the Senate to appoint new Senators who had been chosen and accepted by their respective House Councils, a motion was brought to "table" the appointments until after the internal elections for Speaker and Treasurer. The elections are scheduled to be held at the next Student Senate meeting. The reason given for tabling was to prevent the "stacking" of votes prior to the upcoming election. A justification for this motion was the contention that the new Senators would not have enough knowledge of the candidates to make a proper decision.

It is our personal judgement that since no prior announcement of candidacy was made before this Senate meeting, no Senator could have better knowledge of the candidates than the next. Each Senator will have an ample opportunity to learn about the candidates through the forthcoming speeches of each candidate and the subsequent debate period.

One serious consequence of the Senate's decision will be the misrepresentation of the hundreds of students who will not be represented in any Senate decisions for the next two weeks. The very purpose of the Senate is to represent the interests of the students of this university. The Senate's ruling actively denies students their right to representation.

As the Senate stands now, a majority faction exists, the very one which voted to implement the tabling of the new Senators' appointments. As concerned members of the S.G.A., we feel that this misrepresentation should be publicly denounced and brought to the attention of all concerned students.

New parking policy unfair

To the Editor:

I was appalled and infuriated to read about the new parking ticket policy (March 14). It is not the policy that irritates me so much as the attitude connected to it. I quote from the article: " 'We're going to squeeze the students till they bleed', laughed one parking enforcement employee. 'We're going to have a lot of fun with this policy.' " The "parking enforcement employee" (I call them 'rangers') was not named but if possible, I would like to inform this inconsiderate asshole that I am a university student, not a prisoner in a concentration camp, and I do not wish to be "squeezed . . . till (I) bleed". I pay almost $2,000 a semester to come here, and another $25 a year to park in one of UMass' spacious, well-lit, well-plowed, state of the art parking lots, and I feel that I deserve a little compassion, if not respect. I have received $5 tickets for parking in a Southwest lot for an hour to just pick up my girlfriend and take her out, and last year my stereo was taken from my car in my own lot ($200 loss total) and I was told that nothing could be done. How can this be justified? True, being a ranger at UMass is one of the lowest occupations I can think of, but it's tough being a student, so lay off us a little and remember that we're humans, and not zits that you obviously like to "squeeze . . . till they bleed".

Resurrection: Hoax or History

Does the historical evidence support the ressurection of Jesus Christ? To be sure, this is quite a remarkable claim, but what kind of evidence do we have to be able to come to a logical well thought out conclusion either way?

Several explanations have been offered down through the ages to explain this phenomenon. Any explanation that can be posed must adequately explain not just a few, but all of the historical facts surrounding the situation, a few of which follow:

1.) The feared power of Rome was ignored by breaking a Roman seal on Jesus' tomb.

2.) Both the Jews and Romans admitted that the tomb was empty.

3.) A highly disciplined Roman military guard fled their watch and had to be bribed by the officials to lie about what happened.

4.) A two ton stone was somehow moved from the entrance of the tomb while a Roman guard stood watch.

5.) The Christian religion began in Jerusalem, the city in which Jesus was crucified and buried, and NO ONE produced a body.

John Warwick Montgomery, Dean of Simon Greenleaf School of Law has this to say,

"It passes the bounds of credibility that the early Christians could have manufactured such a tale and then preached it among those who might easily have refuted it by simply producing the body of Jesus."

We must not bias our perusal of the evidence simply because we are dealing with Jesus. We must examine the evidence as we would examine any other historical document.

Philip Schaff, historian, says, "The purpose of the historian is not to construct a history from preconceived notions and adjust it to his own liking, but to reproduce it from the best evidence and let it speak for itself."

Have you ever really checked out the resurrection in an unbiased historical study? Christianity means nothing if this proposition does not hold true.

'Drum' wins national award upon first entry

By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Special to Black Affairs

On the inside cover of DRUM we are told that the DRUM is "one of the art forms" that was taken away from blacks upon their arrival in America. That 12 years ago "after great struggle" the DRUM was revived in Amherst. That there is a constant "danger of losing" DRUM as art forms are being lost one by one. What a tragic loss it would be to lose our DRUM!

DRUM is the Black Literary Magazine at the University, which focuses on the urgent issues facing America's minorities, yet focusing finely in an artistic way. The issue of art and politics is debatable, but that a magazine can have apolitical focus and still be an art form is not.

The Spring 1982 (most recent) edition of DRUM, its first entry to the Columbia Scholastic Press Association national competition, won first prize in the Fine Art and Literary category. The DRUM long recognized by its loyal readership deserves national acclaim.

After flipping the back cover featuring an inspirational mural, entitled Builders of the Culturic Present, DRUM opens with a beautiful, however political poem by Andrew Salkey. The first half of the magazine is most timely and critical articles about music, ranging in topic from Bob Marley to Thelonius Monk and including many fine photos. The midpoint of the magazine displays the color artworks which are reproduced rather nicely against a black background with white trim.

Especially eye-catching is the centerpiece of a mixed media piece by Varnette Honeywood, Kujichagwua, and a mixed media collage by Napolean Jones-Henderson, Black People Rise, So We Too. There is an informative article about Martin Luther King by Philip Martin, a student. A black and white collage by Laurie Spinelli, another student, urges us to unite behind Liberty and defeat oppression.

This work is particularly impressive because it ties together the seemingly disparate entities of racism, sexism and capitalist oppression in the form of nuclear politics. Later, there is another article by Martin on Solidarity Day in Washington. As the magazine ends with many articles of international, national, and community concern to black people, it must also be said that it crosses racial barriers in writing things of concern to all people.

For instance, there is an interview with Jimmy Cliff which is very revealing and compelling. The back cover expresses the universality of the expression on one's face with a mask which gives one the feeling of something between a person and a lion.

In his interview, Jimmy Cliff traces the roots of reggae to the slave trade in Jamaica, commenting that, while in America the slaves' drums were taken away from them, in Jamaica the slaves were allowed to keep their DRUM. I hope we can keep our DRUM here at UMass.

The issue in production now is dedicated to Martin Luther King and will be out in May.

Former minister discusses Tanzanian development

By JOHN DiPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

Problems experienced by developing nations were outlined at the University of Massachusetts Monday during a speech by a former Tanzanian government minister.

The speech by Abdulraham Mohamed Babu, a former Tanzanian official and now a visiting lecturer of Black Studies at Amherst College, was the keynote addressor of a three-day conference entitled "Life in the Global Village — World Development Issues."

Babu said many of the problems now experienced by developing nations are caused by their former colonial economic systems that the countries have not yet been able to change.

"Our economies were built on the colonial system," he said. "We never bothered to restructure our country."

Babu said that under the economic systems used by many developing countries, most of the agricultural resources went toward production of crops that could be exported for cash, rather than crops that could be consumed by the country's own population.

"We have the resources to feed ourselves, but unfortunately we cannot feed ourselves," Babu said.

"Instead of producing for the world market we should produce for the people," he said.

Babu said that a balance between agriculture and industry must be struck in developing nations.

Initial industrialization in developing nations had many negative effects on local economies and populations, he said.

Babu said industry in the cities, which produce goods mainly for export, drain people from rural areas. This, he said, leaves fewer people to work in agricultural endeavors.

"We cannot ignore agriculture," he said.

Another effect of workers moving to cities to work in industry is that more of the work goes to producing goods for export, rather than goods that would be consumed within the country.

Babu cited what he called a "massive transfer of wealth from poor countries to rich countries," saying that $5 million to $6 million of poor nations' wealth is exported to richer nations each hour.

"What goes in is miniscule compared to what goes out," he said.

Is the Third World image still impaired by the press?

By RHONDA SWAN
Collegian Correspondent

Throughout history the news media, both the print medium and television have been criticized for their bias toward a particular political party and social class and its inability to present veritable facts.

Although the aspect of party and social class bias has hardly disappeared, it has, however, decreased remarkably due to changes in society and technological advances.

Commentary

Despite the advances made in presenting impartial information to Americans about the United States, the media doesn't seem to have made the same progress with respect to Third World nations.

As stated by both Tony Brown, author and producer of "Tony Brown's Journal", and Angela Davis, noted civil rights activists, one of the major problems that blacks in American society have to deal with today is the lack of true and accurate information dealing with the Third World as it is presented by the news media.

One example of the print medium's inaccurate account of a Third World nation event can be found in Newsweek, one of the most popular and widely read national and international news magazines in the United States.

In its February 14, 1983 issue, Newsweek published an article entitled, "Nigeria's Outcasts: The Cruel Exodus." The story dealt with Nigeria and the plight of its Ghanaian refugees.

Accompanying the article was a photograph of Ghanaian refugees being threatened by soldiers which was captioned, "Crowd control, Nigerian style: A chilling strategy for economic recovery."

Subsequently, the person on the Newsweek staff responsible for the photographical department should undoubtedly be familiar with the differences between the Benin-Togo and Nigeria borders. Even without personal knowledge of the two localities, more care should have been taken to see that the right photograph was accompanied with the right article.

Fortunately for Newsweek readers, Ibrahim Biu knew the difference and was concerned enough about the way Nigeria was represented to voice that concern.

However, the photograph was not related to the article and this fact was pointed out to Newsweek by Ibrahim M. Biu, Consulate General of Nigeria.

"This photograph was not taken anywhere near Nigeria. Nigeria is governed by a democratically elected government, and the Nigerian government does not use soldiers for crowd control," wrote Biu.

When Newsweek referred to the mistaken picture as an "error", it was simply admitting to a slight oversight, being that the word "error" is usually taken to mean a mistake that is generally unintentional and whose repercussions are mild if any.

However, the Benin-Togo border is at least two hundred miles away from Nigeria. A discrepancy between locations of two hundred miles apart can hardly be seen as a mere error, but more appropriately as a gross blunder.

Does Jesse Jackson's record qualify him as presidential candidate?

By MANNING MARABLE
from The Grassroots

Many Americans recognize that next year's presidential race will be more than referendum on Reaganism. Properly understood, Reaganism represents an attempt by the corporations to accelerate capital accumulation at the expense of workers, an effort to reduce permanently the levels of social services and public programs at the expense of an unprecedented arms buildup. In short, the basic tenor of our debate with the Right must be cast into three slogans — jobs, peace and freedom.

In this regard, members of the Congressional Black Caucus have taken the lead in defining the pressing concerns which affects Blacks, Latinos, poor and working class people. John Conyers of Detroit is developing perhaps the most progressive full employment bill in U.S. history. Parren Mitchell of Baltimore has taken the lead in denouncing Reagan's economic austerity programs. And Washington D.C.'s Walter Fauntroy was even arrested last year in a public demonstration against the dumping of toxic waste in a rural, Black North Carolina county.

The problem before us, therefore, is making sure that these questions of jobs (a full employment economy), peace (reductions in both conventional and nuclear weapons) and freedom (affirmative action legislation, a restoration of human services, etc.) become part of the presidential debate.

As I see matters, there are only two ways to begin this process. One strategy would involve running a progressive Black candidate for the Democratic Party nomination in a select group of ten to twelve states. The states should have either sizeable blocs of Black Latino, and trade union voters, or a tradition of political liberalism (for example, New York, Massachusetts, Michigan, Illinois, Pennsylvania, California, Washington, D.C.).

The goal of this strategy would be not to win the nomination, of course, but to force the frontrunner, Mondale, to the left. Whomever emerges as the Democratic party's alternative to Reagan — whether Mondale, Glenn, or any of the other lesser lights — he will not respond to the demands of the Black freedom Movement except in token gestures, unless he is absolutely forced to do so.

This cannot be done unless a progressive black candidate goes into the convention with 300 to 400 delegate votes, and when no single white candidate has a majority of delegate votes. This also means, of course, that Mondale must be denied a first-ballot victory at the convention.

Unquestionably, the best qualified candidate for this strategy is Ronald V. Dellums. Since his election to Congress, Dellums has represented the most principled and progressive alternative available in American politics. His unique strength is his ability to relate a diverse constituency: Blacks, trade unionists, feminists, Latinos, environmentalists, peace activists, etc.

Unfortunately, some Black Caucus members and other politicos have in recent days put forward another candidate who would be the centerpiece of the strategy outlined above: the country preacher himself, Jesse Jackson.

He has never been elected to public office. Jackson's defenders claim that he is the best-known Black political figure in America. Name-recognition is of course a valuable factor, but insufficient in itself to validate a person's political credentials. Everyone still knows who Jesse James was, but I sincerely doubt that this nineteenth century rogue was a suitable candidate for high office!

The chief weakness of a potential Jackson campaign, however, is in the candidate's inability to awaken the support of progressives outside of the Black community. Jackson's PUSH has no meaningful contacts within the women's movement, and Jackson's own ego has earned him many enemies within the civil rights leadership. Black nationalists and most leftists view Jackson with undisguised contempt as a political opportunit, a chameleon whose colors change with the issues. There is a real danger that Jackson the candidate would capitulate to Mondale (or even Glenn) at the convention, after a deal had been cut behind the scenes, leaving Blacks and progressives out in the proverbial cold.

The strategy to realign American politics in 1984 must begin with a candidate who can be trusted to represent our interst. As far as I'm concerned, Jesse Jackson disqualified himself a decade ago. Jackson is not a black leader — he is a celebrity. And the seriousness of the political crisis which is before us demands that any independent campaign start with a level of unquestioned integrity.

Bob Wills' labor of love

THE TIFFANY TRANSCRIPTIONS Vol. 1 (KALEIDOSCOPE)
Bob Wills and his Texas Playboys

By DAVID CHEVAN
Collegian Staff

Once in a great while an album appears on the market whose creation can only be described as a labor of love. For several years, Kaleidoscope Records, a small California record company, has possessed a series of recordings known as the Tiffany Transcriptions. The Tiffany Transcriptions are a series of over 300 recordings from the 40's, by the king of Texas swing, Bob Wills and his Texas Playboys.

Who, you may ask, is Bob Wills? Bob Wills was one of the originators of early country music. His band, the Texas Playboys, played everything from straight ahead eight to the beer-bar country music to big band swing. Today's biggest names in country music either started with Will's band or learned their chops from his recordings.

The Tiffany Transcriptions were recorded during one of the best periods in the Playboys' history. The band smokes through every tune in a manner more reminiscent of big band jazz than the Eddie Rabbit schlock that is passed off as country music nowadays. As each player gets a chance to play a solo Wills calls out his name to let you know who the player is. This friendly loose style of sharing the music with the band and the audience is often lacking in today's tightly arranged technical music world.

The album is an even mix of instrumental and vocal numbers. The instrumentals include at least one song, Missing to Moscow, that could easily blow away anything on the country market today. Another interesting item is an old Count Basie standard, Jumpin' at the Woodside. Usually this is a big band shout number, but the Texas Playboys turn it irito a smoking western swing boogie piece.

Wills left the singing to three excellent front people, but occasionally he interjects a few comments into a song. During one slow song, Blackout Blues, he reiterates singer Tommy Duncan's line in such a humorous manner that Duncan breaks out into uncontrolled laughter and has trouble completing the tune.

Kaleidoscope Records is such a small outfit you'll probably have to send for the record by mail, but it is easily worth the trouble. Their address is Kaleidoscope Records, Post Office Box O, El Cerrito, California, 94530. If you have any interest in the growth of music in general, or if you just like to boogie, this record is worth the effort you'll have to make to get it.

Alvin's still got it

ALVIN LEE
E.M. Loew's
March 5

By BRIAN DUDLEY
Collegian Correspondent

Alvin Lee has still got it. He proved that on March 5th by showing a full house at E.M. Loew's that he still possesses the fleet fingered filigree that made him a genuine guitar legend. From the opening chord of "One of These Days" to the closing strains of "Choo-Choo Mama" Alvin took the audience on a journey of amazing guitar pyrotechnics and tasteful, imaginative musicianship that left his fretboard smoking and the crowd screaming for more.

Mr. Lee culled his repertoire from many of the classic numbers of Ten Years After, including "Good Morning Little Schoolgirl" and, of course, "I'm Goin' Home." Naturally, each of these tunes included patented Alvin Lee solos. although he had a tendency to rely a little too heavily on some cliches, he nonetheless made up for it by producing some stellar musical statements that could only come from a true talent.

However, he really proved himself to be a master of the blues. With "Slow Blues in 'C'" and Bud Williamson's "Help Me" he alternated between the plaintive and the urgent, but at all times was tasteful and a joy to hear.

His stage manner was very refreshing. He really seemed to enjoy being there, and he was constantly mugging to the crowd and performing his little musical interludes like "Seat Thing" and "Classical thing" (which he regarded, with tongue in cheek, as his contribution to "a bit of culture").

After hearing this concert billed, on radio, as a reunion of the original Ten Years After, it was a minor disappointment to see that this wasn't the case. However, it only served to prove the man's talent that he could produce such a full sound with only bass and drums as accompaniment. Yes, Alvin Lee has still got it and one can only hope that we will be hearing more from this immense talent who has given us so much through the years.

Horsefeathers upsets GQ IV in OT

First setback in four years

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

"We kept our poise at the end."

That statement by John O'Neil summed up the match of the year as he and his Horsefeathers' teammates upset GQ-IV, 49-47 in overtime to spoil GQ-IV's bid for an unprecedented fourth straight championship, in the men's intramural basketball semifinals.

Horsefeathers will play Black Magic, who beat the Honeymooners, 39-32.

The GQ-Horsefeathers matchup was a classic one, pitting GQ's muscle against the outside shooting of the Horsefeathers.

GQ led all the way in the first half, but only came away with a 22-21 lead. It was a balanced attack for GQ, as Abe Yacteen, Garry Pearson, and Wilbur Jackson each had 4 points. Horsefeathers was led by Mike Shea with nine points and Billy Shea with eight.

The second half saw Horsefeathers jump out early. Billy Shea scored five straight points to build an ever-so-slight lead through much of the second half. But the GQ backcourt of Pearson and Dwane Lopes brought them back.

Things didn't look good for GQ-IV when Pearson picked up his fourth foul with 10 minutes remaining, but one again, the board work of Yacteen gave GQ second and third shots and with one minute left, the score was tied 41-41.

The Horsefeathers, now in possession, decided to hold the ball for one last shot, but Billy Shea missed with 7 seconds left and gave GQ one last chance, but Pearson couldn't connect and it was time for OT.

The start of the overtime was not a good one for GQ, as they lost Dwane Lopes, who fouled out with only six points. Neither team scored until two minutes into the overtime, when Mike Shea hit for two for the Horsefeathers.

But GQ, showing the experience that led them to three straight championships, came back to take a 45-44 lead with a minute left.

However, a technical foul against GQ for stalling gave the Horsefeathers possession. Gary Freker was fouled and the stage was set.

Freker responded to the pressure and canned both free throws to give Horsefeathers a 46-45 lead.

Don't go away yet, folks. GQ still had the ball with 20 seconds left. But as time winded down, Yacteen was charged with an offensive foul on a gutsy call by the official. Mike Shea hit both free throws to ice the game for the Horsefeathers.

Mike Shea led the Horsefeathers with 16 points and Billy Shea added 13. Pearson led GQ with 10.

In the other semifinal game, Black Magic used its height dominance to take an 18-10 halftime lead. The first half was a slow one, with both teams going to the free throw line often. Theo Moore's 6 points and David Perez' rebounding led Black Magic.

Most of the second half was just Black Magic and The Honeymooners trading baskets. Down by eight with five minutes left, the Honeymooners came back, hitting free throws down the stretch to cut the lead to 3. But time ran out and they had to foul. Theo Moore hit a key three point play to ice the game for Black Magic.

So, while the NCAA's are going on in the quest to Albequerque, Boyden gym will be the scene for the intramural final — Horsefeathers vs. Black Magic. Game time is at 7 p.m.

In the women's league, it will be Back in Black vs. Crampton Women. Back in Black beat Fast Lane 34-31, led by Chris Taggart's 13 points. Crampton beat the Horry Hams 31-23 with Sharee McClain hitting for 20 for the winners. Game time is at six.

Janice Baker's up and down career comes to a close

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

Although her college gymnastics career has been plagued with injuries, 1976 Olympic trialist Janice Baker has traveled around the nation to compete since she was 12 years old.

"I traveled so many places when I was little," the 21 year old physical education major said. "It's just like gymnastics was the only thing on my mind. I think I've done all my body can do. It's a lot of wear and tear on your body. It makes you feel as if you're 10 years older than you really are."

Baker came to UMass in 1979 and started in the all around. In the beginning of March 1980, however, she suffered a knee injury when she landed wrong after a vault. After an operation a week later and therapy throughout her sophomore year, she was eager to start working out. But she could not work out until she got a brace to protect her knee. It took two months to come in and another season was lost.

She came back in her senior year to compete in three meets for UMass. Injuries still haunted her as she hyperextended her knee one month ago forcing her to quit early.

"She obviously had a lot of talent," UMass gymnastics coach Ken Anderson said. "When I told her to do something she caught on real fast. It's too bad the injury held her back."

Baker started gymnastics in sixth grade in her hometown of Central Square, NY. She entered the Syracuse School of Gymnastics in a beginners class and within three weeks started competing with the team.

"My first year was really terrible," she said. "After I got through my first year I just progressed rapidly, you might say."

At age 14, her scores put her in 16th place and into the Olympic tryouts in Los Angeles, California. She finished first in the balance beam with a high score of 9.7 and 10th in the all around with 37.2 points. She needed to be in the top seven to make it to the Olympics.

"I sat there thinking 'I'm having a fun time over here and I probably won't place but I'll try to do good.' After the first round I found myself in the all around and it blew my mind. All of a sudden I started putting expectations on myself."

She also competed in Russia that year and placed seventh in all around in the Moscow News Invitational and came in fourth in the floor exercises in the Riga Cup Invitational.

Her plans for after graduation are dim right now. She said she will probably work at a gymnastics school this summer and go on to graduate school later.

"There's really nothing more for an old dead gymnast," she said. "I really think I don't want to do it anymore. It was nice to get back in there this year. It's not a life time sport. You can't be swinging around the uneven bars when you're 50 years old. I wouldn't want to.

"I'm happy and sad it's over. I'm happy because my body aches and I feel so old. I'm sad because it's always been there. It's like a close friend, saying goodbye. But I'll manage it."

Senate elects officers amid debate over SATF

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night elected a new senate speaker and Student Government Association (SGA) treasurer, with control of the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) a major campaign issue.

Chris Sullivan, nominated by Public Policy Committee chair Sheila Sullivan, defeated Andy Sparks for the speaker's position. Eric Nitzsche, nominated by Rents and Fees Committee Chair Mitch Gaslin and Women's Caucus Coordinator Sue Cottle, won a close race over Anne Connelly for the treasurer's office.

"I'm happy that the senate considered me the best candidate," Sullivan said. "I've always worked for the student interest, and together we can make the student voice heard."

In his campaign speech, Sullivan said he is "totally committed to gain full control of the SATF," and that as speaker he would build a case for student control.

Sullivan said he would demonstrate that "students have the experience" and "we are determined" to gain control of the SATF.

Although he said he was "staying away from campaign promises," Sullivan proposed a "training program for new senators," with "personal interviews with new senators to explain the senate, their responsibilities, and solicit input." He said he also hoped to raise awareness of issues before they come up in senate meetings to avoid the problem of senators "voting along with personalities, rather than on an understanding of the question."

Sheila Sullivan (no relation to Chris Sullivan) said in her nominating speech that "Chris has made a serious commitment to the senate" over the past year, beginning in the Public Policy Committee, and then as assistant to the SGA president and co-chair of the Budgets Committee.

Chris Sullivan said that as Budgets Committee chair, "the difficult and important decisions you must daily make and facing the often negative reaction to these decisions" has prepared him for the speaker's job.

Job experience and control of student funds were issues in the treasurer's election. Eric Nitzsche, a finance major and member of the Rents and Fees Committee, won a close race over Anne Connelly, who was nominated by senate Treasurer Lisa Potter and has worked in the treasurer's office for three semesters.

In his nominating speech for Nitzsche, Rents and Fees Committee Chair Mitch Gaslin said that although Nitzsche has no experience in the treasurer's office, "he has gained a lot of experience in related areas...especially with full costing and the impingement of the Student Activities Office (SAO) on the budget."

Nitzsche cited his "working relations with the committee chairs," and his "contacts in (Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis L.) Madson's and (Chancellor Joseph D.) Duffey's offices," in his campaign speech.

"The Administration has usurped control over the (SAO) office, and I think it's time we get it back," Nitzsche said.

Court to rule on student's suit against Fitzwilly's tomorrow

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

The U.S. District Court in Springfield is scheduled to hear arguments tomorrow about whether a University of Massachusetts student will be able to sue Fitzwilly's Restaurant in Northampton for the emotional distress arising from alleged sexual harassment.

Ruth Diaz, staff attorney for the UMass Legal Services Office, said tomorrow's court proceedings will be a preliminary step in the suit filed against Fitzwilly's last September. It involves a motion made by the defendents to dismiss claims of intentional infliction of emotional distress and other personal injury claims by Miriam Domonique, a former Fitzwilly's waitress.

"It's a motion on a technical point," said Frederick Sullivan of Sullivan and Hayes Law Firm, which is representing the defendents.

Robert Covill, the current general manager of Fitzwilly's, said he knew nothing about the court date and refused to comment.

Diaz said Fitzwilly's position is that Domonique is only entitled to Workmen's Compensation, while she will argue the court has the right to hear the personal claim.

"Workmen's Compensation is not sufficient for the injury she suffered," she said.

She said the court will decide whether Domonique will be able to sue the restaurant for the emotional distress claims.

"If the court grants the motion, it means that women will only be covered by Workmen's Compensation, which is only an insurance benefit," Diaz said.

"Before the trial they (Fitzwilly's) are trying to narrow it down by throwing out the claims that are the meat of the case," she said.

"Women who are subject to sexual harassment suffer emotionally. They lose their dignity as human beings," she said. "This is a really important case for women."

Last March, Domonique filed a complaint against Fitzwilly's with the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission for emotional distress, unsolicited physical contact, intimidation, and verbal propositions allegedly made by former immediate supervisor Richard Burbine.

She was later fired for stealing an article that did not belong to her, according to a former Fitzwilly's manager, Ray Callahan, who denied Domonique's allegations.

Diaz said Domonique was not violating company policy because she claimed an article that was left behind.

Domonique filed suit in the U.S. District Court for $250,000, Diaz said, with $150,000 of that sum for emotional distress and other personal injury claims.

Diaz said because tomorrow's proceedings, which will begin at 10 a.m., will be public, it would be beneficial if people attended.

"If they're interested they have a right to attend," she said. "This is especially important to women."

A group of women, including some members of the Women's Issues Team, are planning to attend the proceedings. Jane Zbyszynski, a member of the Student Center for Research and Advocacy, said "Any women who are able to should go. This case is something that affects every woman on this campus, and we have to stand behind each other."

House freezes nuclear debate

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Republicans, with help from the Democratic side of the aisle, blocked a vote last night on a nuclear freeze resolution that Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., predicted would pass by a substantial margin.

Republicans voted solidly against a motion to limit debate so that the resolution could be put to a vote by midnight. They were joined by more than 40 Democrats to prevent the Democratic majority from forcing an early decision on the measure.

The action put the resolution off until Monday at the earliest, since the House plans to do no legislative business today, which is St. Patrick's Day, and will not be in session tomorrow.

Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, said it was "by no means certain" that the freeze would be the first ordder of business when the House returns next week. He said a decision would be made "after we have had a chance to regroup."

O'Neill, D-Cambridge, a supporter of the freeze, estimated that the measure had enough support to pass by 60 to 100 votes.

Before quitting for the night, the House rejected, 226-195, a move by opponents to allow the United States to add more nuclear weapons to its arsenal.

The vote came on an amendement by Rep. Samuel S. Stratton, D-N.Y., to permit "modernization and deployment" of weapons needed to maintain the U.S. nuclear deterrent.

Earlier, the lawmakers rejected, 215-209, an amendment calling on U.S. negotiators to seek reductions

"The Old Redhead" was king of the airwaves in the 1950s with two weekly prime-time series for CBS, as well as a daily radio show, playing talent scout and host to stars and occasionally singing in his trademark rusty voice. Godfrey, who greeted his millions of radio and television fans with a cheery "Howa'ya, howa'ya" and treated them to homespun humor and conversation, was 79.

Salvadoran nun trial dismissed

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) - A Salvadoran appeals judge has ruled there is insufficient evidence to order a trial for four national guardsmen accused in the slaying of four American churchwomen, a court source said yesterday.

The action sends the proceedings back to a lower court, but the future of the four is uncertain.

The source, who asked not to be quoted by name, said Judge Luis Melara at the 3rd Appeal Court in San Vicente, 37 miles east of the capital, had ruled for the defense.

Melara confirmed in a telephone interview that he had made the ruling, but refused to comment on it.

Defense lawyers in December had appealed a prosecution request that the guardsmen be brought to trial.

The bodies of Maryknoll sisters Ita Ford, 40, and Maura Clarke, 49, both of New York, and Ursuline sister Dorothy Kazel, 41, and lay religious worker Jean Donovan, 27, both of Cleveland, were found in a shallow grave 30 miles southeast of the capital Dec. 4, 1980.

The decision means that a lower court must collect enough evidence to demonstrate there are grounds for a trial, which a court source in Zacatecoluca said could take months.

It also is not clear if more evidence will be available than that already collected in the year since the guardsmen were accused of the killings.

The guardsmen were taken into custody in February 1982 and the lower court issued its order to trial - the equivalent of an indictment - in November.

State Senate passes second divestiture bill

BOSTON - The state Senate approved a bill yesterday, the eve of St. Patrick's Day, that would force the state to sell off public pension fund investments in companies "contributing to the oppression in Northern Ireland."

The divestiture measure was modeled after a 1982 law removing public pension funds from firms doing business in the Republic of South Africa, because of its racial policies.

The Northern Ireland divestiture was restricted to firms involved in some way with munitions or other military equipment.

Roman emperors may have been poisoned

BOSTON — Two-thirds of the emperors of ancient Rome may have been poisoned and even mentally unhinged by high doses of lead in their wine and food, and that could have been a cause of the fall of the Roman Empire, a study concludes.

A researcher calculated that Roman aristocrats consumed six times as much lead as modern safety standards allow, and he said many of them had gout, a disease that can be caused by lead poisoning.

Dr. Jerome O. Nriagu analyzed the personalities and habits of the emperors and others who held power between 30 B.C. and 220 A.D. He found that about two-thirds of them — including Caligula and other cruel pleasure-seekers — "had a predilection to" lead-tainted food and wine.

U. Lowell gets center for industrial robotics

BOSTON - A talking robot named Hero scrawled an "H" onto a contract yesterday, symbolizing the start of a new program at the University of Lowell for training workers in the use of industrial robots.

"This guy has an ego that rivals John Hancock's," Lt. Gov. John Kerry said as he looked at the huge "H" on the contract, which was also signed by the state-funded Bay State Skills Corporation, Digital Equipment Corp. and Analog Devices.

The skills corporation and Digital each agreed to contribute $95,000 while Analog kicked in $60,000 for the college program, which begins this September with a course for more than 60 professionals in advanced automation.

New Bedford gang rape results in 6 indictments

NEW BEDFORD — A Bristol County grand jury handed down six secret indictments yesterday in the gang rape at Big Dan's Tavern, and the police immediately arrested two bar patrons who witnessed the incident.

District Attorney Ronald A. Pina impounded the indictments after they were handed down at 5:40 p.m. and said an arraignment was scheduled for this morning.

The police arrested two unrelated New Bedford men named Medieros, Virgilio, 23, and Jose, 22, who said they were in the bar on March 6 when a woman claimed she was raped for two hours by four men while other patrons watched. The police have said some customers cheered on the attackers.

The police said the two Medieros men would be charged with being accessories before the fact of rape.

The Medieroses said they were in the courthouse because they had been subpoenaed for the grand jury hearing.

Broken power cable cited as cause of Southwest blackout

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

An electric power cable which broke just outside Boyden gym has been determined as the cause of Monday night's blackout at the University of Massachusetts, a physical plant engineer said yesterday.

Crews from the Standard Electric Testing company of Chicopee spent Tuesday testing wires to locate the suspected cable fault, said Gene Robinson, an electrical engineer at the University. Because of the system's high voltage of 13,800 volts, licensed outside companies must be called in to find, inspect and repair any problems, he said.

Collins Electric, also of Chicopee, will most likely be the company called in to repair the cable, Robinson said. Cost and time estimates for the project were not available, he said.

Police reported no arrests during the blackout which left approximately 3,000 residents of the Southwest Residential College without electricity for over two hours. Police said patrols were dispatched to the area following numerous phone calls regarding the power failure, which incited behavior such as the throwing of objects from dormitory rooms, the setting off of smoke bombs and general noisemaking. No injuries were reported, according to police.

Power was initially restored to the area when the electrical system "backfed certain selective switching arrangements," Robinson said. The system operates from two sources of electricity, he explained, and when one failed the power was fed in the other way. Backfeeding is not a substitute system but rather an alternate one, he said, and a second blackout would not occur solely from its prolonged use.

Another blackout cannot, however, be ruled out entirely, he said.

"You never know what's going to happen," he cautioned, saying Monday's power failure was unexpected and could potentially reoccur at any time.

'Breadth of knowledge' to replace cores

Editor's note — This is the fifth in a series examining the General Education proposal.

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Staff

The component of the General Education proposal generating the most discussion lately in the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate is the Breadth of Knowledge section.

One of the three components of the proposed General Education curriculum, Breadth of Knowledge is seen by some campus administrators as a possible catalyst for change in the distribution requirement system of the University.

If approved this semester, Breadth of Knowledge would eventually replace the present 'C,' 'D,' and 'E' core requirement courses. It consists of six areas: Continuity and Change, Expressive Culture, The Individual, Societies and Institutions, The Biological World, and The Physical World. Each student will be required to complete at least one 4-credit course in each of the six areas, for a total of twenty-four credits.

"One of the reasons behind the Breadth of Knowledge is to give a rationale to the curriculum and the system as a whole," said Ellen Nylen, student task coordinator for the Student Subcommitee on General Education.

"Courses have to have a rationale, an explanation (for course requirements). Breadth of Knowledge gives one," she said.

It is proposed that many of the courses that become part of the component will be based on undergraduate courses currently offered by departments, some of which may need modifications designed to insure that they are part of a student's general education rather than serving as prerequisite courses within a department major.

According to a report released last February by the Faculty Senate's Ad Hoc Committee on General Education, the actual number of Breadth of Knowledge courses will be far smaller than that of the present "distribution" courses. It is also expected that the range of material and approach of each of the courses will broaden, meaning there will be more courses with more specialized material.

But Charles Hutchinson, chairman of the committee, said, "The new courses will be more extensive, depending on the course and the instructor."

There has also been debate over the role of teaching assistants, which Hutchinson said "will be used just as they are now."

"Breadth of Knowledge is probably the least controversial of the three proposed componenta," Nylen said. "It doesn't involve any money or many new courses."

According to Nylen, it is the task of the UMass General Education Council to establish clear limits of the number of courses that satisfy Breadth of Knowledge.

"The Council will absorb responsibility to play an active role in initiating, evaluating, and changing courses in the Breadth of Knowledge component," Nylen said. "There will be just as much choice in the Breadth of Knowledge courses as there is at present with the 'C,' 'D,' and 'E' core requirement courses."

Nylen said the Faculty Senate hopes to vote on this proposal within three weeks.

Puffers caretaker position included in Amherst budget

By ROBERTA RUBIN
Collegian Staff

Budgeting for the position of caretaker of Puffers Pond in Amherst will be included in the fiscal year 1984 budget to be proposed at the spring Town Meeting, according to Town Manager Barry Del Castilho.

Peter Westover, who is in charge of the Amherst Conservation Services, said this position was created because too many people have been coming into the pond area with cases of beer, creating noise, vandalism and garbage.

Westover said the caretaker would keep the area clean by picking up the trash and making sure the vegetation is not destroyed.

Also, he said the caretaker would watch for people who try to go into the pond area with alcohol, since there is an alcohol regulation law covering all conservation land in Amherst.

The caretaker would also offer aid to people if needed, he said. The person would carry a police radio but would not be making arrests or become involved in problem situations, he said.

"If there are any problems," Westover said, "the caretaker will call the Amherst Police, who are offering full aid."

Westover said the position as caretaker will probably be filled by a retired person who knows the town well and who wil be a "figure of authority". There will also be two part-time workers and a substitute in case either part-time worker is unable to work, he said.

Westover also said he would like to put signs up in early May to advise people against swimming to and climbing on the dam and the cliffs because the town of Amherst takes no responsibility for people who injure themselves.

The caretaker position will cost Amherst $4,200 a year, which is inexpensive, according to Westover. The town budget starts on July 1, and Conservation Services is asking $1,200 from the town reserve funds to hire the caretaker in May instead of June.

Westover said he feels the combination of the caretaker's position, and the 8 p.m. parking ban on State Street will reduce the number of people climbing onto the dam, bringing alcohol, destroying property and disturbing the neighbors.

"However," he said, "the users of the pond have to help in complying with regulations and in going where they're supposed to. This way, we will not have to take such drastic measures such as draining the pond in order to keep people out."

Westover said there will be a community cleanup day at Puffer's Pond on May 7, "so the caretaker will have a good start."

"I feel that Puffers Pond can once again be a really nice quiet family pond for all people to enjoy," Westover said.

HRTA students will receive 3 credits for Mexican cruise over spring vacation

By BOB OLSON
Collegian Correspondent

It would be a dream come true to go on a cruise in the Gulf of Mexico during spring break and it would be even better to receive three academic credits for doing so.

For some students in the department of Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration (HRTA), this dream will be reality next week.

An experimental course, HRTA 496 "Cruise Management," was designed by Professor Abraham Pizam of HRTA. He said the idea of offering a cruise management program is very unique, and said few schools, if any, offer a course such as this.

"Not may people have the expertise to teach a course in cruise management; it is a new area and a significant part of the industry," Pizam said.

The ship, which part of the course will be offered on, the SS Veracuz, will depart from Tampa, Florida on Saturday. It will make stops at Cancun and Cozumel in Mexico, and finally dock at Key West.

The academic portion of the cruise began weeks ahead of the actual departure date. Pizam said a "sandwich approach" will be used, in which a student will be given lectures before and after the cruise. Before the departure date students received lectures on the cruise business as a whole. This provided them with an overview of the cruise companies and the international domestic markets in cruise tourism, Pizam said.

Once on the cruise, employees from each of the ship's departments are scheduled to make a presentation. Some of these onboard lectures will include food and beverage management, social activities and recreation, engine room operations, and navigation. The courses on the cruise will take up about six hours a day, Pizam said.

After the cruise is over there will still remain more lectures and a term paper that participating students will have to complete. The one week time limit on the cruise creates a need to compress a great deal of information into a short space of time, Pizam said.

"It's like an intense summer course," he said. Pizam also said this cruise was particularly hard to book. Until last year, many of the cruise lines, when approached with the idea of assisting in a cruise managment program, were less than receptive, he said.

"I spoke many times with cruise managers and they all told me we would have to pay the basic rate," Pizam said. "Then last year a serious economic crisis hit the cruise lines—now I'm getting even better offers than the original ones I had asked for".

The Cunard Line owns the ship, SS Veracuz, on which the course will take place and Cunard has offered a 40 to 60 percent reduction in price. The $440 per person cost of the cruise gives one access to a swimming pool, gym, casino, bar, raquet courts, and movies. Each stateroom, which three or four students will share, has its own private facilities.

Credit Union offering reduced loan rates

By SUSAN BROWN
Collegian Correspondent

The UMass Student Federal Credit Union is now offering their lowest interest rate ever on a special reduced rate loan package. Qualifying account holders can now borrow $500 and pay 11.75 percent interst.

This special was recently approved by the Credit Union Board of Directors. Mark Sullivan, student loan officer, said he hopes this special will act as a "catalyst" and attract more business to the Credit Union.

"The students just don't know what we have to offer. We have the lowest interest rates in the country. We also have the cheapest checking rates," Sullivan said.

The Credit Union currently has approximately $1 million in assets. They can loan up to $8,000 per individual and they are presently working on raising that.

There are many advantages to having an account at the Credit Union, Sullivan said. The immediate family of an account holder automatically qualifies for all services offered by the Credit Union.

Also, he said, it is particularly advantageous for a senior to open an account since, even after graduation, that person can take part in the low rates and specials of the Credit Union for years.

A student with an account at the Credit Union must meet certain standards and provide collateral, such as a co-signer, stocks, or title to a car, when applying for the loan. By standard policy, the loan is to be repaid starting one month after issuance.

The Credit Union expects a big response to the special, Sullivan said.

"It is mutually beneficial for the students and the Credit Union," Sullivan said. "It gets the word out about the Credit Union and it offers more to the students."

Sullivan also said this special is "geared towards seniors" since their last semester holds many extra expenses. Also, with spring break coming up the response may be even greater.

Although the deadline for applying has not been decided, the loan will not be offered for long. Students are advised to act now, according to Sullivan. A student without an account at the Credit Union can open one and apply for the loan on the same day.

The Credit Union is "not making a cent" on this special, Sullivan said. The Credit Union wants to "get the word out" about itself, Sullivan said, and is presently working to expand. If all goes as planned, he said, an Automatic Teller Machine will be installed by September.

Duffey, Chametzky discuss humanities

By JOSH MEYER
Collegian Staff

As part of the Dialogue Series of the Institute For Advanced Study in the Humanities, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and Institute Director Jules Chametzky last night spoke on that most easily defined subject; the meaning of words.

The topic of discussion for the evening was the "Literary Circumstances in the Humanities." The purpose, according to Duffey, was to "experience the world of ideas without reaching conclusions—to revel in the art of discourse," something Duffey said he cherished as a genuine academic diversion for him.

Duffey said his experience as chairman for the National Endowment For The Humanities enabled him to become very practiced in the procedure of defining the humanities.

"While the government used to be a buffer with respect to the public (in terms of keeping federal funding for the humanities), the opposite has occurred. Now the people are the buffers, or those 'who talk out to the higher ups'," Duffey said. "As the chair, I have been incessantly called to speak about the humanities, and why the public should support it—occassionally an extremely frustrating experience."

"The challenge is in learning to keep oneself open to see the world through as many disciplines as possible," Duffey said. While the closed mindedness of science furthers progress, "the narrowness of its scope impedes vision," Duffey said.

Jules Chametzky, director of the Institute for The Advanced Study in the Humanities, followed Duffey's remarks with his "own vision of the humanities." Chametzky, a professor of English at the University of Massachusetts, said that after he gave the topic of the night some thought, "it really isn't that mysterious after all."

"Literature and language are not merely reflections of, or diversions from reality," Chametzky said. "They are themselves a constitutive and expressive element of reality."

According to Chametzky, the problem of our time is to fully understand the relationship between science and the humanities. While the sciences are crucial as a means of progress, literature is also important because "even if there is a world outside the text, we can't do anything about it."

In summing up the message of his speech, Chametzky posited, "Do we dare, and are we (people in the Humanities) equipped to take on the world and its complexities? I say we must—the how and what of it remains an open question."

Amherst youth injured in 3 car accident

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

A three-car accident in Amherst early yesterday morning resulted in the hospitalization of a 17-year old youth, according to Amherst police and an official of Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

Scott Rikkers, son of George Andrews of Montague Road and a passenger in Andrews' vehicle, received lacerations to the face and scalp in the accident which involved two other cars, the boy's father said. Andrews said his son received about 50 stitches. A hospital nursing supervisor last night said Rikkers was in stable condition in the pediatrics unit.

Amherst police said the accident occurred at 8:34 a.m. yesterday at the intersection of Route 116 and Meadow Street. James L. Lipton, 20, of Gay Street, Sharon, Conn., was driving north on Route 116. The Andrews vehicle was proceeding west on Meadow Street. As Andrews pulled into the intersection it was struck by the Lipton car, police said.

The Lipton vehicle then struck a car driven by Brenda Clemmons, 29 of North Street, Whately, which was stopped at a red traffic light, police said. She was heading south on Route 116, police said.

Passengers in the Clemmons vehicle received injuries but were not transported to the hospital. The case is still under investigation, police said.

A University of Massachusetts employee will be reprimanded by the administration, UMass police said yesterday, for altering a car's parking decal.

An Infirmary employee altered the decal, police said, by switching the nine in "Lot 49" to a six as in "Lot 46", a parking lot closer to the Infirmary. The car was towed, police said.

Police also said they will be checking serial numbers on parking decals to make sure it corresponds with the proper parking lot number. Cars with altered decals will be towed immediately, police said. There have been five such alterations in the past week, police said.

Harassment program on cable

A program that addresses the response of the University of Massachusetts administration to sexual harassment is scheduled to be aired at 8 tonight through the Cable Community Access Television Station. The program, entitled Sexual Harassment, the Problem, the Policy and the Procedure, will consist of a panel interview involving Chancellor Joseph Duffey, Thelma Griffith-Johnson, Howard Gadlin and Janet Rifkin. The interviewer will be Bonnie Strickland, chair of the Psychology Department. The program was produced as part of the Sexual Harassment Student Awareness Campaign by Julie Santiago.

Foreign aid forum on WMUA

Tonight at 6, WMUA (91.1 FM) will air highlights of a public forum on United States involvement in Central America which was held Tuesday night at Northampton High School.

The forum sponsored by the Northampton Committee on Central America and the Smith College Program in Public Policy, was one of a series of events staged over the past week to focus public attention on current proposals by the Reagan administration to increase military aid to El Salvador.

Participants in the forum included Melville E. Blake Jr., a State Department spokesman; Gerald Fresia of the Northampton Committee on Central America; Morton Halpren, a deputy assistant secretary of defense under President Johnson; and Beverly Treumann of the Unitarian Church.

MassPIRG wants industry held liable for toxic waste

By MARK HERSEY
Collegian Correspondent

Grass Roots, a project group staffed by University of Massachusetts students, is currently involved in the fight for the passage of a "Superfund" bill in the State House which would make industries responsible for their toxic waste disposal.

Members of Grass Roots, a division of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group, have been on the Campus Center concourse encouraging passersby to write their state representatives to ask they bring the bill to a vote quickly and discuss it with other legislators.

"The creation of a state Superfund to pay for clean-up by the state and provide matching monies to receive federal grants is essential," said Cynthia Jacques, Grass Roots project representative.

The bill would raise money by assessing a fee on the industries that handle hazardous wastes to pay the costs of public clean-up. The pending state Superfund would hold producers and transporters of waste liable for property damage suffered by private persons from hazardous waste dumps.

Federal Superfund monies could provide 90 percent of the funds for clean-up of up to 14 sites in the Commonwealth. But the receipt of this money by Massachusetts is contingent upon the availability of state funds to pay the other 10 percent.

Early in 1983, the State Department of Environmental Quality Engineering expects to run out of matching funds.

"Ironically, the Superfund bill, in its present form, has been approved several times in both houses. The last legislative session closed just as the bill was being formally typed, making the bill void," Jacques said.

"The bill must now be reintroduced and voted on again. Grass Roots is urging representatives to pass the same bill and get it on the referendum as soon as possible, making it impossible for the industries of Massachusetts to weaken the bill."

Legislators will be meeting with Grass Roots project representatives and concerned students in the next week or two. Some interns may travel to Boston to lobby, Jacques said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Students need to add input

Two years ago, 100 students packed the 332nd Faculty Senate meeting to show their support for the University's pass/fail option. The Senate was to vote on three proposed changes to the pass/fail policy, all of which a number of students were opposed to. Before the meeting, it was expected that the Senate would easily approve the changes. Five or six students stood up in the Senate that afternoon and gave short (spontaneous) accounts of personal pass/fail experiences, speaking in favor of keeping the policy as it stood. After substantial debate, the Senate did in fact vote, 33 to 25, to oppose the proposed changes.

Ellen Nylen

The presence of students at that Senate meeting undeniably made the difference. Faculty Senator Harry Schumer said (at the time), there was "no doubt" that the students had an effect on the vote. Then-SGA-co-President Kevin Mangan credited students with influencing some Senators' vote: "The representation was there. I think students swayed some faculty members." Of course there isn't any proof of this. But anyone who was present that afternoon remembers feeling that it was the 100 students who made the difference in the Senate's vote.

This time, it's not the pass/fail option. This time, it's the General Education Proposal, and student support for it is crucial at this time. Faculty and administrators both agree that student opinion is what can push the General Education vote one way or another. We need students to support the issue, by supporting the Proposal, at the final Faculty Senate "General Education" sessions. The issue has been debated in the Senate for the past month, in a format much looser than usual Senate procedure. I would guess that the senate hasn't heard a discussion like this in a while. There is opportunity for "outsiders" to ask questions, or to comment. And Senators have continually shown that they do (for whatever reason) want to know where students stand on the issue.

What you're wondering is why you should take the time to go when you don't even know enough about the General Education Proposal to have an opinion one way or another, right? That's a problem. Believe me, though, if you're at all interested in the issue, it is crucial that you say so by showing up at the Senate meeting. I don't know how else to say it. The Faculty Senate has succeeded in avoiding the "issue" of what is wrong with the current General Education (i.e. "core") system, by picking the Proposal apart and focusing the discussion on budget and departmental concerns. Not that these aren't necessary concerns, but they shouldn't be allowed to restrict the future of the Proposal before it is at least adequately discussed in principle. The student body should be commended for "talking about" the General Education Proposal at the level they do, no matter how infrequent or scattered the discussion may be. When students ask questions about the Proposal, they're still asking about ideas.

On Thursday afternoon, you have the chance to influence a major issue just by saying, "I know this is going to affect students, and for that reason alone. I care enough to show up today." Hearing what the Faculty Senate has to say on the General Education Proposal could prompt you to form an opinion on it. At any rate, the debate in the Faculty Senate needs our presence. If we are there, we are the ones who can pick the discussion up. If we're not there, we can't. Please don't pass up the chance. The Senate meeting is Thursday, March 17th at 3:30 in the SBA auditorium. It will make a difference.

Campaign promises were kept

To the Editor:

Having been mentioned in detail in Scott Hersey's editorial to the newly elected SGA Presidents, I pulled out some of my old campaign literature. In terms of what I promised to deal with, I found the following:

Financial Aid. The SGA published a pamphlet on aid, made presentations to the Regents, and was largely responsible for the aid bill now in the legislature.

State Student Association. There will be a referendum on whether students wish to fund it in a few weeks. All the other organizing has been done.

Police Misconduct. Two weeks ago, I announced that the administration had agreed to a police policy review board; although it received little attention from the Collegian.

Sexual Harassment. We now have a grievance procedure.

Rent Control. Last year we lost by only 16 votes. This year we have 90 people running for town meeting, and 5000 registered students.

SGA Accessibility. A table was set up, once a week on the Campus Center Concourse last semester. In addition, a concerted effort was made to keep the Collegian informed on issues affecting students. A perusal of back Collegians will bear this out.

In short, nearly everything I spoke of while seeking election was successfully dealt with during this year. To intimate otherwise is to misrepresent the truth, and insult the many people who put in their time and hard work. This year we tried to put forward the idea of a student government that worked for something more than the career advancement of its leaders. I feel confident that this has been achieved.

I'm sorry for not having blown my own horn more often, Scott, but I had more important things to do. Of course, had you checked your facts before writing, you might have known that.

Supporting co-op education

To the Editor:

The Reagan administration has recently proposed to Congress that federal matching funds for cooperative education programs, like the one here at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, be rescinded from the 1983-84 budget. If successful, Mr. Reagan will deprive business and government of an excellent resource for locating and training candidates for temporary and/or permanent employment and students the opportunity to gain valuable work experience that will increase their marketability upon graduation and give them greater direction in their studies.

As one who has benefitted from a cooperative education experience, I believe that it would be a mistake to abolish these programs. Cooperative education programs are an important source of paraprofessional and preprofessional manpower for government and industry. They serve as a screen for students and employers to evaluate one another, save money by reducing recruitment and training costs and lend themselves to increased access to minority employees to fulfill equal employment opportunity objectives. Furthermore, informed students make intelligent career choices. Cooperative education produces well-prepared and employable college graduates with insight into rapidly changing technology.

Congress must be made aware that we are disillusioned with the administration's manpower and education policies. Support experiential education. Write your representatives immediately to support the preservation of cooperative education. Congress will be voting on the measure within the next two weeks.

Turning green for spring break

To the Editor:

I, as a hard working student at UMass, strongly object to Tuesday's editorial by Rich Nangle. It is true that I plan to spend this break in Bermuda but it is not because of something that I don't want to face at home and not because I want to go around bar hopping and heaving my guts out! I worked forty hours per week, every week, last summer without a single week off. This semester I am working hard at my classes and feel that I actually do need to get away and enjoy some sun. I am sorry that Mr. Nangle can't afford to do so also, but that scarcely gives him the right to attack those who can the way he did in his editorial. His abusiveness suggested that perhaps he is showing a fitting color for St. Patricks day — a nice deep heavy shade of green! All the comments that he made sounded like an attempt to make others feel guilty or even embarassed for seeking a little fun out of life. The best suggestion I can make to Mr. Nangle is to walk over to the nearest mirror and repeat the message that he gives to others to himself just to see if it sounds any better from the other end of the stick. As for me I will be lazing around in the sun on the beaches of Bermuda and the only thing spewing forth from my mouth might be the slightest chuckle at knowing that somewhere back in good old wintery Massachusetts, Rich Nangle is miserable.

Questionable fund-raising

To the Editor:

Recently I was at a local fast food restaurant. After placing my order with the girl behind the counter, she asked me whether I would also like to order a fruit pie for desert. Pies are great.

The question irks me every time it's asked (and it usually is) because it is a huge corportion trying to milk me, and millions of others, out of a couple extra quarters each. In short, I resent having someone (for something) trying to manipulate me.

Every semester I feel the same sort of resentment when my bill from the Bursar's Office includes a Masspirg fee. The point is that its method of fund raising is a form of manipulation.

Or if there is nothing wrong with this fund raising method, then why is Masspirg the only public interest group that can use it? Maybe we could be billed for donations to the American Heart Association, the Red Cross, the Cancer Society, the Christian Children's Fund, etc...These are all deserving organizations. On the back of our bills we could just check off which organizations we don't want to contribute to, and subtract the appropriate amount from our total.

I don't know how these things are decided, but there must be some group of people somewhere (is it the Student Senate?) that decides that we should all have a default charge for Masspirg. If they feel so strongly about it, maybe they could organize groups of people and go door to door collecting donations instead.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Will legislature kill MassPIRG?

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (Mass PIRG) is currently under legislative attack, a victim of its own political success and prowess. The truly ironic part of this frustratingly illogical action by the State Legislature, is that more than any other group in the past ten years, Mass PIRG has truly had the public's interest in mind. It has worked time and time again against special interests fat cats, and the backroom dealing which has crippled Mass. state politics for years and robbed the taxpayer of millions of tax dollars. Sensing this, our legislature, (which is the best money can buy), has moved in for the kill, all under the guise of acting in an equitable manner towards the poor, poor students, state colleges and universities.

Representative Francis Manning (D-Milton) has introduced a bill which would change the current negative check off system, now used by Mass PIRG to collect most of its budget, to a charitable check-off system. In other words, when the students at all state colleges and universities receive their bills, they can currently "check-off" and decline to give a fee to Mass PIRG. Manning would like to see this changed to a charitable check-off, one in which students would have to indicate on the bill if they wanted to contribute to this organization. On paper, it does sound rather equitable. Manning, out of compassion for student's pocketbooks, wants to see this inequity corrected — wrong. As in any political situation, the answers are neither that simple, nor that cut and dried.

In the first place, Mass PIRG, in the 1981 legislative session, ran up against a bill of the same type and hammered out a compromise which all sides agreed upon. Basically, the Legislature and then — Governor King passed and signed a bill which allowed state universities and colleges to keep the current negative checkoff system proved that a majority of the student body favored such a policy in SGA sanctioned elections. Last year in an SGA sponsored election on campus, students voted overwhelmingly, 89 percent in favor, to keep the present system. Obviously, the students, at least here at UMass. are in favor of Mass PIRG.

Is it possible Representative Manning may have something personally against Mass PIRG? In 1981, Manning was one of the opponents of the Bottle Bill. Realizing this Bottle Bill organizers (including Mass PIRG), gathered pro-bottle bill constituents of Manning together and paid a visit to the Representative. Perhaps the fact that 150-200 people visited the legislator at once has something to do with the filing of this anti-PIRG legislation. It is something to think about.

Is it possible Speaker McGee and ex-Governor King may resent the political power Mass PIRG showed in its stunning Bottle Bill victory in both the State House and statewide elections? It is no secret both men vehemently opposed the Bottle Bill. It is something to think about.

For over ten years, Mass PIRG, using mostly student resources and student personnel have made a significant contribution to the quality of life here in the Bay State. A charitable check-off system would severly cripple its funding base. The major bottlers maybe mad because of the success of the Bottle Bill and PIRG's large part in passing it. No matter-the public good has been served. The chemical industry may resent PIRG's part in helping to pass the Toxic Waste Superfund bill. Those of the public who are threatened by this environmental time-bomb appreciate PIRG's efforts. Mass PIRG will be necessary until the high rollers who arrogantly dominate Massachusetts politics are literally flushed out of the system. Until that time, students and other concerned citizens alike must let their legislators know that the Manning bill is wrong, that to kill PIRG, would be like cutting off the arm to save the hand. It just doesn't make sense.

Reforming our prison systems

Before the late eighteenth century, punishment tended to be of the "eye for an eye, tooth for a tooth" variety practiced since ancient civilizations first made provisions for crime. The hands of the common thief were severed, the rapist castrated. Today our prison situation at both the state and federal levels is not so far from this ancient system of justice as we would like to believe. Incarceration has become a means of repaying injustice with more injustice. In just a few hundred years we've managed to come full circle and have succeeded in developing a modern day version of the "eye for an eye" justice of the ancients. In its failure to recognize the importance of rehabilitation rather than punishment, the crime of negligent incarceration has extended far beyond the walls of our prison facilities and has become a fast growing threat to our public safety. Currently, our nations prisons house some 568,000 prisoners at an annual cost of around $15,000 per inmate per year. In short we're spending a bundle on a system that, quite simply, is failing to achieve any measure of success and it's about time we became aware of the inequities that exist within the American prison system.

Clearly, a substantial amount of money is already spent to operate American prisons, but it simply isn't enough. American prisons are pathetically substandard in virtually every aspect of incarceration. Prisoners are frequently denied the basic requirements of human existence. Healthy diets, sanitary surroundings and adequate health care exist only in the self-perpetuating delusions of our legislators and in the hopeful anticipations of America's incarcerated populus. Furthermore, it has become increasingly apparent in the past decade that the salaries and benefits offered to correctional officers are at such low levels that hoping to attract qualified personnel is at best a pipe dream. Instead, our prisons are staffed by largely uneducated, underqualified sentinels who are willing to work for below average wages only because their limited skills force them into menial security work.

The results of these deficiencies should be painfully obvious. Discontentment among prisoners can hardly be deemed unreasonable given the circumstances which surround them. The inequities of our penal system push the prisoner to the point where he has no faith in the "justice" that condemned him. Without faith in that justice any hopes of rehabilitation are futile. A prison system should be designed not merely to store prisoners but rather to rehabilitate them and facilitate their return to society as productive community members. Sadly however, a combination of administrative and public apathy, misguidance, and sheer ignorance precludes the rehabilitation of the criminal mind within our nations penal institutions. Instead of precincts of rehabilitation, our prisons have become storehouses of human dynamite eagerly anticipating an opportunity to explode into the raging fires of internal rebellion.

The most recent uprising, in New Mexico during February of 1980 left 33 guards, inmates, and police officers dead. In California alone 100 persons have been killed in prison related incidents since 1970. What all the statistics boil down to is the fact that our "correctional" institutions have nothing to do with correction at all. Clearly, the most fertile ground for the cultivation of crime is the prison system itself. What we fail to recognize is the danger that our inadequate facilities put our society in every day. It is an indisputable fact that the overwhelming majority of today's prisoners will eventually be released to return to the mainstream of society. Add to this fact the disturbing statistic that 75 percent of all ex-convicts will commit another crime and the problem crystalizes in the mind of even the most uneconcerned individual.

Clearly, more effective rehabilitation must be the primary goal of our prison system. But before we can hope to rehabilitate prisoners, we must strive to rehabilitate our prison facilities. New and better facilities, thoroughly trained personnel with reasonable salaries, and mainstreaming programs are all primary goals in the pursuit of the much larger and more significant goal of rehabilitation. It is natural to expect that many Americans would be skeptical about the capacity of the criminal mind for reform. However, we should recall that we once doubted the feasibility of rehabilitation for the mentally ill.

Punishment is no longer as easy as it was for the ancient cultures of the world. Today we must curtail our deep human desire for revenge and retaliation and devote our efforts to the rehabilitation of criminals. We must recognize that in striving to gain its "eye for an eye and tooth for a tooth" our current penal system is doing nothing more than leaving behind vast numbers of blind, toothless, and potentially dangerous criminals.

Ticket policy — give it the boot

The problem of parking at UMass is a severe one; over 46,000 tickets were issued last year alone, yet more and more students are trying to park their cars in the already immensely overcrowded university parking lots.

The recent changes in Parking Enforcement policy will not help to alleviate the problem; it will just make it more expensive. If students don't comply with the law, they will not be able to renew their license and registration until they pay their fines. And as another last-minute surprise, it has just been determined that violators of the law will receive the initial $5 late surcharge even though they weren't aware of the change in policy. After 21 days, an additional surcharge of $10 will be added to the previous one.

While the administration is trying to curb the parking violations by making them more expensive, the problem is that there are just not enough parking spaces. As evidence, the number of tickets has been steadily increasing over the past few years; 31,000 in 1980, 37,000 in 1981, and 46,000 last year. At the same time that the number of tickets have gone up, so have applications for parking stickers.

"There's just too many people for what we have to offer (in terms of parking spaces)," according to Patricia Echols of the University Parking Office. "Last year, by August we issued more than 10,000 stickers. This year, we passed that mark before spring semester...I wouldn't even begin to estimate what will happen by the end of this year." Echols added that in years past, Spring has been the time many people put their cars on the road and bring them up to school.

While some peripheral parking lots (P Lot and the others out "in the boonies") are open, waiting lists for long- and short-term parking stickers anywhere near campus are up to two years long.

The problem does not lie in the attitude of the students, as the proponents of the new policy would suggest. The problem lies in the fact that there are not enough parking spaces, and inadequate bus service, for those who live, work, and study on campus. "Considering the community we're serving, cars weren't really considered when the Master Plan (of the school) was drawn up," according to Jerry O'Neil, Director of Parking Enforcement at the Department of Public Safety. "In that aspect, the community is not adequately served."

The new policy will allow University parking officials to work in conjunction with the Massachusetts Registry of Motor Vehicles. Thus, if someone has more than four tickets, they will be towed, and forced to pay $29 in cash to Amherst Towing just to get their car back, only after paying the tickets. The changes also "involve the Registry of Motor Vehicles in a system designed to block renewal of license and driver registration when parking tickets remain unpaid after the normal collection process." In other words, students cannot renew their license or registration until they pay their fines.

Parking Enforcement officials agree that the problem lies not in enforcement of existing policies but in the policies themselves. "We just maintain enforcement," said Larry Holmes, assistant director of parking enforcement. "We have no direct input into the planning of the system. While buses supposedly reduce the number of cars (and tickets), I don't think they have."

Apparently, the person responsible for coordinating the bus routes and parking policies in order to provide comprehensive service is William Barrett, Director of Transportation and Parking, who said that he "fails to see how the two connect." So it seems that while University officials recognize the problem of inadequate parking and mass transit facilities, no one claims responsibility for rectifying the situation.

The new policy will certainly increase revenues for the Parking Enforcement Office, who in turn "donate" the money to the General Scholarship Fund. When asked why the additional money can't be used to repair or enlarge additional parking facilities or pay for extra bus lines, Barret said that "Putting the tax revenue back into the system has been a tough question that has been asked several times before." Apparently it will be asked again and again without ever being answered. This one constructive way of dealing with the problem makes too much sense to be a viable alternative. But that's UMass.

The new change in policy will not decrease the number of tickets written. It will just make it harder on the students, who are not to blame in the first place. The need for more parking, or better bus service is embarrassingly obvious. The need for giving parking enforcement officials "more teeth to work with," as one oficial put it, is ludicrous. The problem must be solved at the source, not at the symptoms.

St. Patty's Day for Irish or those who just pretend

By TOM BURGOMASTER
Collegian Correspondent

St. Patrick's Day has long been the day when everyone becomes a "little bit Irish." It is a day for wearing green, being proud that you are Irish (or pretending that you are Irish), and for celebrating.

"The reason that everybody is a little bit Irish on St. Patrick's Day is because it has become a celebration of ethnicity," said Maria Tymoczko, a specialist in Irish literature and folklore at the University of Massachusetts.

"We enjoy remembering the ethnic dimension of life," she said.

Although the wearing of green is important to the holiday today, it hasn't always been that way. In earlier Irish history, green had a much different meaning.

"Green was considered an unlucky color, a color associated with fairies," Tymoczko said. "It might be an invitation to the fairies to take you away to the fairie mounds. That's why the emblems of St. Patrick's Day were only a little green rosette or a tiny piece of green ribbon."

Unlike the wearing of the color green, celebrating has always been an integral part of the holiday.

"St. Patrick's Day is celebrated at one of the major turning points of the solar year," Tymoczko said. It meant the return of longer lighted days and more warmth, Tymoczko said, and since Ireland was mainly agricultural, this was important. It also falls during Lent, and the Irish would make an exception to their fasting for St. Patrick's Day.

"It was one of the few days when people could eat meat and have a little something special to eat and drink," Tymoczko said.

Some of the old customs for celebrating St. Patrick's Day have been lost, but celebrating will be very much alive at UMass today. A sampling of bars and restaurants on and off campus produced evidence to that.

The Blue Wall is having an all-day, all-night happy hour. It is planning to have Irish music from 3 p.m. until 1 a.m., featuring the Widdershins, Paul Wayne, and the Armstrong Brothers. The Blue Wall will also be serving special St. Patrick's Day drinks.

The Hatch will have happy hour from 3:30 p.m. until 7 p.m. Their music will be provided by Sheila and Shaun Casey and they will be serving 50 cent beers.

The Top of the Campus will have drink specials including all Jameson drinks for $1, Heineken and Molson at happy hour prices (because of the green bottles of course), and "Frozen Shamrocks".

That fine eatery frequented by many UMass students, the Dining Commons, won't be doing much to celebrate — just green decorations and some green cake for desert. Corned beef sandwiches will be served for lunch, but the traditional corned beef and cabbage will not be served at dinner.

Off campus, The Pub in Amherst will have happy hour from 2-6 with specials on Irish beer. The first 100 people get a free bottle of O'Keefe Ale. They will have green beer and a Corned Beef and cabbage dinner will be served until 9:00.

Delano's will extend their happy hour from 3 until 6 and 10 till 12. They will have specials on Irish beer and Jameson Irish Whiskey. Green beer and happy hour hors d'oeuvres will be featured.

Plumbley's will serve corned beef and cabbage for lunch and dinner, and Irish music by Hungry Hill will begin downstairs at 9.

Time Out will have green beer and special St. Patrick's Day drinks and music.

Carbur's and the Rib It Room will be serving free Irish coffee with dinner. They will also have Bass Ale and Guinness Stout for $1.

You don't have to be Irish to celebrate St. Patrick's Day, you just have to know how to celebrate!

Forget the Irish whiskey... It's Evacuation Day today

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

Few people will stop between sips of Irish Coffee, shots of Irish whiskey and mugs of green beer to realize today is also Evacuation Day.

This day, a legal holiday in Suffolk County since 1938, does not involve nuclear war tactics, as one out-of-state student believed, but rather celebrates the 207th anniversary of British troops leaving Boston for the last time.

Public schools and offices in the state's capital will be closed as a result, while other state offices, such as those at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, will be operating on a skeleton crew basis.

University class schedules will not be affected.

While "it is more than just coincidence" that this patriotic victory shares its anniversary with that of St. Patrick, past speculation has not led to a direct correlation between the two holidays, said Art Clifford of the UMass News Bureau.

The downfall of British troops leading to their evacuation began nine months earlier, when the Redcoats failed to follow through their June 17, 1775 victory at Bunker Hill with an attack on nearby Dorchester Heights. Two weeks after Bunker Hill, George Washington's forces led the Siege of Boston, where arms were collected for the future confrontation in Dorchester.

The evening of March 4, 1776 saw 2,000 men invade the sleeping Heights, construct barriers of felled trees, rock-filled barrels and a timber wall and lay in wait of dawn. It was apparent to the British upon seeing the patriots forces, which included a British cannon acquired at Fort Ticonderoga, that an affront was necessary to protect their vessels moored in Boston Harbor.

The 2,400 Redcoats sent by sea to surprise the American troops encountered a wet New England storm, however, during which time a council called for a British evacuation. The British commander consented, if only for the preservation of his fleet.

Jessica Lange plays Frances Farmer in Frances.

Frances redeemed by Lange

FRANCES
Calvin Theater, Northampton

By JOHN HUDSON
Collegian Staff

Frances is the type of movie one goes to see and truly wants to like; a movie that tries terribly hard to be serious and consistent, but ends up being uneven and cinematically frustrating.

The movie, directed by Graeme Clifford, chronicles the life of Frances Farmer, a potentially brilliant, yet doomed actress who took Hollywood and Broadway by storm in the 1930's and forties. Doomed because Farmer refused to bend to the will of the star-system of Hollywood, her strong-willed mother or the barbaric California Mental Health system. Yet, in the end her own self-destructive impulses and a crudely performed lobotomy (harrowingly portrayed in the film) snuffed out any spark of creative energy Farmer had left after fighting the "powers that be". Ironically, like the actress it so nobley tried to portray, Frances is an enigma, a confused film, strong in some parts, but very weak in others.

Jessica Lange, in the most brilliant performance of her career (which includes such bombs as King Kong and How to Beat the High Cost of Living) portrays Miss Farmer with an intensity that literally supports the entire film. Lange is the torn actress, raging at a society which she doesn't understand, and rebelling against a mother who brutally pushes Farmer towards the brink of insanity. And just when you think the script is about to give way, Ms. Lange rescues it, takes what little may be there, and turns in a tremendous performance. If Ms. Lange does not win an Oscar for this exceptional performance, the Academy should be cited for sheer stupidity.

The photography in the movie is also exceptional. Laszlo Kovacs lovingly places his characters in convincing, realistic settings, whether it be Seattle in 1932 or a honkytonk bar circa 1945. The asylum scenes, probably the most effective, gut-wrenching portrayal of mental health facilities since One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest, lower the viewer into the hell-holes which characterized past treatment of the mentally ill.

The script and pacing of this film are where Frances goes wrong. One of the most nebulous characters in the film, Harry York, a private detective, shows up to help Frances out of tight spots at the most opportune times. Yet we learn very little about this dubious knight-in-shining-armor. What are his motivations? How does he know just when to come to Frances' aid? The character plays an extremely important part in Ms. Farmer's life, yet the scriptwriters have decided not to explain the man to an obviously perplexed audience. Too often, Frances leaves us wondering "why" and searching for answers about the plot that obviously needed to be given.

Even though Frances is a seriously flawed movie, it should be viewed just for the tremendous performance of Jessica Lange as the tragically doomed Frances Farmer. It is a tour-de-force not to be missed.

Live Wire

One of the best things about this year's St. Patrick's Day is that UMass has been nice enough to give us a week off to recover from it. I don't know about any of you, but I could sure use the break.

For those of you who plan to "party hearty" there are more concerts and shows available on this one night than almost any other entire weekend of the year. First, Goddaddy of 'em all, James Brown will be doing the total "thang" experience all over the Rusty Nail. Sure the man is old and fat, but he can still knock those grooves out. Meanwhile, back at UMass, a variation on the same theme. Those other boys from New Jersey, Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes, will be putting on the boogie at the Student Union Ballroom. Southside's band is red hot and in top form; and besides, his trombone player is the wildest. On the other side of campus, at Bezanson Recital Hall, there will be a performance by bassist Salvatore Macchia, and pianist-composer Robert Stern. Included in the program are several world premieres. It promises to be exciting and could prove an excellent alternative for those who prefer a toned Paddy's Day celebration.

As if those concerts weren't enough, the bar scene is going to really be rockin' it up. Roger Salloom will be at Sheehan's Cafe, the Bush Tetras will perform at the Hangar One, and the Peasure Dots will rock the Wok.

If anyone has recovered enough tomorrow to go out, you can see the Stompers at the Rusty Nail or attend the final performance of Pryvate Tunings. They've decided to go the way of so many bands, into the land of memories. It's sad to see any band with potential break up and if you've never seen them before, this is your last chance.

Saturday is going to be relatively slow, since most everyone will be headed home by then. If you're still around Saturday night, Loose Caboose will be at the Wok and R Complex will play down at the Hangar. By the way, tickets for the Ramones, rescheduled for March 31, are still available.

So enjoy yourselves tonight, but be careful if you're driving. We'll see you again in two weeks and have a good vacation.

In defense of romance

By DEAN RANZO
Collegian Staff

There you go again Doug. It seems that whenever you have something critical to say about the excesses of new music, you inevitably pick on the sounds of such innovative acts as Flock Of Seagulls, Visage, and Orchestral Maneuvers in the Dark. The evolution of rock has been passed into the hands of these and other techno-pop or New Romantic bands, and it's exciting to be a part of this obscure assult on traditional rock. Granted, November Group is an impressive band who put on a great show Saturday night, but to martyr the aforementioned bands for the benefit of November Group is nothing more than a blind assessment.

How can you consider Flock Of Seagulls to be bubble-gum? For that matter, how can you dislike this young, gifted band who, despite the atrocities of the anti-new music Emmy awards, managed a best instrumental nomination. It's bands like Flock of Seagulls that restore my faith in new music. They're danceable, original, tight, classy, and crisp as electricity itself. Their pace is energetic but diverse, and the kicker is Doug, they're fine musicians who can transform their intense studio sound into an even more intense, soul-gripping stage show. And I think you're missing the significance of this band, Doug. Flock Of Seagulls, along with Duran Duran and Human League are breaking the ice for many of the stubborn hard-core rockers who refuse to listen to modern dance bands. Commercial airplay is what new music needs and these bands are getting it.

Now Doug, I do remember New Romance. Though many of the New Romantic bands will either fade away or readjust to current fads, there's one band who'll brave the fading winds. Visage is New Romanticism in quintessence. The synthesized, mostly danceable music complimented by the dreamy, velvet voice of Steve Strange create images of mystical adventure and fanciful romance, the true constituents of New Romance.

True, Spandau Ballet is a poor excuse for dance music whose style regresses into boring disco patterns; but so long as Steve Strange's voice continues to bray silk and Ultravox members Midge Ure and Billy Currie continue to add their lavish, productive ingenuity, Bisage will continue to break down any barriers to the imagination or emotions within us.

As for OMD, Doug, they're in a class all by themselves. Their one top-forty tune "Electricity", is a predictable dance piece reminiscent of Human League, with an overtly cute synthesizer melody dominating it. Here is an example of a border line son that will attract pop listeners, but this song is not characteristic of OMD's music. OMD creates some of the deepest music I've heard. Listening to OMD is like listening to a man climb Mt. Everest; his emotions and tribulations portrayed through the dire, boyish vocals of Paul Humphreys and Andy McCluckey, along with the continuous drift of synthesizer melodies and obscure gimmickry. OMD is both glorious and relaxed and always interesting.

Soft Cell and Spandau Ballet are "hurting bands" that do "give us fashion-conscious pop that's mostly fizz," and Human League, spared only by its fantastic Love Action/Hard Times EP, generally fares below average. However, Flock Of Seagulls, Visage, and Orchestral Maneuvers in the Dark are bands who use electronics intelligently, not to exploit them. And so long as they and many other techno-pop and/or synthesizer bands continue to do so, the future of new music remains in good hands.

Spandau Ballet: New Romantic swill?

NEED HELP WITH YOUR STUDENT LOAN?

If you've attended college on a Guaranteed Student Loan or a National Direct Student Loan made after October 1, 1975, consider spending a couple of years in the Army.

If you train for certain specialties, the government will release you from 1/3 of your indebtedness (or $1,500, whichever is greater) for each year of active duty.

Obviously, a three-year enlistment cancels 100% of your debt. But if you sign up for the Army's exclusive two-year enlistment option, we'll still cancel 2/3 of your debt.

Plus, you may be eligible for generous educational incentives.

Miller SPORTS AWARD

PLAYER OF THE WEEK
Steve Hyder, Indoor Track

This month's Miller High Life Player of the Month award goes to UMass track sensation Steve Hyder.

Hyder, a four year member of the track team, capped off an excellent indoor track career by setting a new standard for the shot put, then resetting that standard and then, not to slack off, resetting that record.

Hyder, a hotel, restuarant and travel major, will be leaving UMass in the spring but his name will remian, in the record books.

It's Miller Time Steve!

Hyder's throws:

- 52'7" versus URI and UNH, January 29
- 53'2" in the Eastern Championships, Feb.12
- 53'6½" in the New England Championships, Feb. 26

Congratulations, Steve Hyder!

Horsefeathers wins intramural championship

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

The backcourt tandem of Mike and Billy Shea combined for 36 points to lead Horsefeathers to a 53-34 victory over Black Magic last night to clinch the men's intramural basketball league championship.

Horsefeathers, still riding high after their upset victory over GQ-IV, went through the season undefeated to claim their first crown.

Black Magic, coming off their semifinal victory over the Honeymooners, needed to get inside to do its damage.

The first half started out as a fairly even match. Black Magic utilized the inside scoring of Frank Oglesby, who responded with six points. But the continued outside shooting tear by Mike Shea kept the Horsefeathers even.

Early foul trouble for Black Magic (nine minutes into the game) gave Horsefeathers some early breaks with free throws. Horsefeathers then settled in to a 2-3 zone to stifle the Black Magic attack. When Billy Shea hit from the outside, Black Magic suddenly found themselves down by nine.

The game then got a little more aggressive, with a lot of pushing underneath between Scott LaFond and Dave Perez, and a tough full court press from Black Magic. But, when Black Magic went back into a man-to-man defense, they fouled again. Horsefeathers took advantage of the freethrows, hitting 13 of 14 from the line.

The second half didn't start out too well for Black Magic, as their top rebounder, Perez, quickly picked up his fourth foul. It was the Mike Shea show after that, as he hit for 7 straight points, including a twisting three-point play, to give Horsefeathers a 14 point lead.

Black Magic then made a run of its own, hitting three in a row from the field to cut the margin to 8. Then, a little extracurricular activity occurred.

A slight shoving match between Billy Shea and Jason Buffin ensued at half court, with Buffin getting the technical and ejection. After order was restored, Mike Shea hit the free throws giving Horsefeathers a 13 point lead.

An even bigger blow occurred for Black Magic as their number one player, Frank Oglesby, fouled out with four minutes left. Black Magic was forced to foul, and, as they did in the regular season, Horsefeathers hit from the line, stretching their lead to 17 points. The last few minutes was a lot of the same stuff, with Black Magic putting up desperate shots, sometimes making them, sometimes leading to easy Horsefeather fast breaks.

"We just kept the pressure on them," said Mike Shea. "We really got ready tonight." Shea finished with a game high 20 points, including a perfect 10 for 10 from the line. His cousin, Billy, ended up with 16, as he hit eight out of 10 from the charity stripe. Oglesby was high for Black Magic with 16.

The women's league also concluded its season, and it was Back in Black ending up victorious, 37-28, over Crampton Women. Once again, Chris Taggart was high for the winners with 18, as Back in Black overcame a five point halftime deficit to come away with the victory. Sharee McClain was high for Crampton with 12 points.

Knapp: a dedicated gymnast

By DAVID WOOD
Collegian Correspondent

The Eastern Regional Championships are the crown jewel of New England collegiate women's gymnastics. Every school and individual thrives to do well at these championships and senior gymnast Karen Knapp believes UMass will do just that.

"I am very excited about the Easterns," she said. "I feel the team will do very well." Knapp also hopes to close out her career with a strong individual performance at the regionals.

Knapp has an outside chance at making it to the NCAA championships with a strong performance at the Easterns. If the team fails to qualify, she could qualify as an all-around, but she feels she would have to improve and be close to perfect in all her events.

"Right now Easterns are the most important. The Nationals would be fantastic but, realistically, my chances are not that good. Robin (teammate Robin Low) could make it, but at this time I'm only scoring about thirty-five in the all-around and you need at least a thirty-six to make it," she observed.

Coach Ken Anderson also believes Knapp will do well in the Easterns and has plenty of praise for the hard-working senior.

"Karen is one of the hardest and most persistent workers I have ever seen. She is a pleasure to work with." The coach also feels that this determination pays off for her.

"She does everything she is supposed to do in her workouts and puts out 100 percent. It shows when she is in a meet. So far she hasn't "hit" all her routines in one meet but I think she will and it will happen soon."

What will Knapp do now that her career is ending? She seems to have her future planned well.

"This summer I hope to get an internship at a gymnastics school and from there get a job working in a gymnastics school," she said.

Knapp is a Sport Management major and believes that her experience competing for three years should help her attain her goals.

"The business approach to sports that Sport Management takes will be a strong asset. I'll know more how to run the business side of the school and from competing I know how to teach. After establishing myself I would like to somewhere down the road open my own gymnastics school," said Knapp.

Karen Knapp has high goals set for herself both at UMass and in her future. She is the type of person that will reach her goals and hopefully she will start achieving them at the Eastern Regionals in West Virginia.

Yukon Jack skates to title

By SCOT COOPER
Collegian Staff

Two intramural hockey powers, Yukon Jack and What the Puck, squared off Monday night in the best two out of three championship series. Yukon Jack swept last semester's defending champs What the Puck in two exciting overtime wins.

In the opening game of the finals, What the Puck seemed to be dwelling on the fact that they lost to Yukon 3-2 in the regular season. They quickly fell behind 1-0 when John Kuppen smacked a knuckleball through the legs of Puck goalie Rhiney Neville.

Yukon's lead evaporated before it had a chance to register on the scoreboard when John McDermott, Hal O'Halloran and Joe Gorrasi pushed shots by Montana for a 3 to 1 Puck lead.

The game had only one penalty called, an early tripping call on McDermott. The referees seemed content to let the boys play.

Frankie Adorn's tip-in off a Brian Beaudreault slapper from the point cut the Puck lead to one, and Joe Cronin's third period tally sent the game into overtime.

The fans went silent, the workers at the rink stopped pushing their mops and the players all looked at each other, wondering who would take control in the extra session.

It only took Yukon's Tom Barclay fifty seconds to send What the Puck to the locker room down one game to none. Barclay swung behind the Puck goal and his flip out in front of the net caromed off of goalie Neville's pad and came to rest in the back of the net, giving Yukon Jack a 4-3 overtime win in the first game.

Game two was unlike game one because it was a physical game, with the sticks used for leverage throughout. Yukon's Joe Bellini, after ringing the goalpost early in the first period, seemed intent on making his team win shorthanded, as he was called for holding, playing with a broken stick, and throwing his stick.

Mike Cronin's first goal did come in a shorthanded situation and evened the score at one following another tally by McDermott. Cronin again found the range from the top of the crease.

What the Puck got a bit steamed after the goal and slammed into high gear to get the equalizer with under five minutes to play. Overtime was the order of the night after Chris Carr whacked a rebound of a Eugene Limoni shot past Montana. Yukon had one chance to put it away before regulation time expired, but a Paul Marmai drive from seventy feet was wide.

Barclay had the answer in overtime once again, when he slipped over the blue line with two minutes into the period and snapped a bullet of a wrist shot by the outstretched leg of Neville.

The goal gave Yukon Jack a two game sweep and sent What the Puck home thinking about a rematch next November.

UMass profs face a break without pay

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

Eleven University of Massachusetts professors face one-week suspensions unless they resolve to pay dues to a faculty union today.

UMass President David C. Knapp sent notification to the professors this week that unless they pay the $235 agency fee, file litigation or file a grievance they will be suspended for one week starting Monday.

The professors in question have refused to join the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) because they believe there is no reason for the union to exist, said Michael Kreisler, a professor of physics and astronomy.

"I personally am one who believes that a major university should not have a union," he said. "By its very nature it reduces the quality of the institution."

Kriesler said by joining the union professors may be lending their support to a particular political stance with which they do not agree.

"None of the major prestigious high quality universities in the U.S. have organized. A union here can do nothing to help us in our striving to become a great university and can, in fact, hurt our drive," Kreisler said.

According to The Morning Union of Springfield, Knapp stated in his letter to the professors, "Although I am reluctant to accede to the union's demands, your failure to act on your behalf has forced me into one of the most distasteful positions of my entire career..."

The suspensions will coincide with spring break week at UMass and end when classes resume March 28.

Kreisler said the suspension without pay would effectively rescind pay from the professors for work they have already done. He said, in his opinion, the University has no right to take this action. The professors are paid on a weekly salary.

Kreisler said the group, which he referred to as the "Amherst 11" is not as upset about the money as it is about the principle of being forced to join the union.

"We're not really a group. We're just 11 people who are being persecuted," he said.

Professors also oppose the union because it has not opened its financial records to the public and unionizing eliminates the importance of tenure, Kreisler said.

The fee, which is for the 1981-82 academic year, could probably be reduced to approximately $50 if the union was held to financial accountability, he said.

Individual letters of notification were delivered by limousine to each of the 11 professors' homes earlier this week, Kreisler said.

Fall semester to commence week later

By RITA MURPHY

Responding to the concerns of the Jewish community, the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate yesterday approved a motion which will delay the start of classes by one week in the coming fall 1983 semester.

The motion means the start of classes will be delayed from September 5 to September 12 next semester.

Concern was raised by the Jewish community because the scheduled beginning of school coincided with Rosh Hashanah, one of the most important Jewish holy days.

The motion was criticized by some senators who feared it infringed upon the notion of separation of church and state and would disrupt non-Jewish students more than it would inconvenience Jewish students if no change occurred.

"We're messing with people's lives academically," said Rene Bernasconi, history professor.

"This motion is a hardship. It isn't anything that deals with religion, Lord knows," he said.

Masha Rudman, education professor, defended the motion by saying the issue was a matter of equal access because of one's religious affiliation," she said.

Thelma Griffith-Johnson, director of Affirmative Action urged senators to approve the motion because failure to do so would create a "constitutionally unlawful act of discrimination."

"The law requires that the religious needs of employees be met by employers," she said.

Griffith-Johnson said 13.1 percent of the student body list themselves as Jewish and failure to "reasonably accomodate" them would be an "overt breach of civil rights laws."

Leaving the calendar as it presently is would create "undue hardship" on Jewish students and faculty, she said.

But, some senators expressed doubt on which segment of the student population would suffer the most hardship.

"The question here is one of academic hardship," said Mary Wickwire, history professor.

"How many Jewish students really practice Rosh Hashanah?" she asked.

Some senators suggested moving up the start of classes by one week, rather than delaying them by one week.

"I think we should seriously consider permanently lessening the semester to 13 weeks, other colleges do it," said Jesse Ortiz, public health professor.

UMass students working way through school, study shows

By ERIC LEHAN
Collegian Correspondent

In 1979, when current senior University of Massachusetts students were freshmen, a student working for minimum wage 20 hours per week, every week of the year, could pay for nearly 90 percent of his or her eductation.

But this year, a student working the same amount of hours at minimum wage can make only about 60 percent of the cost of education.

In order to meet the cost of education, many students must work during the semester. A 1982 survey by the Umass Chancellor's office found that 49.9 percent of all students work during the semester and of those who work, the average number of hours worked is 12 per week.

The cost of a UMass education, as calculated by the Financial Aid Office, includes tuition and fees, room and board and miscellaneous expenses — basically, the minimum cost of living and attending the University.

The number of students determined to have financial need by the Financial Aid Office increased by 117 percent since 1979. "Financial need," as determined by Financial Aid's needs test, is the difference between a student's cost of education and the students resources.

While no major changes are expected for the 1983-84 academic year Reagan's proposals for the 1984-85 academic year could have serious effects. Since 1980, the stated goals of the Reagan administration have been to reduce the number of gift grants, such as the PELL grant and the Supplementary Educational Opportunity Grant (SEOG) and to channel more money to work and loan programs.

In the 1984-85 academic year, Reagan proposes to eliminate the SEOG and increase the PELL grant.

Assistant Director of Financial Aid Gerald F. Scanlon said last Wednesday that the increase in PELL grant "will in no way" make up for the elimination of the SEOG program.

In addition to decreasing the amount of gift grants, Reagan's proposals for 1984-85 include a change in the formula for awarding gift grants which Scanlon says will effectively reduce the number of students eligible for the grants.

To compensate for the decrease in gift grants, Reagan's 1984-85 proposals include a 60 percent nationwide increase in federal College Work Study Grants. Some increase in work-study funds is desireable but Scanlon is concerned that such a large increase in the student work load could be harmful to academics.

Arthur Jackson, director of Financial Aid at UMass said Thursday that a 60 percent increase in employment could not be absorbed by the University.

"This would raise the expected hours of employment from 12 to 20 hours per week," said Jackson." This is an unworkable solution".

Work-study was first conceived as a means of providing employment for a student within the student's field of study, but this is no longer the case, Jackson said. Work-study is now used to provide student income, but with little concern for the educational value of the job, he said.

Senate approves $5.1B job bill

WASHINGTON — The Senate approved 82-16 today a $5.1 billion anti-recession jobs package after backers of a move to repeal the withholding tax on interest and dividends abandoned their week-long effort to attach it to the jobs bill.

A House-Senate conference committee will have to reconcile differences between the Senate bill and a $4.9 billion version previously approved by the House.

As part of the compromise that broke the legislative log-jam, Senate leaders promised a vote on the withholding amendment as part of a separate piece of legislation that the Senate will debate April 15.

The Senate temporarily put aside its work on a Social Security financial bailout bill to pass the jobs measure.

However, there remained a possible new snag — a suggestion by Sens. Russell Long, D-La., and Jesse Helms, R-N.C., that they or others might offer the withholding repealer as an amendment to the Social Security bill.

The jobs bill compromise was backed by Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., and Sen. Bob Kasten, D-Wis., the main sponsor of the withholding tax proposal, and was unanimously approved by the Senate.

The final vote on the jobs bill was delayed temporarily this afternoon while senators returned from a St. Patrick's Day party at the Irish Embassy.

Soviets react to missile plan

MOSCOW — A senior Soviet official said yesterday that the Kremlin would have to deploy missiles "near American borders" to gain equality if NATO goes ahead with plans to place medium-range nuclear rockets in Western Europe.

Today's edition of the newspaper Pravda added that "a timely and effective answer will be given to the growth of the threat to the security of the U.S.S.R. and its allies, which the new American missiles in Western Europe would constitute."

In yesterday's edition of the Communist Party paper, Georgi Arbatov, director of the U.S.A. and Canada Institute of the Soviet Academy of Science, wrote:

"As far as equality is concerned, in that case for the sake of this equality we would have not only to add to our missiles in Europe, but also deploy them near American borders," Arbatov, considered a Kremlin spokesman, did not specify where.

It was believed to be the first time any Soviet official had so directly outlined what the Soviets might do if NATO goes ahead with plans to deploy 572 American-made missiles in Europe late this year.

Marshal Nikolai V. Ogarkov, chief of the Soviet general staff and a first deputy defense minister, told The New York Times in an interview yesterday that Americans should know that U.S. missiles fired from Europe at the Soviets would result in a direct retaliatory strike not only on Europe but on the United States as well.

Weinberger supports Marine claim

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger yesterday stood behind his Marine Corps commandant's blunt allegations of "orchestrated" provocations against U.S. troops in Lebanon by Israeli forces, and said the protest has been put directly to Prime Minister Menachem Begin's government.

But, "I have every hope" that such incidents will stop, the Pentagon chief said. At least two episodes purportedly involved shooting — but no casualties — according to defense sources who asked not to be identified.

Weinberger, talking with reporters at nearby Andrews Air Force Base after returning from a commanders' conference in Florida, defended he would let the angry letter written by Marine Gen. Robert Barrow "speak for itself."

In other words, Weinberger stood behind Barrow's charges.

The officer claimed that the Israelis have been responsible for "serious harassing incidents" against U.S. military officers attached to the United Nations Truce Supervisory Organization, as well as "timed, orchestrated" provocations against Marines serving with the separate multinational peacekeeping force.

He made no mention of shooting incidents, but classified documents purportedly speak of at least two. Knight-Ridder Newspapers reported that in one, an Israeli tank opened fire with a .50-caliber machine gun on the road in front of a U.S. patrol.

The Israeli Embassy said in an official statement that "Israel views itself as an ally of the United States and the Israeli Defense Forces as a natural ally of American forces. We welcome the Marine contingent in the Beirut area and wish to have the fullest cooperation with them."

Unemployment bill gets Duke signature

BOSTON — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis signed emergency legislation yesterday to guarantee unemployment compensation benefits for two weeks for some 20,000 persons who have exhausted basic benefits.

The governor said the prompt action by the Legislature will assure continued benefits for participants in the Federal Supplemental Compensation Benefits Program.

"Nothing can be more unsettling in this economy," Dukakis said, "than to be unemployed, and then to find that the benefits that you earned will not be paid you."

Bradford Allen, a spokesman for the Senate Ways and Means Committee, said funds had run out for the federally-financed program. He said the extra weeks of benefits authorized extend to March 31.

Harvard should abstain on anti-nuke question

CAMBRIDGE — Harvard University should abstain on anti-nuclear shareholder resolutions requiring corporations in which it holds stock to end nuclear research or weapons production, a 12-member advisory committee recommended yesterday.

"We believe abstentions on such resolutions best reflects the wide spectrum of opinion on the nuclear threat held within the campus, said a statement issued by the Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility.

The committee of four faculty members, four students and four alumni advises the six-member Harvard Corporation, which governs the institution.

The recommendation specified resolutions requiring corporations to cease nuclear research or production of nuclear weapons.

Outside firm to redo Amherst intersection

By MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Correspondent

After five years, the delay for the redisigning the dangerous intersection at Amherst's Main, Southeast, and Northeast streets may be over and reconstruction could take place in the near future.

"Because of many accidents, including fatalities, Amherst residents were led to fill out a petition in 1977, stating that something ought to be done about the intersection," said Town Engineer James A. Smith.

In June of 1978, the Board of Selectmen held a meeting to discuss a remedy to the dangerous intersection. The town hired the firm of Almer Huntley and Associates of Northampton to design a plan to realign the roads and build stop lights, Smith said.

At a public hearing held last year to review the first plans made by the design firm, many people protested against them, including the Amherst Historical Commission. The Selectmen also opposed the plans. They felt they were more suited to an urban area then to Amherst, said Selectmen Chairman Edith Wilkinson.

The Massachusetts State Historical Commission held a routine hearing on the subject. There was also some confusion concerning whether the state Department of Transportation would be required to conduct a 4F review, which is done whenever development will have major effects on historical districts and parklands. This would have delayed reconstruction even longer.

"Eight changes were made by Almer Huntley and Associates to the original plan, meeting the approval of the Amherst Historical Commission as well as the Board of Selectmen. With these changes the Massachusetts State Historical Commission filed a no impact report and the 4F hearing was not held," Wilkinson said.

Squeal Law major priority of CERRF

By PEGGY SHAW
Collegian Correspondent

Viewed as an invasion of privacy by the government and discrimatory against females, the Squeal Law is a major concern of the Committee for Equal Rights and Reproductive Freedom (CERRF) at the University of Massachusetts.

The Squeal Law would require federally-funded agencies to notify parents when their daughters applied for birth control devices.

CERRF is an active student organization affiliated with the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), "working to educate the UMass community in relation to present reproductive rights and legislation," said Beki Boyd, a member of the group.

"CERRF is constantly sending letters to members of Congress airing disapproval of the Squeal Law," said Lisa Nazzaro, a member of CERRF.

"We are lucky here at UMass. Many schools have no active organizations at all. A lot of students are apathetic," Nazzaro said.

"The organizations should educate the public while students should get involved. It's a dual responsibility. If you are not educated, you can't do anything," she said.

"The committee really doesn't have official members, just people who attend the meetings regularly," said Artie Walsh, one of the few male members of CERRF. The organizer of the group, Tildy Turchinetz said, "We would really like to get more people involved no matter what their sex is."

This semester CERRF is planning to concentrate on public outreach. A few major projects in line are improving the table on the concourse every Tuesday, distributing informative posters to the dorms, and developing a new traveling skit to be performed in the residential areas on campus.

"We would like to have a much stronger presence on campus," Nazarro said.

However, she said "there are difficulties involved in keeping up with things. They (the legislators), make it confusing so as not to let organizations keep up with anything. It is very confusing here at UMass so you can imagine how it must be in Washington," Nazzaro said.

The committee holds weekly meetings at 6:30 every Tuesday night.

MHC ok's new sports complex

By LIZ WEISS
Collegian Correspondent

SOUTH HADLEY — The Mount Holyoke College trustees last weekend approved construction of a $9 million sports complex which, when completed, will create three times as many athletic facilities as those presently in use.

Sharon Crow, chairman of the physical education department at Mt. Holyoke, said the project was undertaken in response to the very large enrollment of Mt. Holyoke students in physical education classes and that the present facilities do not provide sufficient quality or quantity. Since 70 percent of the student body participates in the courses, there is little or no free time for students to use the facilities.

Crow said it has not yet been worked out whether or not students from the other colleges can use the new sports center, but that the policy in the last 10 to 15 years has been that the facilities of any of the five colleges are for students of that college only.

However, University of Massachusetts students and students at the other five colleges will be able to use the facilities by enrolling in a physical education course at Mt. Holyoke, Crow said.

The plans include a new field house, squash and raquetball courts, a new pool and diving tank, an outdoor track with new competition playing fields, a weight and training room, performing dance studio and renovations to the existing building.

"Mt. Holyoke's taking an enormous step," Crow said, "It's the largest project we've ever had. The trustees are finally sensing that women want to be active."

Students have petitioned to have the center built for the last five years and more than 600 students signed the petitions urging trustees to approve the addition. Many participated in events last fall to raise funds for the project.

Construction is expected to begin as soon as possible, with the projected date of completion in August 1984. Mt. Holyoke is funding the sports center, which is begin constructed by Aquadro and Cerruti Inc. of Northampton. Upon its completion, the school said it expects to have the best facilities in the area.

No damage in JFK alarm

A mid-afternoon malfunction in a sixth floor washing machine yesterday caused the evacuation of the John F. Kennedy dormitory in the Southwest college area.

Lt. Coulombe of the Amherst Fire Department said the 3:40 alarm was set off by a faulty belt in the machine which had caused the machine to overheat, smoke, and thus trip the alarm.

Coulombe said there was no damage and the 250 evacuees were allowed into the building after 15 minutes.

The Amherst Fire Department also responded to a fire in Crampton dormitory in Southwest shortly after 8 last night. The fire, contained in a second floor trash barrel, caused no damage, but extensive smoke to the area, said Lt. Timothy E. Atteridge of the Amherst Fire Dept.

In other police related business yesterday:

● A 19-year-old University of Massachusetts student was arrested Wednesday night in Boyden gym and charged with receiving stolen property over $100, UMass police said yesterday.

Police said they received a call at 8:18 p.m. Wednesday from a man who said his jacket had been stolen Feb. 20 and was being worn by another man in Boyden gym. Police met the complaintant in the gym then arrested the youth.

● A 21-year-old Pittsfield man, travelling south on North Pleasant Street Wednesday morning was arrested and charged with speeding and driving while under the influence of alcohol, police said. The man was travelling 50 mph in a 25 mph zone when he was stopped by UMass police.

● A cassette player, a set of rear deck speakers and a set of door speakers were reported missing from a car parked in the Fraternity/Sorority Park, police said yesterday. The incident happened between March 12 and Wednesday. Total value was estimated at $285, police said.

Comedy at the Blue Wall

Blue Wall

Good drama can be powerful, good dance can be beautiful and fascinating and good music can rock and shake you and get you moving. But nothing is as much a guarantee of a great night as good comedy. Everyone has a good time. This semester has had a wealth of such nights, showcasing the talents of professional comedians from Boston and across the country.

On Thursday of last week the touring company of Chicago's Second City Comedy troupe performed at Smith College's Theatre 14. The first co-effort by Smith and the UMass Fine Arts Council, the show combined skits, blackouts and some outrageous bits of improvisation. The six-member group opened with a series of bits running the gamut from video games to Nancy Reagan to religious satire. The first highlight came with an improv game called "freeze" in which two cast members could stop the scene by yelling freeze, at which point they would take the place of one of the two and begin a new scene. The quickness and versatility of the cast was proved beyond question in these scenes.

Second City has, of course, been a training ground for up and coming comedic performers. Many highly acclaimed comedians have gone from the troupe to bigger things, like the casts of Saturday Night Live and SCTV. Why the troupe played Smith of all places is questionable. UMass is a looser and cooler and would seem more suitable to their type of humor. Feminist folk singer take-offs and male-oriented bits didn't go over quite as well to the predominantly female audience. A skit with a wife complaining about the toilet seat being left up, however got a big Smith laugh.

The second act, after a half-hour intermission, quickly had the audience laughing again. High points were another improvisational routine and a skit about the last couple on Earth (a woman from Beacon Hill and a guy from Southie). If there was anything bad about the show it was the shortness of some of the bits; in particular with a Christian Scientist waiting for a broken chair to heal itself. This one and others ended just as they were getting going.

It is a possibility that the troupe will be brought here. The Blue Wall would be ideal. As one cast member remarked in an informal reception following the show, small clubs are perfect. "Everyone's drunk so it makes everything seem that much funnier." .'

Catch a Rising Star, the New York comedy club, will be sending their touring group to the Blue Wall on April 5, the second Tuesday after break. Catch a Rising Star has some outrageous comedians and their performance here should not be missed. J.J. Wall, Steve Sweeney and the comedy team of Schmock and Vallely will be appearing. Cover will be a low $2.00.

Comedy nights at the Blue Wall also deserve attention. Presented every other Tuesday by the Governor's Program Council, they feature several professional comedians and usually a local or two. This past Tuesday's show was one of the best of the semester. Mike Moto, Kenny Rogerson and Lenny Clark, all regulars on the Boston club circuit, brought their original and diverse humor to a crowded Wall.

Opening the show were amateures Dana Gould and Kevin Brown. Both have played here before and both show potential. Gould was better than usual, playing more to the audience than in the past. Brown, on the other hand, wasn't up to his usual par. The routine he did Tuesday seemed overly situational and contrived.

For those not old enough to attend comedy nights at the Wall, the G.P.C. will be presenting the Best of Comedy on video in the back of the Hatch on April 26. It will be free.

CINCINNATI SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Fine Arts Center
Tuesday, March 15

By JULIE PROCOPIOW
Collegian Staff

The timpani thundered, the flutes sang out in sweet melody, and the strings hummed in perfect synchronization while the audience just sat back in awe Tuesday night as the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra filled the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall with beautiful music.

It is unfortunate that more people did not attend the concert to give tribute to this fine orchestra which, directed by Michael Gielen, is the country's fifth oldest symphony orchestra. The three pieces played gave the audience a wonderful opportunity to escape from the pressures and problems of everyday in exchange for just a couple of hours of classical delight.

Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No.3 in C Major, Opus 72, was the first piece of the program and my as well favorite. "Leonore" is Beethoven's final and much shorter version of his first and only opera, Fidelio, which is a story idealizing themes of unselfish love, loyalty, courage, sacrifice, endurance, and heroism.

The Orchestra's full sound succeeded in portraying the different themes by accenting the variability of tempos. A number of flute solos were beautifully executed in addition to the fine interjecting passages from the whole violin section.

Following the Beethoven piece came "Variazioni" by the contemporary artist, George Crumb. This particular work seemed to take a number of the people in the audience by surprise as its contemporary style did not quite meet their expectations of traditional classical music.

I enjoyed the piece specifically for its interesting and energizing style, which might be termed "pointillism" where the melodic line is broken up among several instruments, each playing no more than three of four notes before passing the melody on. Such a style resembles a somewhat playful dialogue between various instruments.

Crumb also introduced the harp and bells in this piece to add to the colorful uniqueness of the variation.

After a brief intermission, the orchestra beautifully put its audience back into a serene mood with Johannes Brahm's classic, Symphony Number I in C Minor, Opus 68. With professional ease and sophistication, the Orchestra gave credit to Brahm's genius with its practically flawless performance. The piece was quite long yet very easy to sit through because of its relaxing mood.

I left the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall Tuesday night thoroughly satisfied, yet somewhat disappointed as well that more people did not take this golden opportunity to lose themselves in the Cincinnati Symphony's magical talent.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Junior year at UMass

Chris Ferretti

Confusion is a great word. At UMass it is a commonly used word that is present in almost all everday situations to some degree. It is a built-in defense mechanism that warns us that things are getting out of control. This is also the word that best characterizes one's junior year.

The junior year is traditonally the most difficult year in college. For starters a major has to be decleared, which is not as easy as it looks. Four years ago the Economics Department required eight courses for a major, today fourteen are required. The academic advisor is also around to remind you of such changes and to remind you that you must fulfill your college cores and to advise you of the field that you should not major in. Then if you are not squeezed out of your major by overcrowded classes or secure a place on a course waiting list that numbers less than twenty — this will probably be your most enjoyable year.

To further add to this confusion, you must also decide upon such educational niceties as foreign and domestic exchanges, no, not credit markets — but the option to study at another school. Most people will opt for such choices as Europe and Asia. For others if the choice is not limited to a special country or an academic department at a particular institution, then the University of California at Santa Barbara and the University of Miami at Coral Gables are favorites. For the better part of a year you can major in suntanning.

The junior year is also the time for one to gain some first hand experience at a job, preferably one in your field of study through internships. These jobs are traditionally unpaid and are voluntary in nature — but you have the chance to gain some experience and some college credit. Very often this type of work will be an office job where you can learn the fine art of pushing paper clips from behind your own desk, and the eccentricities of advanced photocopying. The Washington internship offers the unique opportunity to study the first class makings of a complex and nebulous bureaucracy, better known as our Federal Government.

Lastly there are people that will elect to take some time off from school for purely personal reasons. These reasons vary: some do so to get their head together, others want to distance themelves away from the academic mindset, and still others have a measure of uncertainty about their academic plans. They all offer the opportunity to sample a slice of the real world. For many it will be a first time experience dealing with such things as the help-wanted ads, salaried paychecks and filing that income tax return.

What are some of the things that one can do? Travel, sleep or get a job.

In order to secure that first job most employers will ask that dreaded question — have you ever done this kind of work before? If you are suave and sophisticated and are an exceptional wordspinner then you can relate to this kind of question with the proper answer, yes. Most of us though are not exceptional word spinners. Do no lie. Employers on the whole do not tolerate this, but a stretched truth although frowned upon will garner you some respect on the basis of ingenuity and presentation, and you might have earned a job.

The key ingredient, of course, is not to be skillful at handing out lines or to exhibit an ordinate amount of job flexibility, no, the key is to plan ahead. If possible talk to a friend who has taken time off, find out about the kind of work that person did, and what that person did gain from their experiences. You will also run into people that will be of no help whatsoever — whose father bought them a seat on the NY Stock Exchange, or worked for a corporate law firm for a salary that approached weekly what you took in monthly the previous summer. On the whole though, you will get a realistic perspective on the job market.

So when your junior year does swing around and you do become confused, relax. Make your choice, but make it with a grain of sale and a measure of tolerance — that is what life it seems is all about outside the confines of the university.

What's the use of playing sick?

Elizabeth Luciano

I'd hate to be one of those people who constantly whines and complains, but last week was really lousy. On Monday, my English paper was due, and I left all thirty perfectly typed pages of it on the desk in my room. One of my mid-terms was on Tuesday: 60 trivia questions on twelve interminable textbook chapters. It was a lot of fun trying to take the test without my contact lens, which I lost in the bathroom that morning. On Wednesday, I locked myself out of my room not once, not twice, but three times, and was too embarassed to hunt down an R.A. to let me in. And on Thursday, I lost the Spanish books which I needed to study for Friday's exam, which turned out to be impossible, anyway. One could safely say it was not a good week. So on Saturday, I did what any normal, self-respecting human being would do: I played sick.

Playing sick differs greatly from hypochondria. Hypochondriacs truly believe that they have been stricken with a serious (or at least moderately serious) illness. Playing sick is just that: playing. As a kid, I did it all the time, putting on Academy Award-winning acts for my mother, and praying that my temperature was slightly above 98.6. Playing sick is a fun, relatively harmless activitiy which I should have outgrown by now. Instead, I've worked hard at trying to perfect it.

It's best to start off in the correct frame of mind: self-indulgent. Here it is, the weekend, and everyone else is outside, playing Frisbee and catching a few rays in the fresh spring sunshine. It's just not fair that you're stuck indoors, too sick to even study in the Hatch, or nurse a cup of coffee.

Settle back against a big pile of pillows, and mummify yourself in the sheets. Keep a lap desk handy, in the unlikely event you get inspired to study. Using a chair as a nightstand, cover it with a bottle of aspirin, a box of Kleenex, a thermometer, some honey-flavored Pine Brothers cough drops, and a T.V. Guide. Comfort yourself by holding your only stuffed animal, a purple mouse that Dad gave you three years ago, when you really were sick, with appendicitis.

Be vague when your roommate asks what's wrong — you can't claim appendicitis twice, you know. Mumble something about a cold coming on, or having a headache, or your stomach feeling "funny." Sigh a lot, and keep checking to see whether your forehead is hot. Your roomie will probably guess what you're up to, but if he or she has any common courtesy, they'll play along and buy you a get-well-soon card.

If they offer to get you something to eat, tell them you could only hold down something smooth, like peanut butter. Get a spoon and eat Skippy straight from the jar, then top it off with a chocolate bar, like on the T.V commercial. Look disdainful if your roommate suggests that you'd be better off with chicken soup or cinnamon toast. You're the sick one — what the hell do they know?

Most roommates will eventually get fed up with you and stomp off to the library. This will give you an hour or two of privacy. You can keep busy by watching cartoons on television, taking a nap, going over some lecture notes, or getting on the phone and calling everyone you've met since September of your freshman year. If you're desperately bored out of your mind, consider posting a message on your memo board:

I'M SICK TODAY. PLEASE VISIT ME.

No one with a conscience could resist a plea like that, so chances are you'll have plenty of company in no time at all. Do some coughing and sneezing for their benefit.

"Hey," somebody'll say, "that cold sounds pretty bad."

"Oh, it is." assure him or her, "My nose is all stuffed up, and I feel like the inside of my throat was run over by a carrot grater." Play it up!

"That's too bad." someone else will shake their head. "We were going to ask you go to to Plumbley's with us, for dinner. But you're obvious not well enough."

"I am starting to feel hungry . . . " tell them.

"Nope. No use in pushing your luck and getting sicker." The crowd begins sneaking out your door. "Besides, we don't want to catch whatever you've got. It sounds rotten."

Narey editorial is off-base

To the Editor:

Don Narey's editorial in Wednesday's Collegian ("Flyer Lacked Social Responsibility") is a blatant attempt to discredit the anti-intervention movement in general and the recent rally on the Amherst Common in particular. Instead of discussing the goals of the rally, Mr. Narey chose to create an atmosphere of suspicion around the poster publicizing the event. Phrases such as " . . . an organization, which chose not to identify itself," "(t)he unauthored pamphlet," and "remain a mystery" abound, attacking the integrity of rally organizers.

First a little history. An idea for an emergency response to the Reagan Administration's escalation of the war in El Salvador was first proposed at the Northampton Committee on Central America (NCOCA)'s meeting on March 2. NCOCA contacted other groups for a representatives from at least 7 different groups, accepted the idea of an early rally on the Amherst Common followed by a march/caravan to Pittsfield in late March or April.

This, then, was the "organization which chose not to identify itself." In fact in the Endorsing Groups box on the poster, all the groups participating in the coalition were identified.

Mr. Narey continues this startling character assassination when he "exposed": "(n)owhere in the pamphlet is it stated who funded this campaign to raise support for the March 12 rally . . ." Leaving aside the question of when you ever do see that sort of information, this subtle accusation may have introduced fears and suspicion at UMass and the community about financing by sinister "outside elements" and we therefore answer it directly. $265 was raised at the rally by donations, while NCOCA, Western Mass. Latin American Solidarity Committee, and Gay and Lesbian Activists each contributed $50. Haymarket Peoples Fund put up to $100. Our deficit of $30 will be met by individuals.

Macurdy is looking for some excitement

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

Although John Macurdy is finishing his gymnastics career at the University of Massachusetts, he will pick up where he left off in high school to compete in diving and the decathalon and begin a career related to his sports management major.

"My life really centers around the athletic arena," Macurdy said. "I figure I might as well do something with it. What my education prepares me for and what I can see as a viable path is training professional athletes to be better.

He was born in Queens, NY but moved to Stamford, Connecticut when he was three years old. It was not until he was in high school that he began to get serious about gymnastics.

In his senior year at Westhill High School he came in second at the Fairfield County Championships in the all around, floor excercises and vault, and placed third in the high bar event. In the Connecticut state championships, he placed second in the high bar event and third in the all around and vaulting event.

"I think a lot of it came from watching Tarzan and Robin Hood," he said of his interest in gymnastics. "Those guys always went flipping around the forest like it was nothing and I wanted to do it. There was no one thing in particular. I was just drawn to it. The other sports seemed easy in comparison."

Macurdy also competed for three years in track and field and still holds the high school record in pole vaulting with a 13.6 feet. He dove for two years while in high school and came in second at the State Open Championships.

When he entered UMass, he started competing for the men's gymnastics team in the floor exercises and vaulting, his two best events. His top score in floor of 9.55 was established this year and he received his high vault score of 9.65 for the first time last year. In the New England Championships held three weeks ago, Macurdy won a first place medal in floor with a 9.45 and took second in vaulting with a 9.6 and in the parallel bars with an 8.85.

He competed with sore wrists and managed to place second in the floor exercises with scores of 9.2 and 9.3 and third in vaulting with a 9.6 and a 9.45, at the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Championships held at Springfield last weekend. The Nationals will be next if he can qualify in the vault.

Handling a heavy sports and academic schedule is hard but Macurdy likes it that way.

"I wouldn't have it any other way," he said. "I guess I just like living on the edge. I work best under the gun, under pressure."

With his father being an opera singer, the "activity-minded" Macurdy has had the opportunity to travel to Europe and surrounding islands where he has gone scuba diving, surfing and water skiing.

In the fall, he will come back to UMass to attend graduate school for exercise science and prepare for his career of training professional athletes.

"Or I might go out to Hollywood and be a stuntman," he said. "I've always enjoyed flying through the air. That's the kind of thing I could really see myself doing. I can't see myself leading a very boring life."

Softball squad to get it together down south

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team has a good case of cabin fever. They're healthy and ready to go. They're set to play.

And play they will, as the Minutewomen travel to South Carolina for Spring Break and 13 games as they open their 1983 season.

Massachusett's games in South Carolina will not count in the regular season record, but if UMass does well enough to be considered for a NCAA bid at the end of the year, the South Carolina games will count towards the Minutewomen's record.

The Minutewomen, who posted a injury-filled 18-17 record last year, are all healthy at the moment, except for sophomore Patty Masury with a muscle pull.

Coach Elaine Sortino's team has eight returning ballplayers, six of whom started last year. Seven newcomers dot the roster which includes four seniors, four sophomores and a freshmen.

"They are ready to play," said Sortino after the team's first outdoor practice of the semester Tuesday.

"The team is experienced in positions of leadership. We have young pitching and are experienced defensively.

"The youth will give us a shot in the arm. They're exciting to work with."

Sortino hasn't decided what lineup will work for the Minutewomen, but there is competition for all of the starting positions and no one has locked up a spot.

"We are covering our tracks this year (having a backup for each position)," said Sortino. A rash of injuries in the wrong places hurt last year's team.

"I've learned my lesson," she said and even though UMass has depth this year, "We are more specialized."

All-American catcher Jackie Gaw, who is third in the country in lifetime batting is being challenged by freshman Beth Talbott. Talbott (one of the best late finds ever, according to Sortino) has a great arm and can be used behind the plate or in the outfield.

Gaw, a leading hitter last year can also play third base where returning senior Chris Coughlin combs the territory. Coughlin, who has been an All-New England pick for three years can also play shortstop, where All-American Allison Roux, who missed the entire season last year due to a leg injury, is only a junior.

At second base, senior Debbie Pickett, who played shortstop last year on a hurt leg, will be at full strength this year and is being challenged by sophomore Missy Oman, who also missed last year with a leg injury.

Oman, is also able to play at first, where freshman Sally Mahar is competing.

In the outfield, second team All-American Tina Coffin heads the list that includes Senior Mary Ann Lombardi, and newcomers Ann Ringrose, Judy Kelly, Talbott and Gaw.

While there is ample experience in the field, the pitching staff is on the young side, featuring two freshmen and two sophomores. Sophmore Masury is back again and improved and joined by Krista Stanton. Lynn Stockley and Cathy Reed bring in some specialized talent that enhances the UMass pitching staff.

Hitting wise, hopefully, UMass will improve over the thin performances that they sometimes had last year.

"Contact wise we need to do a better job hitting. I'd like to stay out of the 10-11 inning one run games," said Sortino.

"The team is excited to go down south and see how they stack up against the other teams," she said.

UMass will go up against Michigan, South Carolina, Seton Hall, Rutgers and Ohio University among the teams on the schedule.

The team's home slate begins on March 31 with a doubleheader against Brown. But that is after the trek through South Carolina.

"Let's go!" said Sortino. "We're ready!"

Break: A world of relaxation

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Spring break is over.

Some students used the week to catch up on their studies while others chose to escape.

"I went out partying the whole time," said Cara Milks, a sophomore from North Brookfield who spent most of the week in Boston.

"I wish I could have gone to Florida, but I didn't have enough money and I had too much homework," she said, noting that she spent the end of the week at home catching up on her homework.

Undeclared first year student Marsha Karr also spent her week trapped in the world of academia.

"I did major studying," Karr said. "I'm a week ahead in four out of my five subjects. I don't have to open a book until next weekend except for zoology."

"I lounged around," bragged business major Lynda Harbold. "I didn't work on any school work." However, she said her absence from school may have led to a new scientific discovery.

"My refrigerator got accidentally defrosted. We have discovered new forms of life," she announced proudly.

Junior English major Siobhan Powers spent her time both reclining and studying.

"I had a boring spring break," Powers said. "I slept a lot and caught up on all the work I missed when I was running for (Student Government Association) President.

"It (spring break) is kind of a personal time," Powers said. "They (students) should do whatever they need to do," she advised.

While many students chose to head south for the week, at least two students chose to remain in New England where the temperature averaged below 45 degrees.

"I couldn't go home because I live in Florida," West Palm Beach native Mary Mackenzie said. "It rotted. I had a cold," she lamented.

"I thought I'd stay here and relax," said senior Jack Rooney who worked at the Campus Center Print Shop last week. "Every time I went away (during past spring breaks) I came back and had to take a few days to relax."

Whether or not you get away from the area, Rooney advised, "Spring break is a great chance to get away from school."

Campus Center bus stop relocated

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students coming back from spring break last night on Peter Pan Bus Lines found themselves dropped off at a new location on campus, marking the beginning of several University traffic changes that will be in effect for the next fourteen months.

That is the amount of time it is expected to take to build a new pollution control system next to the coal burning power plant, which has forced the closing of Campus Center Way, until the project is completed.

As a result of the closing, routes for cars and buses normally using this road have been revised.

All buses, including those run by the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority and Peter Pan, that had formerly stopped at the Campus Center circle are now stopping at the far end of the Haigis Mall, which is the large open area between the Whitmore Administration Building and the School of Business Administration.

Bus tickets for all Peter Pan buses will still be purchased in the lobby of the Campus Center Hotel, which means that people are going to have to plan for extra time to walk to Haigis Mall and catch their bus.

People with cars wishing to use the Campus Center parking garage are now going to have drive on to Governors Drive where they can gain access to the garage by using a temporary roadway that travels past Hatch Laboratory and then in between Flint and Chenoweth Laboratories. Directional signs have been installed to inform people of the new route.

Trucks going to and from the Cold Storage Plant will have to use the road in front of Holdsworth Hall from Information Booth Six.

The construction of the project will not affect pedestrians since there will be a walkway past the construction site that will enable people to walk to the Textbook Annex and points beyond it.

Installation of Pollution Control System, called a baghouse, is being funded by the state in order to meet standards of the Lower Pioneer Valley Air Pollution Control District on air quality in Massachusetts.

The baghouse will be a small building next to the power plant designed to control fly ash and smoke emissions coming out of the boiler before it goes out the smokestacks and into the environment.

H. Jackson Littlefield, director of facilities planning, described the baghouse as a large vacuum cleaner with fans that draw the smoke through bags, trapping the fly ash but releasing the pure gas and thus improving the quality of the smoke from the stacks.

"We have no choice about this, we have to do it," he said of the baghouse. "The University burns coal to save millions of dollars a year but with it, you have a pollution problem. To solve the problem you have to build a baghouse and it must be built close to where the coal is burned."

House advises aid increases

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts House of Representatives will recommend an increase in student aid when it releases its version of the state budget, House Ways and Means Chairman Michael Creedon, D-Brockton, said last week.

"I think we have to address the situation... absolutely (there will be an increase), Creedon said in a telephone interview last Wednesday.

"Without those programs (student assistance), I would not have been able to attend college," he said.

The state scholarship program has not been increased in more than five years. Last year, three of every four qualified students were denied state scholarships because of a lack of funds.

Recent attempts have been made to increase the funding (see related story), but this is the first time Creedon, who chairs the committee which draws up the state budget recommendations for the House, has publicly supported an increase.

Creedon said he supports earmarking some money for loans and stressed the need for repayment of such loans.

"I will be paying off my loans until April of 1986," Creedon said. "I'm 36 now and I'll be 39 when my loans from college and law school are paid off. I didn't default — I've paid my responsibilities."

Presently Massachusetts has no publicly supported loan program.

The committment received from the House of Representatives is the third step of a six step budgetary process.

Last November the Board of Regents recommended a $10 million increase in the present $14 million funding level of the scholarship program. The recommendation was then forwarded to the governor. In February, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis recommended a $4 million increase and committed himself to a steady increase over the next few years. The budget recommendation then went to the House, where it still lies.

Any increase in the scholarship program will be available to students for the next academic year.

Aid tax argued

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

A proposed two cent per gallon gasoline tax increase could contribute to $25 million in state scholarship aid if the Massachusetts House of Representatives this week approves a tax bill calling for cigarette taxes to be placed in a special scholarship fund.

The Senate voted last week to take $25 million of cigarette taxes and put it toward a fund to be called the Student Higher Education Assistance Fund. An extra penny of a proposed two cent hike over the present 10 cent a gallon gasoline tax would go into the state budget to make up for the revenue loss in the budget from diversion of the cigarette tax revenue, according to the Senate proposal.

The Senate passed the additional penny tax as an amendment to the House version, which called for an 11 cent tax. The action followed four hours of debate and a 19-18 vote, with a tiebreaker cast by Senate President William M. Bulger Jr.

The state is trying to gain revenue lost through plunging gas prices. Because the taxes are based on percentages, the amount of available state aid lessens, when the gas price drops, and the state loses money it would ordinarily use to support state-funded programs, such as financial aid and welfare.

"Both the governor and the legislature are in favor of financial aid," said Stan Rosenberg, aide to Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst.

But Gov. Michael S. Dukakis staunchly opposed the Senate version, and told another legislator it was "hard enough trying to get the 1 cent increase."

Other legislative opponents of the proposal said it is unfair for the taxpayers to assume another increase, and contributing to financial aid would be wasting revenues.

Sen. Richard Kraus, D-West Arlington, a proponent of the amended version, said defeat of the bill would not mean defeat of increased financial aid monies, but added that additional money would be difficult to gain.

"There is so much support of financial aid in the legislature that funding will come up again, though maybe not in as generous as a proposal as this one," he said.

The legislature is expected to elect a committee this week to iron out the differences and vote again on the tax plan. The deadline for passage is Thursday.

Soviet rebuttle shrugged off by Weinberger

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger shrugged off yesterday the strongly-worded Soviet attack of President Reagan's anti-missile defense plans as "simple, standard Soviet disinformation that has poured out for years."

Appearing on NBC's "Meet the Press," Weinberger responded to questions about Soviet leader Yuri V. Andropov's statements that Reagan's plans are "insane" and "extremely perilous."

Andropov said in an interview for yesterday's edition of the Communist daily newspaper Pravda that Reagan told a "deliberate lie" last week in asserting that the Soviet Union had not kept to a moratorium on deploying medium-range nuclear missiles. He also said Reagan's plan is aimed at rendering the Soviet Union defenseless to a U.S. nuclear attack.

"I don't think it's all that remarkable, to be perfectly frank about it," Weinberger said of the published interview. "It's the simple standard Soviet disinformation that has been poured out for years."

Weinberger said he couldn't "think of any particular specific incident" in which a Soviet leader had called an American president a liar, adding "They say it about me, they say it about several other people in the government and I have no doubt they've said it about the president."

Reagan's plan, announced Wednesday, calls for a longterm research effort to find a futuristic defense system that could destroy ballistic missiles aimed at the United States. Weinberger said the plan is to deter nuclear war through defense and said the Soviets "know perfectly well that we will never launch a first strike" against them.

Meanwhile, Dr. Wolfgang Panofsky of Stanford University said Reagan's plan is "a very old idea," but "you can't curb technology by policy." He said he had "real problems" with the proposal.

China hopeful for US ties

PEKING (AP) — A Chinese leader told U.S. House Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill Sunday there are obstacles in the way of good U.S.-China relations now, but that China is optimistic about relations in the long term.

In his own speech at a welcoming banquet, O'Neill, DMass., said both the United States and China are aware of the dangers posed by expansionism in the world, which was an apparent reference to the Soviet Union.

China, however, accuses both Americans and the Soviets of being hegemonists seeking to dominate the world. Meanwhile, it has been holding consultations with the Soviets on improving relations.

Liao Chengzhi, a vice chairman of the National People's Congress standing committee and member of the Communist Party Politburo, told the banquet that from a long-term point of view, we are optimistic about the prospects of future development of our relations with the United States.

If the two sides live up to their joint communiques and do not interfere in each other's internal affairs, he said, they shall be able to surmount present difficulties and obstacles and see the healthy development of our relations.

He referred to the communique on establishing relations in 1979 and the August 1982 communique in which the United States promised to limit arms sales to Taiwan.

In the last month, China has protested that President Reagan distorted the August communique and that planned U.S. arms sales to Taiwan in 1983 and 1984 violate the agreement.

It calls U.S. policy toward Taiwan interference in China's internal affairs, and also says the United States does not treat China as an equal on a number of issues.

Both Liao and O'Neill called good Sino-U.S. relations conducive to world peace and stability.

Superfund chief says cleanup is moving speedily

MEDFORD — The cleanup of New England's hazardous waste dumps is moving faster than the public thinks it is, the federal administrator in charge of the region's Superfund cleanup program said yesterday.

"The public perception is that the program is moving slowly because it thought since Congress passed the law and made money available bulldozers would be on the sites immediately, taking the waste away," said Merrill S. Hohman, Environmental Protection Agency director of waste management for the New England area.

Hohman said he repeatedly gets complaints from people who live near the 38 New England sites to be cleaned up under the $1.6 billion program.

The perception of the people, he said, is that the EPA is doing little to remove the waste.

Democratic mayoral candidate is harassed

CHICAGO — An angry crowd shouting "Go home!" forced Democratic mayoral candidate Harold Washington to cut short a campaign appearance with former vice president Walter Mondale in a predominantly white neighborhood yesterday.

Washington, seeking to become the city's first black mayor, later said he believed the crowd at a Roman Catholic church on the city's North Side was organized by supporters of GOP candidate Bernard Epton.

Epton denied any knowledge of the incident and condemned it.

Washington and Mondale were leaving St. Pascal's Church when they were surrounded by several dozen people, some shouting "thief" and crook" and others carrying Epton signs.

Inspections to begin for exhaust emissions

BOSTON — In the license plate lottery, the lucky numbers are one, two and three.

Cars with registrations ending in those numbers won't come up for inspection until 1984.

Most others have to be inspected — for exhaust emissions and safety — this year.

After much delay, the state's new auto inspection program begins Friday, and cars with license plates ending in the number four have to be tested in April.

The twice-yearly safety inspection, at $4 a shot, is no longer. It's now a once-a-year inspection, costing $10, including a new test for exhaust emissions that most cars will have to pass.

Holyoke fire blamed on burning candles

HOLYOKE — An apartment fire that killed three adults and two children and drove 60 other residents from a tenement over the weekend was blamed on burning candles.

Police Lt. Gerald Mcullan, working on an overtime shift, discovered the blaze at 3:30 a.m. Saturday, called in for help and then began arousing residents. No other injuries were reported.

Four years after TMI, nuke safety questioned

WASHINGTON — About 4,300 safety changes have been made at atomic power plants since the Three Mile Island accident. But critics contend the changes don't go far enough to make nuclear power safer.

Some critics say the industry made only the easy, cheap changes and not the difficult, most important improvements.

Officials overseeing the industry acknowledge that a dozen of the 198 fixes given the highest priority after the March 28, 1979, TMI accident have fallen more than a year behind schedule.

Harold Denton, whose calm defused the panic four years ago at Harrisburg, Pa., said he was too optimistic about how fast regulators could turn around an industry with 65 nuclear utilities, four reactor makers, a dozen architect-engineers and thousands of subcontractors.

Cancer from coffee causing skepticism among doctors

BOSTON — Two years ago, a team of Harvard doctors made a shocking discovery: Coffee seems to cause cancer. But does it? The question is still as murky as a cup of day-old java.

The furor began in March 1981 when Dr. Brian MacMahon published a study showing that coffee drinkers are twice as likely as non-users to have cancer of the pancreas. He estimated that coffee could cause more than half of all cases of the disease in the United States.

In the past two years, doctors have checked hospital admissions interviews and other data to see if they could confirm the association. Four of these studies have been published, all as letters to the editors of medical journals. Three of them found no link between coffee and pancreatic cancer; one spotted a "modest increase."

"The major point is that nobody has come up with anything like what MacMahon found," said Dr. Alan Leviton, an epidemiologist at Children's Hospital Medical Center in Boston and consultant to the National Coffee Association.

Registration of blacks encouraged in Boston

BOSTON — Community activists are trying to get an additional 5,000 blacks registered to vote by election time next fall.

"We know that when you have heavy voter turnout, you get better city services," said Margaret Morrison, president of the Roxbury and Dorchester branches of Massachusetts Fair Share, an activist citizens group.

"We felt there's a lot of strength and power in our neighborhoods, and it has to be awakened," she said.

She said 41 percent of eligible blacks in the city are registered to vote while 68.5 percent of all eligible residents are registered.

Two young customers take advantage yesterday of the Sunday opening of Hampshire Mall in Hadley by shopping in its CVS store.

Sunday store openings receive mixed reactions

By EILEEN GALLIGAN
Collegian Staff

Most area shoppers welcomed the opening of retail stores yesterday, but salespeople found stores quiet with only sporadic customers.

Yesterday marked the first Sunday retail stores had the option of opening from noon until 5 p.m., since the state's Blue Laws were repealed last December by the Massachusetts Legislature.

The University store in Campus Center will not be open on Sundays since the ministore in the Student Union Building is normally open then, Winthrop Cummings, University Store manager, and manager of retail said.

At the Hampshire Mall in Hadley shopper Dina Gonsalves of Springfield said she liked the idea of the stores being open Sunday because working people might need this time to get their shopping done.

"Usually I do my housework on Saturdays and don't have time to shop then," she said.

Some salespeople at the mall did not welcome the Sunday opening. Honey Gordon, an employee of J.C. Penney at Hampshire Mall said the only incentive she had for agreeing to work yesterday, was the time and a half pay stores are required to pay their employees.

"The money will be good but I'd rather be home with my children today," she said.

For Ed Tausky, an employee at K-Mart at Hampshire Mall, it was business as usual since he usually works Sundays from 8 a.m. until 8 p.m. rearranging merchandise, and stocking shelves. However, he said, the repeal of the law means he will now have to work more hours to earn the same amount of money.

"Before I worked twelve hours on Sundays at time and a half pay, but now I am only scheduled to work from noon until five at that rate. I guess I'll have to pick up some hours during the week," Tausky said.

While every story at the Hampshire Mall chose to open yesterday except the Bell Phone Center Store, several stores in downtown Amherst remained closed, although many originally said they would be open.

Retail stores open in downtown Amherst yesterday were Faces of Earth, Bolles Shoes, Aubuchon Hardware, and Lodestone, which opened from noon until 4 p.m. instead of 5 p.m.

According to the Chamber of Commerce, questionnaires were sent to downtown merchants a few weeks ago, asking if they would be open, what their hours would be, and if their Sunday opening was on an experimental basis.

Chamber of Commerce Executive Secretary Anne Campney said the results indicated that between one half and two thirds of the merchants would stay open.

Laurie Tauer, a sales person at Bolles Shoes in Amherst Center, said she thinks many downtown stores will wait until next Sunday to start opening because many students would not be returning from spring vacation until late today.

Full costing policy will cost UMass students over $100

Editor's Note: This is the first article in a three-part series on the Trust Fund Management Policy and "full costing" at the University of Massachusetts.

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

A controversial policy approved last month by the UMass Board of Trustees will cost each student at least $100 per year by implementing "full costing," a proposal which was fought by campus administrators and students for more than two years.

The full costing policy will force such trust funds as the Residence Halls and Boarding Halls, which are paid directly by students, to pay for a share of the state-funded central administrative services it uses. Included in a 2.4 percent charge assessed on all trust fund spending would be accounting, data processing, personnel and fee collection services. Those services account for 2.4 percent of the total campus budget.

The Trust Fund Management Policy will take effect next fall and is scheduled to be implemented by the 1984-85 academic year, but part of the resulting fee increases were put in effect this year in anticipation of the policy.

The philosophy behind full costing is simple: each trust fund on the campus should pay for all the services it uses. Thus, if a broken pipe in the residence halls needs to be fixed by a Physical Plant employee, the employee's time and equipment should be paid for from student dormitory fees.

While Physical Plant has billed other campus agencies for many years for its services and for overhead needed to provide services, most of the campus "central services" did not. Thus money allocated by the state legislature was used to pay for Bursar's Office employees who might spend half their time working on Residence Hall and Boarding Hall bills. State funds were also used to pay for administrative salaries in some of the student fee-based trust funds.

In 1981, the Massachusetts Senate Ways and Means Committee examined the Campus Center at UMass and pointed out that state subsidy of some Campus Center maintenance was improper. The Senate report, which was included with the 1981-82 budget, charged that such a subsidy was in violation of the Massachusetts law which permits the University to establish and operate trust funds.

The Massachusetts General Laws, Chapter 75, section 11, states that, "The (UMass Board of) Trustees may, from time to time, establish and manage trust funds for self-amortizing projects and student-supported or self supporting activities...."

As a result of that report, the University began investigating the meaning of "self-supporting," according to John L. DeNyse, Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance.

A committee was appointed in early 1981 by former Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance George Beatty to consider what direct and indirect costs should be billed to the various trust funds.

The committee determined that the problem concerned all three campuses, and a new University wide Task Force on Trust Fund Management was appointed in late 1981 by UMass President David C. Knapp.

The task force discussed what should or should not be included in full costing, and made a number of recommendations to Knapp, but did not issue a formal report or list of specific recommendations. Based on the task force's efforts, Knapp's staff prepared the Trust Fund Management Policy approved by the Trustees in February.

Some students and administrators have opposed the full costing policy on philosophical grounds. Former Student Government Association (SGA) Co-President and student Trustee S. Lawrence Kocot argued that public higher education ought to be subsidized by the state.

Kocot said in a report prepared in late 1981 that campus activities by the trust funds, including the residence halls, always have been and should be subsidized because they are an essential part of a public university.

Kocot had served on the task force, but graduated before any final action had been taken. Jim Murphy, who replaced Kocot as SGA President and student Trustee in April 1982, said the process was too far along when it came before the Trustees. He was the only Trustee to vote against the policy when it was approved in February, 1983.

One major concern while the policy was being considered was the possibility that if the University did not implement full costing, the state might send in auditors to force implementation. Some administrators fear that if the state looked at the issue, it might choose to charge the trust funds for other services not included in the University's full costing proposal.

Harassment suit underway

By TRACEY BRYANT
Collegian Correspondent

A U.S. District Court judge in Springfield ruled in a preliminary hearing last Friday that a University of Massachusetts student can sue Fitzwilly's Restaurant in Northampton for emotional distress claims for alleged sexual harassment.

Judge Freedman denied a motion made by attorneys representing Fitzwilly's to dismiss the suit on the grounds that the Workman's Compensation Act gives adequate recompense for sexual harassment injuries claimed by Miriam Domonique, a former Fitzwilly's waitress.

Freedman ruled that emotional distress and other personal injuries arising from sexual harassment are not hazards of employment and are not covered by Workman's Compensation.

Attorney Ruth Diaz of the UMass Legal Services Office, representing Domonique, said if the court granted the motion made by Fitzwilly's, it would have meant women would be covered only by Workman's Compensation, which is only an insurance benefit.

Freedman, however, denied the motion and said sexual harassment was distinct from accidental or disabling injuries contemplated in the Compensation Act.

Citing the case of Foley vs. Polaroid, the law firm of Sullivan and Hayes representing Fitzwilly's argued that the Workman's Compensation Act is the only remedy available for the injuries alleged by Domonique.

The attorneys said their motion "only requires that she use the proper statutory procedures." A denial of their motion would deprive their client of his rights, they said.

Diaz said the emotional distress and other personal injury claims arose from a civil rights violation and is not a hazard of employment within the meaning of Workman's Compensation.

Domonique, a part-time waitress at Fitzwilly's for three years, claimed her immediate supervisor, Richard Burbine, continually made sexual advances toward her.

"It was the intentional conduct of the employer to get sexual gratification," Diaz said. "It is our position that sexual harassment is extreme and outrageous conduct which causes severe emotional distress."

"This is an important case for women because sexual harassment is a widespread social problem. Women want to be hired and retained based on work performance, not sexual compliance," Diaz said.

UMass student dies in Houston fire

A fire in Houston took the life of a University of Massachusetts student and two others March 20.

Christine O'Malley, 18, a freshman College of Arts and Sciences student and resident of John Quincy Adams dormitory in the Southwest Residential College, Cheryl Small, 20, of Houston and David Rougeau, 20, also of Houston, were found trapped in the upstairs bedroom of a two-story townhouse by fire officials attempting to quell the 5 a.m. blaze.

O'Malley was in Houston for spring vacation.

The fire was put out about an hour later, a fire department spokesman said. Arson investigators are looking into the cause of the fire. Authorities said one of the women was found in a closet.

O'Malley was born in Springfield Oct. 28, 1964, the daughter of Patrick C. and Theresa (Major) O'Malley of 54 Brunswick St., Springfield.

She was a 1982 graduate of Cathedral High School, Springfield, where she was a member of the women's cross country team for four years and captain of the team her senior year.

She was a member of the 40-minute gang at the University.

O'Malley also leaves a brother, Patrick of Houston, and five sisters, Michelle M. O'Malley of Boston; Catherine O. Burke of Bethlehem, Penn.; Theresa M., Jennifer M., and Bridget M. O'Malley, all of Springfield; and a grandmother, Margaret M. O'Malley of Palmer.

She was buried last week in St. Michael's Cemetery, Springfield.

Add experience
to your degree.

Facts indicate that you may work in three to five different careers. It won't be unusual to make changes as you go. And it's entirely possible that your final career does not even exist today.

Often in a first job, you are an assistant to the assistant. Your responsibility is limited to a desk and typewriter.

But when your first job is an Army 2LT, you'll have real management experience. You'll be in charge. On a specific job assignment, you could have 30 to 40 people working for you. And you could be responsible for millions of dollars in equipment.

Responsibility for people and resources is exactly the kind of "take charge" experience civilian employers seek. It's a margin of difference in the increasingly competitive job market.

Prepare to rise to the top in your field. Make your first job 3 or 4 years as an Army Officer.

If you have two years remaining in school, you can begin ROTC this summer. You'll be compensated financially; stimulated physically and mentally. To add experience to your degree contact

Student assoc. seeking funds

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students will vote April 11 and 12 on whether to increase the Student Activities Fee by $2 a year to support the State Student Association of Massachusetts (SSAM).

The referendum question, which will ask UMass students to support SSAM, will be run on at least six other campuses statewide this spring, according to State Student Organizer Michael Ferrigno. The money will provide a permanent funding base for SSAM, Ferrigno said.

Once fully organized, SSAM will represent all state college and university students in the state legislature and other policy-making bodies, Ferrigno said.

"We'll certainly be more effective as a unified body than working separately," he said.

The UMass Undergraduate Student Senate ratified the SSAM constitution and approved the $300 "initiation and conference fee" earlier this month. Nine other state school student governments have ratified the constitution and approved the fee, Ferrigno said. He expects five more schools to ratify the constitution in the next two weeks, and "by the end of the year, we'll have them all."

Ferrigno, a 1981 graduate of UMass, Amherst, said students have tried to organize themselves in the state public higher education system since 1965. If the five schools ratify the SSAM constitution this week as expected, "that will mark the first time in the history of the (Massachusetts) state schools that a majority of the schools have ratified the same constitution," he said.

"The state students association (SSA) has never come this far before," Ferrigno said. "They never had more than one or two schools fund the SSA."

The initiation fees paid by the member schools will pay for referenda campaigns at all state colleges and universities, and for two conferences this spring, but will not be enough to keep the organization going for long, Ferrigno said.

Ferrigno said SSAM members plan to go to the April 9 Democratic Issues Conference in Springfield to "try to influence the platform by making higher education an issue with the Democratic Party."

SSAM is "also fighting for a three year tuition freeze and a student representative on the Board of Regents," Ferrigno said.

UPenn conference brings progressives together

By BROOKE STATES
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — Forty students from the Five College area who did not go to Fort Lauderdale last week spent time discussing the subject of their bodies, but not getting suntans.

The students were part of the Northeast Regional Progressive Student Network (PSN) conference entitled "Taking Back Our Bodies, Taking Back Our Lives." The conference took place Friday and Saturday at the University of Pennsylvania.

According to Helena Michie, a UPenn womens studies instructor and conference organizer, 180 students representatives from 12 campuses came to the conference. The conference was organized by the UPenn Progressive Student Alliance.

The conference began Friday night with songs and poetry by area women performers, and street theater by the UPenn group Ben's Feet. Saturday was filled with ten workshops that ranged from exploring and changing the power relationships between men and women, to self-help and positive self-image for women.

"We took the various kinds of oppression that women face and joined them into the theme of the conference "Taking Back Our Bodies, Taking Back Our Lives," Michie said. "We saw women's bodies as the first line of defense or offense depending on how you look at it. Violence in women's lives has extended right into our bodies."

Friday afternoon featured a panel discussion on problems women face, and solutions to them. Johnetta Miller of the Philadelphia Women Organized Against Rape spoke on "Racism and the Womens Movement."

"The most important thing for me is that in the 60's doors were opening and in the 80's doors are closing," Miller said. "I look at my two beautiful grandchildren and think how will they get through the doors when they are closed. You are the ones who have to get out there and do it. Racism will not change in my lifetime. But for the two little boys I love so dearly, let's make the change for them.

"When I was growing up I thought the only thing I had to deal with was racism. When you began to burn your bras, we could not afford to buy them. As a black woman, I realized I was a born feminist. I had to work to take care of myself. I was never taught that some man could take care of me. I understand very well about back street abortions — when I was 20 I had one."

"I am tired of being in training to be tall, blond, and beautiful," said Teresa Kolish of the University of Massachusetts PSN. Kolish outlined the problems that women face when getting abortions, when exploited by the media for advertising purposes, and cited the need for women to be better organized.

"The conference was designed to pull in women that did not define themselves as feminist and or activists, as well as those who do," Michie said. "If you don't get new blood, people get stale. When you pull these two groups together sparks fly."

The PSN includes both single and multi-issue student groups in the south, east-coast, and midwest, according to Lisa Nazzaro of the UMass PSN. Nazzaro said the PSN Women's Caucus would be taking the initiative in the building of the next PSN conference, and that this will be the fourth annual national conference of the PSN.

An historical document, a personal saga

OBASAN
By Joy Kogawa
Godline Publishers 250 pp $4.95

By CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

Within the vast framework of history, it is sometimes the case that small, clear voices are more effective, and more moving than loud, reverberating outcries. Such is the case with Joy Kogawa's first novel, Obasan. Out of the archives of World War II, with all of its damning atrocities and experiences of human anguish, Kogawa has pulled one small, yet vital, thread and with it has illustrated beautifully many of the truths of war and human nature.

Obasan is the saga of a Japanese-Canadian family irrevocably torn by the events of the second World War. As the novel opens we see Naomi Nakane, a 36-year-old schoolteacher, arranging the funeral of her great-uncle. It is 1972, and it appears that the sour memories of the war years are nearly forgotten. Canada, and its citizens of Japanese descent, seem at last to be at peace.

The funeral guests arrive, each in his own way stirring up the past with reminiscences of the dead man. The war years inevitably come up, and at this point Obasan really "begins." Naomi departs on a historical and personal venture into her own past — a past that has kept her in chains for most of her life.

Before the war the Nakane family, prosperous and closely knit, thrived in Vancouver, British Columbia. The 1930's were good years for them, and no one could imagine the fate that was just around the corner. The Nakane family was Canadian to the core, having lived in Vancouver for almost 100 years. Only their Asian appearance had marked them from total assimilation. Naomi describes a childhood full of baseball, piano lessons, and pretty dresses that was identical to that of any other upper middle class Canadian growing up at that time.

But the atmosphere chilled as war broke out. Persecution of the Japanese-Canadians, confiscation of their property, and incarceration in "holding camps" replaced the comfortable life in Vancouver, and ripped the Nakane family apart. Young Naomi lost her parents and her whole world was blown away. Kogawa's dry, factual narrative fails to conceal the fear and pain and bewilderment that these Canadian nationalists felt at the rough treatment they received from their government.

The years after the war were little better. The Canadian government seemed to have forgiven the Japanese in Japan but not those of Japanese descent in Canada. Naomi's youth was spent working on a beet farm, watching as her family's bonds dissolved while they labored at the only jobs "internal refugees" could get. The Nakane family struggled for normal life, not realizing that the scars were too deep to uproot.

Obasan is a beautifully written novel. Kogawa's careful yet direct treatment of the subject matter makes the novel work both as a document and as a personal statement — not against the Canadian government per se, but against the prejudices of the human mind.

Absence and Vendidos explode stereotypes

DAY OF ABSENCE
By Douglas Turner Ward
LOS VENDIDOS
By Luis Valdez
March 12
Hampden Theater, Southwest
By JERRY LAWLER
Collegian Correspondent

Last week ended the Third World Theaters Production of Days of Absence by Doublas Turner Ward and Los Vendidos by Luis Valdez, two satirical plays of American stereotypes.

As usual of the Third World Productions, the plays messages were strong and hit home making the audience think while also grazing the funnybone.

The first play shown Los Vendidos was served as sort of an appetizer, leaving the audience with a bitter after taste and a perception of a world whose message is: as your neighbor screws you screw him back. It dealt with the stereotypes of two groups of thieves, politicians and Mexicans.

The play opens at Sanchos' used Mexican Shop. On the very simple set there are three wood-frame showcases, each containing a different model Mexican. Sancho (played by Jose Orlando Bou) is dusting the mannequin like figures. A foxy high-class Anglo American lady (Christina Arcese) enters the shop. She is the typical sexatary, on a typical "errand for the boss on my lunch break" run, with the typical errand; her boss is a politician and she has to find a Mexican to fill a minority quota in their office.

Sancho shows the secretary each of the models. First a farm worker. Intelligent, hardworking, economical to run, its only upkeep was chili and beans. But this model failed. For one, it had a smelly exhaust system due to its fuel, and more importantly it was trained to strike.

The second model was called Johnny Pachuco, a trained scape goat that the secretary just loved. "Ooooh he's so soft and fun to kick!" she exclaimed, as she demonstrated on stage. But unfortunately he had the special option of being a thief and the secretary had to reject him, "No, he won't do, we don't need anymore thieves in the administration.

The last model was a handsome Revolucionario suggested because he'd attract the women voters. He was perfect...but he was not American. The boss wouldn't take a product that was not American.

Finally Sancho brings in his newest most expensive model. A Mexican American Businessman complete with grey suit, briefcase, and little American flag. The secretary just adored this model and decided she must have him regardless of his uneconomical, expensive upkeep...wining and dining with at least three martinis a day. She paid the bill — $15,000.00 — which she just happened to have in cash.

The play ends in an interesting turn of events with the secetary fleeing in horror. As soon as Sancho got the money the Mexican American broke down and turned on the secretary along with the three other Mexicans. Come to find out, that Sancho the owner was the real model and the other four were in business just to burn people who wanted made to order Mexicans. As the saying goes, fight fire with fire.

The second play "Day of Absence" was a take-off on the minstrel shows when white comedians would put on black faces. But in this play all the comedians were black with white faces, portraying the whites of a small southern town who frantically search a whole day for the "negros" who mysteriously disappeared without a race. The actors, some making their debut some veterans, all gave superb performances convincingly bringing alive the dilemma we would face if we suddenly lost our scapegoats.

In one amusing scene there is an on the spot reporter interviewing some whites picketing for the blacks to come back. Among the picketers is a Ku Klux Klan member. The reporter asks him why he wants them back, since his purpose was to get rid of them? "Well of course! I'm working for the time when there will be no more negros and we'll be rid of them but the timing just ain't right now," he replied.

At the end of the day the blacks still hadn't been found, depression set in the townspeople and life drained away. In the final scene two old timers sit talking. Suddenly a black man appears. The two men filled with joy, jump up to meet him. "Wher ya been?" they ask him. "I've been no place I ain't gone anywhere! What you talkin bout?" As far as the blacks were concerned the day of absence had never occured.

A member of the audience had commented to me that the play had made her feel guilty that she was white, but I don't think that was the play's intent. Philip Grant (who played the klan member and one of the old men) said in his program profile "This is an amusing play and I'm sure that everyone will enjoy it, but I hope that It's meaning will not be lost."

I think what the play was trying to get across was the idea of the vicious circle in which we don't appreciate what we have until it's gone, complaining and placing the blame always on someone else, like the klan member whose life was spent trying to get rid of blacks, but when they were gone so was his purpose. The very last line of the play one of the old men says to the other after the blacks have returned "Well I guess everythings back to normal." The other replies, "Is it?"

Would things be different in the town? Maybe for a while, but even if the whites didn't use the blacks for their scapegoats, they'd just find something else to pick on. It's human nature. We're always trying to make life perfect or at least better and when we can't, we find something, or somebody to put the blame on. We all have to learn to deal with the fact that at some point, some part of life is going to be surpressed. After all if it weren't we wouldn't have institutions such as Third World Theaters, that bring people together to fight for a worthy cause. The key words are not to fight, but instead, to bring people together.

Instead of pointing the blame at others we should see where it lies in ourselves. As the writer Ralph Waldo Trine wrote, "Scapegoats are convenient things, even if the only thing they do for us is to aid us in our constant efforts at self-delusion."

At 8 p.m. on Wednesday, April 6, the second annual Jazz Showcase will be presented in the Fine Arts Center. The Showcase, presented by the UMass Department of Music and Dance, will feature selections from ragtime to contemporary jazz as performed by members of the faculty as well as UMass students. Bruce Matton (above) is one of the featured artists. Admission is free.

From Lou, with love

LOU MIAMI AND THE KOSMETIX
Modern Method
By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Lou Miami is not a night spot in Florida.

Lou Miami and the Kosmetix are a band and they've been playing around the Boston nightclub scene for several years now. Many times, there has been talk among the Lou faithful of an upcoming record release but until this week only a single, "To Sir Wi h Love b/w Facist Lover," had this local band on vinyl.

But, now is the hour. Lou Miami and the Kosmetix have put out a debut EP, featuring six songs, and it's nifty as all hell.

Unfortunately, the band has, for whatever reason, decided not to use any of the songs that made Lou something close to a cult figure around Boston, but, again, some Lou is better than no Lou.

Side one starts with the lone standby Lou Miami tune on the EP "Italian Movie," a song which wildly rocks out. Lou delivers a couple of verses and then allows the listener to rest as the chorus slows to a crawl before sending the scene back into a frenzy. Guitarist Jack RooToo, the only band member (besides Lou of course) who stayed with the group all along, lends his surfer music-like sound to this one.

The second song, "Women in a Western Bar," is by Lou's new bassist, who is referred to in the credits as H.P. For your information, H.P. is a she, as in Laurel (the name probably gave this one away anyway) Blanchard, who handles the drums. The song is a deviation from regular Miami songs in that it jogs along instead of plunging frantically forward.

"Dance with Death," which Lou dedicated to Karen Carpenter a few weeks ago, is another haunting tune that rolls instead of rocks.

Side two features "New Romantix," one of Lou's better new songs, "Vehicle for Bar," an attempt at sounding techno, and "Monster Mash" (yes, "Monster Mash," "When you knock on the door tell them Louie sent you").

Overall, it's a good buy for Lou Miami fans but what has happened to "My Baby Wears Rubber Pants," "Blonde in a White Car," "Boy Detective" and "Shake and Bake?" Those are the songs that made Lou h a.nt something. Hopefully, this attempt at broadening his appeal will not discourage his regular fans.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

SGA politics - the same everywhere

Criticism of Student Government Association (SGA) elections and SGA politics in general at UMass is often voiced on these pages. I've often wondered if there isn't a better way to run an SGA. Surely, with all the colleges and universities in the nation, someone must do it right.

But after a month of reading a dozen or so newspapers from other schools, I'm beginning to wonder if maybe we're not doing such a bad job.

Mark Welch

Charges have been made that elections at UMass have been problematic. Stuffed ballot boxes, campaign lies, administration interference, poster removal and illegal posting of campaign literature are annual complaints, though often unfounded, at UMass.

Forget it — we're not alone, and it gets worse.

By far, the most interesting election I've read about is at the University of Washington (UW). The Associated Students at UW (ASUW) held their elections in late February, but the charges are still flying.

The ASUW incumbent president has been charged with forging the signature of a former Amerian Indian Student Association leader on an endorsement letter. Although the two "beneficiaries" of the bogus endorsement said they didn't know about it, the Elections Administration Committee recommended that they be disqualified (they had won the election). That committee was unseated, however, following charges that they were biased.

Later, a court order was needed to open an improperly closed hearing by a new committee, and the hearing lasted 14 hours before adjourning for the night. I'm still waiting for the results.

UMass isn't the only school where the so-called "Progressives" swept the elections. At the University of Iowa, the "Progressives '83" party won the election, which also included a "Students for Representative Choice" party, a "Student Reform Party" and an interesting "Beauty-Amiability-Trustworthiness (BAT) Party."

The BAT Party promised to provide more Frisbee-throwing space by filling in the Iowa River and to carpet the streets. Since a few of them won, I'm watching to see if they fulfill their campaign promises.

Election complaints filed the day of the election charged that campaign literature contained lies and posters were improperly posted and challenged the residency of one candidate.

At UMass/Boston, the losing student trustee candidate charged that the winnner had not fulfilled pre-election requirements and had campaigned in improper places. Those charges were rejected by a Grievance Committee.

Even the issues aren't unique to UMass. Senate reorganizaton, an aborted referendum effort and campaign issue, has also been proposed at Boston College and at Dartmouth. (No results yet.)

Unfilled seats and apathetic senators were reasons given for the Senate reorganization. Well, at M.I.T., only seven of 100 members showed up for an Undergraduate Association General Assembly meeting. At the University of Utah, attendance at an Assembly meeting wasn't high enough to allow passage of bylaw amendments.

Perhaps the only article on student government that couldn't be picked up and dropped into the Collegian virtually unchanged without prompting disbelief would be the University of New Hampshire's Student Activity Fee Council's proposal to reduce that fee. That, at least, proves that not all student governments are alike.

Rent control needs support

"Our house, is a very very fine house, with two cats in the yard," trying to pay the rent's so hard.

Crosby, Stills and Nash may not have to worry about paying rent, or trying to find a place to live in Amherst, but the rest of us do. Some of our complexes and housing have swimming pools, tennis courts, and even rooms with a view. We do not have many of the problems that urban renters face. But as tenants we still suffer from high rents and low vacancies.

Rents in Amherst have increased by 98 percent over the last ten years. In the fall of 1982 some rents went up as much as 30 percent. For working people it becomes harder and harder to live in town. Many residents of Amherst and the Commonwealth will be "renters for life", as the cost of buying a house stays high. Without some form of control over rents, landlords can charge what the market will bear. Because of the large numbers of students who live in the area to go to school, landlords are assured a steady supply of tenants, and low and moderate income families are forced out of town.

Vacancy rates in Amherst are extremely low. Depending on the time of year and whom you talk to, vacancies are between 1 and 3 percent. This is defined as "an emergency situation" by the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development. In December of 1982 the Amherst Bulletin contacted managers of 13 complexes representing over 2,000 rental units. They found 11 vacancies. With this kind of situation we are forced to take housing at any price.

The answer to this is rent control. This is the legal mechanism for bringing about a balance between the costs of the landlords, and the rents of tenants. Landlords, along with banking and financial interests in the country have waged a long struggle against rent control, because they do not wish to have a lever placed against their profits.

Rent control is supposed to inhibit new housing construction. A study cited by the Boston Globe, and commissioned by the State Legislative and Social Affairs Committee, refutes this. According to the study there has been no noticeable drop in housing construction in the five plus years that Massachusetts has had rent control as a local option. There has been a drop in housing starts due to high interest rates, and the general economic situation. Rent control does not mean a freeze in rents. It provides for an increase in rents based on costs for maintenance and materials, as well as labor. Approximately 40 percent of landlords costs are fixed, such as mortgage payments. Another argument made against rent control is that it erodes the tax base in a community. There is no proof of this. In fact, the only people that do gain from lack of rent control are the powerful financial forces of the community. Neighborhoods and homeowners suffer because turnover of renters is higher without controlled costs, and the tax base becomes more unstable.

Besides large scale owners of complexes and multiple housing, there are many people who rent out one or two rooms, or part of their house, to help make ends meet or make a little extra money. These people are exempt from rent control, as is new housing construction.

Housing is both a right and a necessity. The 1976 United Nations World Conference on Human Settlements in Vancouver, Canada declared: "Private land ownership also is a principal instrument of accumulation and concentration of wealth, and therefore contributes to social injustice." Across the country there is a massive shortage of affordable housing. Rent gauging, condo-conversion, and manipulation of housing stock by powerful financial interests have all contributed to this. The smaller the supply of housing the higher the price.

In Amherst, as in many other communities, people are refusing to abide by this any longer. In last year's town meeting rent control only lost by 15 votes. This year a number of landlords and realtors are running for town meeting on anti-rent control planks. There is also significant pro-rent control sentiment among other town meeting candidates.

If you are a student or resident renter, be sure to vote April 5 for town meeting members. Vote for the pro-rent control candidates if you want some control over what you pay to live. If you rent out one or two rooms in your house, think about what rent control could do to help where you live. If we all vote, rent control could win this year.

A new way to screen applicants

To the Editor:

It seems to me that basing admissions so strongly upon academic prowess is an oversold concept. Academic standards are important but not to the exclusion or belittling of other criteria.

A person of even below average ability who is instilled with qualities like industry, honesty, integrity, discipline, etc., will, on all but a few occasions, outperform one of far greater ability lacking these traits. It is also a distinct pleasure to know such individuals. They challenge the rest of us and cause us to reflect upon our own behavior.

A word could be said about the personal desire to be here. It is obvious that education or training acquired for the purposes of providing the individual with the means to serve his or her community will benefit everyone eventually while that same education acquired solely to serve selfish and materialistic interests may benefit no one or give benefit only coincidentally. Such has always been the case: illuminate a garden and the result is beauty; illuminate a carcass in a pit and the result is replusion.

Look around this University. All have come to be educated but each for a diffferent reason. Look now at the buildings: there are broken toilet fixtures, paper strewn about, graffiti on the walls, stolen articles and destroyed property. On the basis of this dreary scene it might be concluded that the administration is testing for the wrong qualities. Other personal capacities, the presence or absence of which can heal or turn rotten a living system must be considered. Unless more emphasis is placed upon them the continual degradation of this school is a certainty. The administration must begin to select more for character than they have up to now. Failure in this area will mean even the least and most obvious solution to our mounting social problems will remain pathetically out of reach. Success in this area will mean that even the complex of problems will see solutions carried out.

Is job security in jeopardy?

To the Editor:

My thanks to Michelle Hyde for her reporting of my situation to the campus community.

The issue of job security that is being played out in my case is an important one for all "02" employees. Is the University administration using my case to also break with precedent and begin the practice of a three months notice of reappointment/nonreappointment rather than following the six months notice procedure that is laid out in the Professional Non-Academic Employee Handbook?

Another question involved in my attempted dismissal is who is setting priorities for Everywoman's Center? Is the Center going to be completely de-politicized and its stated commitment to social change shunted to one side? Is the Center going to be completely shaped to serve the needs of the University rather than the needs of campus and community women?

FALL 1982 DEAN'S LIST

The following undergraduate students have earned the congratulations of the University by qualifying for the Dean's List for the Fall Semester, 1982. These students compiled a semester cumulative average of at least 3.5 with twelve or more graded credits. Fewer than 15% of the University's students meet this high standard. Congratulations!

Summer at Adelphi takes the heat off school in the fall.

There are so many good reasons to be part of Adelphi's Summer Session. Maybe you need to give more time to a really demanding course. Or want to take a business elective to round out a liberal arts degree. Or hope to lighten your fall schedule so you can put more effort into career planning. Maybe you simply want to learn ... for the fun of it.

Summer at Adelphi lets undergraduates and graduates accomplish all these things and more. In a setting that's relaxed. Removed from the pressures of the regular school year ...but close to the pleasures of the season.

Our vast choice of courses focuses on everything from business and computers to liberal arts and the sciences. We have special interest workshops for educators, and highly regarded pre-professional programs for students preparing for careers in medicine, dentistry, law and business.

Summer at Adelphi. It's learning, in a brand new light. Call (516) 663-1120 or (212) 347-9460 for complete information. Or use the coupon below.

Our students succeed.

Planning to go to LAW SCHOOL?
CONSIDER HOFSTRA UNIVERSITY'S SCHOOL OF LAW PRE-LAW SUMMER INSTITUTE

The Hofstra University School of Law will offer a "Pre-Law Summer Institute" for five weeks from March 31 to June 30 for the weekday section and for the evening section (Tuesdays and Thursdays) and from May 26 to June 25 for the Saturday section. The Institute will be of value to those already planning to attend law school or those still undecided. Taught by the Hofstra Law School faculty, the Institute seeks to develop analytical skills and to introduce the student to the law library and legal writing techniques. These are essential tools for competent performance in law school. The Institute will be conducted in the same manner as regular law school courses and will include case and statutory analyses and research techniques.

UM women lacrosse team splits over Spring Break

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

A victory and a loss opened the season for the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team as it powered over Old Dominion 9-2 last Wednesday and lost a close one to James Madison yesterday.

The Minutewomen played in the home opener against James Madison with Pam Moryl scoring three goals and Michelle Boyer netting the other two goals.

"I was really pleased with the way we played," coach Pam Hixon said. "We've had some injuries and we're playing a lot of people in different positions. We have some new people in the offense and it will take some time for them to get a feel for each other."

James Madison got on the board first at 21:08 of the first half. Less than a minute later at 20:25, Moryl tied it up for Massachusetts.

After James Madison took a small lead with two more goals, Boyer and Moryl got them back before the end of the period. At 7:32 James Madison went ahead again and held the lead at the half.

In the second half, with the score tied at five, UMass nearly took the lead, but a call did not go the home team's way. An apparent goal was scored by the Minutewomen and bounded out of the net, according to Hixon, but the officials took away the goal, claiming it had hit the cross bar and bounced out.

Hixon said she was pleased with the way Rita Hubner played in goal and also had praise for mid-field players Mary Scott, Sue Kosloski and Moryl.

Wednesday at Old Dominion, the Minutewomen bombarded the team with nine goals and Moryl and Tish Stevens led the way with three goals each. Other goal scorers in the rout included Kosloski with two goals and also Linda Haytayan.

Massachusetts, which was the National Champions last year with an undefeated league record of 10-0, will be at home again on Thursday when it faces Yale at 3 p.m.

Georgia is off to the Final Four in their first appearance in the NCAA tourney.

Gerlufsen takes control of UMass hoop program

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

Ron Gerlufsen, appointed acting head coach of the University of Massachusetts basketball program after the resignation of Tom McLaughlin two weeks ago, can now concentrate on performing as head coach.

Gerlufsen took over responsibility of the program as acting head coach March 14, when it was announced that Gerlufsen's position was "temporary" while a University search committee scanned the nation for a suitable replacement.

Now, the former assistant coach at UMass has been chosen as the best replacement for the outgoing McLaughlin.

"I consider this appointment both an honor and a challenge," said Gerlufsen. "They are a hard working, dedicated group of players who are anxious to win."

Winning is one thing the Minutemen would like to do more of next year.

Under McLaughlin the Minutemen were 16-40, covering the two year span McLaughlin stalked the UMass sidelines, exhorting his squad and pleading with officials for calls.

It was entertaining, but now UMass fans want more than flair. They want victories.

Victories are what college coaches and programs are measured by and UMass is no exception and he realizes that fact.

"UMass is a great basketball school with a great basketball tradition," Gerlufsen said. "We feel that we are once again competitive in the Atlantic Ten. We would now like to become a more serious threat for the title. The Atlantic Ten is one of the most challenging conferences in the country. If we can win the league, we'll be recognized nationally."

Hopefully, in the not too distant future, a University of Massachusetts basketball squad could be the Georgia of the NCAA tournament.

Gerlufsen, a native of Matawan, New Jersey, started his coaching career at Eisenhower Intermediate School in Freehold Township, New Jersey, before moving up to Manasquan High as a junior varsity then a varsity coach. His team at Manasquan compiled a 99-76 record, including a combined mark of 37-11 the last two years.

Right now Gerlufsen's job is to keep the UMass program moving forward. This would be a bad time to take a step back.

Dawgs, Cards, Houston, NC State remain

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (AP) — Underdog Georgia, led by James Banks and Vern Fleming, ruined North Carolina's bid for a second straight national basketball title Sunday, shocking the Tar Heels 82-77 for the NCAA East Regional championship and a trip to the Final Four.

The 18th-ranked Bulldogs, competing in the NCAA playoffs for the first time, will meet North Carolina State, Saturday's upset winner over Virginia and Ralph Sampson in the West Region, in national semifinals at Albuquerque, N.M., next Saturday.

The small but quick Bulldogs continued their victorious march in post-season play by dominating the Tar Heels inside and going on a 12-2 spree early in the second half to pile up a big enough lead to hold off a desperate North Carolina comeback.

Georgia, which got into the NCAA playoffs only by winning the Southeastern Conference tournament, knocked off Virginia Commonwealth and third-ranked St. John's to advance to the regional final. Sunday, the Bulldogs did it despite the absence of their high scorer, Terry Fair, for all but two minutes of the second half because of foul trouble.

Banks, a 6-foot-6 junior, led the way with 20 points, while Fleming and Gerald Crosby each scored 17.

All-American Michael Jordan of North Carolina scored 16 of his game-high 26 points in the first half, when Georgia led 37-35.

With Syracuse and St. John's already gone from the tournament field, a crowd of 22,894 at the Carrier Dome jumped on the Bulldog bandwagon and cheered them on as they played a close first half.

Second ranked Louisville heads for college basketball's Final Four for the third time in four years thanks to a relentless full-court defensive press that turned its "dream game" against Kentucky into an overtime rout.

The Cardinals, reeling off their 16th consecutive victory, buried No. 12 Kentucky 80-68 Saturday by scoring the first 14 points of the overtime period in the first clash in 24 years between the two Bluegrass powers.

Kentucky simply came unglued and the rout was on as the Cards, 32-3, surged to a 76-62 advantage before Dirk Minniefield's lay-up ended the Wildcat's scoreless drought with only 34 seconds remaining.

The victory sends Louisville, champion of the Metro Conference, into a national semifinal contest at Albuquerque, N.M., next Saturday against top-ranked Houston, winner of Sunday's Midwest Regional title, 89-71, over No. 13 Villanova.

Paper Work To People Work: Caucus Members Learn A Lot

by Tracey Bryant

The Third World Caucus is a small number of Third World undergraduates doing an important and necessary job.

When asked to explain the structure of the Caucus, Third World Caucus member, Robert Teixeira reported that, "Out of the Student Government Association's 120 seats, 15 are reserved for Third World Caucus members." These members are elected by the Caucus. Other members of the Caucus become senators through Dormitory or Commuter Area Government elections. The Third World Caucus elects a chairperson, usually the senior member of the group.

This year's chairperson, Adria Crum, explained that the Caucus usually votes in a block. "Often during a Senate meeting, the Caucus will convene outside to discuss a new piece of legislature. Presenting both sides of the argument we choose the side we believe to be most beneficial to the Third World community. We then return to the senate meeting and vote accordingly."

At their weekly meetings caucus members discuss current actions and pertinent issues in reference to their effect on Third World people, particularly the Third World students on campus.

The Third World Caucus is responsible for securing the needs of Third World students at UMass, Amherst. The Caucus is to insure that Third World student interests are supported in the daily processes of the Student Government Association (SGA), which is the governing student body of the University. The group also acts as a facilitator for Third World organizations unrecognized by the SGA.

In stating the purpose and goal of the Caucus, Adria Crum said, "The Third World Caucus works to secure parity (equality) within the framework of the University." George McKenzie said, "It attempts to bring to the forefront issues concerning Third World people not only nationally, but also internationally."

Members of the Caucus would like to initiate a search for a Director of Third World Affairs. According to McKenzie, they are "having difficuly in gaining certain administrators' cooperation in effectively setting up and carrying out the search." McKenzie added, "It appears as though we will need the cooperation of the Third World community on campus to abort the Administration's efforts to usurp control over the search process." Caucus members believe that having a Third World Affairs Director that understands and is abreast of Third World issues, is paramount for their continued effectiveness.

The Caucus is presently working against the New Admissions Bill which would raise minimum SAT standards for state colleges and universities in Massachusetts. They feel it will impede Third World college applicants.

Along with the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Blacks and other Minority Students (CCEBMS), and other University agencies, the Caucus is initiating a process to increase the university's recruitment efforts of Third World students.

Caucus members also stated that they intend to push to make Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday a national holiday.

To an inquiry about Caucus achievements, senator Crum replied, "As a group we've gained the respect of our fellow students and senators."

The Third World Caucus held the largest one-day voter registration drive in the history of the Commonwealth. The Boston newspaper, The Globe wrote a lengthy article describing the achievement.

Said Robert Teixeira, "Individual members of the Caucus have reached the highest echelons of the SGA: president, speaker, chairpersons of many different committees."

Caucus members feel that participation in the Third World Caucus will provide any interested Third World student with invaluable training and experience.

They detailed this statement by saying that the SGA is a microcosm of the state legislative body. One becomes familiar with parliamentary procedures, and learns to manage and allocate funds. In certain SGA positions one can learn how state trust funds operate, and there is always accounting and bookkeeping. One learns to effectively lobby on the university, state and national levels. There is also the social education dealing with racism, sexism, classism and cultural diversity.

Ms. Crum feels that her participation in the Senate has taught her "how to deal with people, particularly people who are not of color, in an effective way. I learned to circumvent those (racists) who can do damage. Also it has made me a very good judge of character. Because of my different dealings I've gone to workshops on racism, sexism and assertiveness training to bring out better parts of my personality. I've gained effective leadership skills and an analytical way of thinking."

Mr. McKenzie said, "I've learned that the democratic process as presently existing, is a farce and does not truly manifest the needs or desires of those who lack political power. It is therefore fair to say that for Third World people to achieve any kind of access to resources one must first become politically abreast, and secondly use that political knowledge to further the interests of the Third World community."

Caucus Projections for the Eighties

"As the U.S. economy struggles, the struggle of Third World people will become more intense. The '80's therefore require that the Third World community come together and utilize its consolidated strength to maintain what has already been achieved and further demand that which we've yet to achieve; i.e. making Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday a national holiday."

Members of the Third World Caucus

The Third World Caucus urges all interested Third World students to get involved with the Caucus by calling the Office of Third World Affairs at 545-2517, or by coming to a Caucus meeting. Meetings are held every Wednesday night at 6:00 in the Campus Center.

Third World Caucus Developments

by Robert Teixeira

The election of Third World Caucus member Charlene Allen to Student Government Association (SGA) Co-Presidency and the departure of Sharon Davies from her post as Speaker of the SGA were the major highlights concerning the Third World Caucus during the week of March 9th - 16th .

"I feel very good about Charlene's election victory," said Gary Lee, Director of the Office of Third World Affairs. "I think Charlene is a very competent and intelligent individual who has a good understanding and an acute insight into the complexities of her new job." Mr. Lee said when asked about Charlene Allen's qualifications.

Charlene Allen was recently elected to the position as SGA Co-President with Tom Ahern. As Co-President, Charlene will serve as the student representative on the Board of Trustees UMass, while Tom will mainly be responsible for on-campus issues and representation.

As student trustee, Charlene places herself in a highly responsible position. "As a Trustee I get to make decisions on Trust Fund Allocations to the various academic departments and vote on all tenure decisions for University professors," Charlene said when asked how she would most effectively represent student interests on the Board of Trustees. She also added that "Given the fact that UMass students elected a Black woman to the position, should do a lot to change some of the values and understanding of a few older trustees."

In other news concerning the Third World Caucus, Sharon Davies, Speaker of the SGA announced her planned departure from her position at last Wednesday's Senate meeting. As a Third World Caucus member and executive officer of the Senate, Sharon took on a position of great responsibility. Responsible for the operation of and presiding over all Senate meetings were a few of her job duties.

When asked about the accomplishments during Sharon's one year tenure as Speaker, Joel Weissman, Executive Director of Students' Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), said that she "stemmed the tide of negativism." "Senate people felt that they were doing something good." He said. Weissman added that "Sharon left the Senate in a stronger position by making headway on questions concerning control of the SATF and by articulating those problems to students."

Budget Co-Chairperson, Jennifer Kirby agreed. "I feel Sharon has been a strong force in resolving many of the problems concerning the control of the SATF."

And finally, Charlene Allen said that "As a woman of color, Sharon in her capacity as Speaker has inspired many Third World students to get involved."

In other news, Third World Caucus member Eugene Bull was elected to the position of co-chair of the SGA Budgets Committee along with current co-chair, Jennifer Kirby.

The Martin Luther King Jr Cultural Center

By Keith Johnson

The Martin Luther King Jr. Cultural Center is located in Dickinson House in the Orchard Hill Residence Area. The Center provides academic, social and cultural services for students who live in the Orchard Hill and Central Residence Areas.

Spotlight

The center was revitalized in 1981 after a long period of virtual inactivity. At that time it was known as the Orchard Hill Cultural Center but in the spring of '81, students dedicated the Center in the name of Martin Luther King Jr.

The King Center is equipped with a typewriter, stereo, library, and office space. There are also ping-pong and pool tables just outside the Center in the dorm lounge. The soft lounge chairs and magazines make the Center a great lounge area where students of color can come relax and exchange experiences. Most nights it is a quiet study lounge.

In the past year the Center has put on numerous events such as movies, poetry readings, and dinners. There have even been jazz performances in the center recently. These social and cultural gatherings have been enjoyed by the students from all across campus.

The Center is funded by Orchard Hill and Central Area Governments and is run collectively by a number of students who live in the area. Soon a part-time coordinator will be selected to assist with the administration of the Center.

Get Involved in Nummo!

Get involved!! The time is ripe for students who've always wanted to learn how an independent Third World weekly is produced, because NUMMO is extending a special invitation to interested persons to come on down and check us out!!

There are a whole range of skills, technical, creative, literate, artistic and otherwise, that go into newspaper production. All are encouraged to find out how to expand their capabilities and contribute to an important collective effort at the same time. The Black, Latino, and Asian-American communities should take the time to remember and consider the fact that NUMMO is the community's mode of cultural, political, social, philosophical and multi-dimensional expression. It exists to voice the concerns of underrepresented groups, concerns that are traditionally overlooked or distorted in the mainstream media. These concerns should not be centered around the negative elements of life in Amherst, in New England, and in the United States. These concerns include anything that constitutes a dynamic response to the flow of history, to change and possibility, to the educational process, all of which influence our lives as students of color at the University of Massachusetts.

WHAT IS NEEDED IN NUMMO NEWS ???

NUMMO needs students who are willing to take the responsibilty for continuing the process of communication through words, thoughts and deeds. NUMMO needs the responsiveness of the community in orderto accomplish its goals. The power of the written and spoken word is its use in teaching and questioning, in analysis and interpretation, and especially in its use for expression! This is not some mystical power but speaks to the nature of human life, right now, in the world we live in. NUMMO asks that you, the reader, consider taking an active stance toward your education, through involvement in any form,particularly since there are so many options available, even within NUMMO itself!

The DuBois Corner

by Keith Johnson

W.E.B. DuBois was one of our greatest Black historians. This feature is dedicated to his life struggle and depicts the history of Blacks in America.

On February 1, 1960, four Black students from nearby North Carolina A+T brought students into the forefront of the civil rights movement by sitting down at the all-white restaurant counter at the Woolworths Store in Greensboro, North Carolina.

When the students tried politely to ask for service they were ignored but they sat there until the store closed. The next day they came back with the support of 25 other students. Soon even white students joined in the sit-ins.

Within several months the peaceful protest led to the opening of the counter to all races. But what is more important is that within two weeks the sit-in movement had spread to 14 cities in five southern states. The student movement captured the heart and soul of the civil rights movement and increased it's momentum that was felt all over the country.

Leaders from the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) tried to organize and take over the sit-in movement by making suggestions that the students should concentrate on the Woolworth's chain. But the students did not accept CORE trying to take the lead in this movement, in which no other organization had decided to take such a bold approach as this before.

But the students at North Carolina A+T had had a history of political activity. They had boycotted local movie houses that had cut out scenes with Negro actors and they booed the governor three times when he once used the word "nigra" in a speech. Unlike other Black college campuses, North Carolina A+T had eighty student-controlled organizations, a unique situation for a public institution.

During the sit-ins that followed students were spat on, burned with cigarettes, slapped, beaten, called "nigger", and even bomb threats were sent to stores that were allowing sit-ins. Upon arrest some were beaten by police and others were hosed by firemen. In the first 6 months 1600 students were arrested.

The Greensboro sit-in of 1960 immortalizes the students of that era as being in the forefront of the civil rights movement. But students did not stop there. They were also very active with Martin Luther King, Jr., NAACP, and SNCC. Student involvement can be considered one of the most influential parts of civil rights movement and students of this era must continue the struggle.

Everywoman's Center Services Calendar

According to most Resident Coordinator Heads in UMass dorms, the amount of information undergraduate women have about their own sexuality has shrunk dramatically since the '60's and '70's. The majority of women did not, even then, have lots of information about sex. Information about woman's sexuality has usually, in modern times, been relegated to infirmaries, as if sex is a purely anatomical "objective" function, separate from relationships, thus further distancing from the workings of their bodies.

The recent increase in the society's general intensity of fear and repression has made it even harder for people to risk exposing their ignorance of such tender and personal areas.

For Third World Women, the difficulty of obtaining information about sexuality is further compounded by the intimadationg, white, male atmosphere of health clinics; a history, for most Third World groups, of bad experience with family planning clinics (such as sterilizaton abuse, careless prescriptions); and for many, an upbringing in which result of this ignorance, for all young women, is unwanted pregnancies and power draining relationships with boyfriends.

For all these reasons, when the Third World Woman's Program of the EWC asked BCP and CCEMBS what kinds of workshops the Third World woman at UMass might find particularly useful, many of these women asked for a series of workshops which would not be intimidating but would be informative and relaxed. The Spring Workshop Series were all held in comfortable, familiar places, and all but one was run by a Third World Woman. The workshops used: slides, handouts, models, and snacks were provided for the curious and the hungry.

Press Release

The University of Massachusetts has recently completed arrangements for an exchange agreement between UMass and the Universidad de los Andes, Bogota, Colombia. The exchange will be open for both students and faculty from the Five Colleges.

Students who participate in the exchange will live with Colombian families and must speak Spanish. Universidad de los Andes offers a full program of study including arts and sciences, administration, engineering, architecture, law, economics and philosophy. The goal is to have four students exchange in each direction beginning the Fall 1983 semester.

This new agreement promises to provide an exciting opportunity for students who wish to study in Latin America and for faculty interested in expanding their teaching experience abroad. More information can be obtained at the International Programs office, 239 Whitmore at 545-0746.

The two workshops for women only, "Sexual Violence" and "Assertiveness Training," addressed issues which are often ignored by, or separated from, typical informational discussions of sexuality. Sexual Violence is a confusing issue for many women because in many cultures (including U.S.), a man's slapping or raping a woman is seen as a sign of love, an act of passion rather than the act of violence, which in fact it is. Many women do not know if they have been battered, especially if a friend or lover is committing the violence. Lack of assertiveness is a problem which especially plagues us gentle women. In the "Assertiveness Training" workshops, women began to learn to say "NO," when they meant no, and, "YES," when they meant yes.

In addition to organizing workshops and films series, the Third World Woman's Task Force of the EWC is open to all as a resource for direct service information, and referrals.

Hadley vote threatens Northampton bus routes

By TRICIA YACOVONE
Collegian Staff

Traveling to the malls, the movies or fast food restaurants to satisfy the late night munchies will be made more difficult next semester for most students if Hadley withdraws funding for the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA).

Last week at the Town Meeting, Hadley's citizens voted to withdraw funding for the PVTA buses, which travel from Amherst to Northampton, making six stops in Hadley, including the Hampshire and Mountain Farms malls. If this proposal passes, it will go into effect on July 1.

The citizens at the Town Meeting voted unanimously to withdraw their $15,000 in funding because the federal reimbursement of $80,000 that is proposed in the budget still has not been processed. Therefore, the town may be liable for this money, said Joseph Zgrodnick, chairman of the Hadley Planning Board.

The decision resulted from the prevailing sentiment that the townspeople do not get enough use out of the bus system, and while the town expenditure has increased by 150 percent in the past three years, the quality of service has not, according to Zgrodnick.

PVTA has rejected the Hadley decision, claiming that under the Massachusetts General Laws, Chapter 161B, Section 15, the town has to hold a special ballot election regarding the issue before it can legally withdraw from a regional transit authority, Selectman Donald Pipczynski said.

Although no formal date has been set for an election, the issue will be discussed at a selectman's meeting to be held next Tuesday night, Pipczynski said.

If the legislation passes, the lack of bus service in Hadley will undoubtedly have adverse affects on students at the five colleges and the merchants of the area.

Meanwhile, many students who are employed in Hadley may have to find other transportation to work if they now rely on the bus service. Liz Arsenault, a junior psychology major, said she needs her job at Burger King to pay for school and rent.

"The buses don't even go often enough now, and sometimes I even have to hitchhike because there hasn't been enough room on the bus, I don't like hitchhiking at all, but it will probably be necessary when the bus service stops," Arsenault said.

"A lot of people count on that bus to get to work, and I don't know what they're going to do either," she added.

Stadium concert cancelled; UPC plans alternative event

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

There will be no stadium concert at the University of Massachusetts this spring, but an alternative event will be held, according to Union Program Council (UPC) Talent Coordinator Bill Prichett.

The show, which was to be held in Alumni Stadium at UMass, was cancelled because UPC was unable to book talent with enough drawing power to fill the stadium. "The talent just isn't out there," Prichett said.

Many performers do not begin their summer tours until after the event, he said.

"We will hold an outside show on campus. However, we won't let people know where or when it will be held until very close to the show," Prichett said. The purpose of this is to prevent non-students from attending the show, he said.

A rough plan for the alternative event has been devised by UPC, but Prichett is not sure of whether UPC will plan a single show or series, as was held last spring.

"We have to present our new proposal to the Undergraduate Student Senate and ask for money (to underwrite the show) before decisions are made," Prichett said.

The show will, however, include a wide variety of talent, although none is planned as of yet, he said.

Prichett plans to announce there will be no stadium show at the student senate meeting tomorrow night. The new proposal will probably be presented at the meeting held the following week, he said.

Earlier in the semester the Student Senate had voted to underwrite $199,000 for the stadium event.

Tip tax withholding results in skimpy checks for some

By VIRGINIA WARFIELD
Collegian Correspondent

Some area waiters and waitresses say their paychecks yield no money now that a new tax law has gone into effect at the start of this year.

"With the new law in effect, I now receive negative paychecks" said Barbara Bagge-Rynerson, a senior majoring in education at the University of Massachusetts, and a full-time waitress at Fitzwilly's in Northampton.

The law, according to a description provided by H & R Block, requires tipped employees of large food and beverage establishments to report to the Internal Revenue Service tips on at least 8 percent of total sales.

For instance, if a waiter or waitress sells $1,000 worth of food on a particular day, he or she is automatically taxed on $80 in tips, whether $80 is made or not.

And many times the employee's sales and the amount taxed on them exceeds what would normally be a week's pay. This is the case with Bagge-Rynerson.

She said often the employees "owe" money on their checks because of insurance or too much taxation.

"Now I'm working only for my tips," she added. "What do I do when the tips aren't there?"

Amy Hartnett, another Fitzwilly's waitress, said this can be a problem. She said many people don't think they need to tip at all.

"I've seen customers leave as little as $1.75 on a $23 check. What happened to the standard 15 percent," she asked.

Though the "standard" tip should be about 15 percent, the new law taxes the waitperson on only 8 percent. However, as in the situation Hartnett mentioned, some tips fall below this rate and the employee is overtaxed.

Some waiters and waitresses feel that customers who cannot afford to tip should realize that they also cannot afford to eat out.

"People don't understand that now our income is solely dependent on the tips they leave."

However, not everyone is subject to taxation by the law, said Bagge-Rynerson.

Michael Davey, a senior management major at UMass, and a waiter at the Deerfield Inn in Deerfield, said he is not affected by the new law.

According to the provisions of the law, establishments with less than ten employees on a particular day are not required to comply.

"We never have enough people on a shift," Davey said. "Not even on our busiest nights."

Another UMass student, George Parry, is bartender at Plumbley's, off the Common in Amherst. He claims the law does not hurt the bartenders as much.

"I've seen the waitresses get zero paychecks, but it's not as bad for us," he said.

Asked if his customers ever "forget" to tip him, Parry replied that people usually will leave something.

"But if there's a happy hour and the beer is cheap," he said, "most people don't tip at all."

Subway death trial gets first verdicts

BOSTON (AP) — Before recessing for the night, a Suffolk Superior Court jury returned a partial verdict of guilty yesterday evening against two white men charged in the death of a black man allegedly chased onto train tracks.

The panel of 11 whites and five blacks found Francis X. Devin, 20, and William M. Joyce, 19, both of Boston, guilty of three counts each of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

Judge Roger Donahue sequestered the panel until 9:30 a.m. today.

Devin and Joyce are charged in the death of William F. Atkinson. The 30-year-old Boston maintenance worker was struck by a train on March 13, 1982.

The panel got the case at about 11 a.m. Monday, and took several breaks for questions and a lunch recess.

In closing arguments before Judge Donahue, prosecutor John J. Kiernan said Friday that Devin and Joyce — who are among five charged in the case — deprived Atkinson of his rights when they allegedly forced him onto the tracks in front of an approaching rapid transit train.

All were accused of hurling bottles, shouting racial epithets and chasing Atkinson and a white companion, William Grady, 24, of Boston into the Savin Hill station of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority.

Defense attorney Geoffrey Packard warned the jury Friday not to allow the concept of racism to impede deliberations.

"The prosecution is charging that because of race, and for no other reason, Mr. Atkinson jumped onto the MBTA tracks," Packard said. "But the concept of racism is not on trial here. Indeed, that concept has been tried and convicted several times."

Haddad called obstacle to peace talks

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Lebanese news media and Israeli sources said yesterday that the role of militia commander Saad Haddad, Israel's ally in southern Lebanon, is the last obstacle to progress in the troop withdrawal negotiations.

"The talks remain deadlocked because Israel insists on giving Maj. Saad Haddad and his militia a major security role in the South," the Lebanese state radio reported as U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib returned to Beirut from Israel with no indications of a breakthrough.

The U.S.-Israeli-Lebanese talks on the withdrawal of foreign troops from Lebanon resume Thursday in the Israeli border town of Kiryat Shmona. Israeli sources, who asked anonymity, agreed that settlement was blocked by the dispute over Haddad's future role in security arrangements to keep the Palestinian guerrillas from returning to south Lebanon.

The Lebanese government last week rejected Israel's demand that Haddad, who defied the Beirut government and set up his own territory along the Israeli-Lebanese border, be reinstated in the Lebanese army and put in charge of security arrangements in the South.

"The Israelis contend he has more experience than the newly restructured Lebanese army in combating guerrillas," the Lebanese radio said. Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir was quoted as telling Habib that Israel "learned to work with (Haddad) and we can rely on him" to keep the guerrillas out of range of the border.

Full costing policy still faces campus opposition

Editor's Note: This is the second article in a three-part series on the Trust Fund Management Policy and "full costing" at the University of Massachusetts.

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

The Trust Fund Management Policy approved by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees last month was the result of over two years of campus and University-wide study, but many campus administrators still oppose the "full costing" policy, which will cost each UMass student over $100 per year.

Most of the trust fund managers and other administrators interviewed said their opposition to the policy was not seriously considered during planning stages and that once the policy was proposed, suggestions that the policy not be put into effect were ignored.

"I don't see any turnaround," said one trust fund manager. "There aren't any positive benefits for students paying the fees."

But pressure from the UMass President's Office kept those administrators from publicly opposing the policy, and none wished to be quoted, fearing retribution.

Some opposition was voiced publicly, of course. Student leaders opposed full costing throughout the process, and some trust fund managers argued against specific parts of the policy.

But when the trustees considered and voted on the policy, no campus administrators were allowed to publicly oppose the proposal, and UMass President David C. Knapp gave no indication that there was any opposition on the Amherst campus.

The necessity of the policy was challenged by many administrators. No payments had previously been made for the central services included in the new 2.4 percent full costing charge.

"I don't see any turnaround," said one trust fund manager. "There should be a trade-off, but I don't see any tangible offset. There aren't any positive benefits for students paying the fees."

But several administrators also admitted they had been getting a "free ride" by receiving the central services at no charge.

"No one wants to pay more money for anything," said one.

A common fear among administrators is that full costing might be more strictly implemented in future years. Services by high-level administrators (the President, the Chancellor and the vice-Chancellors and their staffs) are not now charged to the trust funds. Snow removal and groundskeeping services by the Physical Plant are also not passed on, and many trust funds pay either nothing or very low rates for utilities.

"How far can it go? We really don't know," said one administrator.

Other colleges and universities charge for all central services, and student fees are much higher at those schools. In a few cases, campus trust funds at other institutions have been used to subsidize academic areas by charging higher-than-reasonable rates for full costing, according to one administrator.

Several administrators complained about "double-dipping," or paying for full costing more than once. Some trust funds already pay for some of the central services included in the full costing charge, but must also pay the charge.

The Residence Halls Trust Fund pays $88,000 for salaries of employees in the Bursar's, Accounting and Personnel offices. The Boarding Halls Trust Fund pays $36,000 for additional salaries in those offices.

But those trust funds will not be permitted either to subtract the payments from the full costing assessment or to stop making the direct payments. The financial managers of both trust funds said this was unfair even given the full costing policy approved by the Trustees.

Also, payments to Physical Plant, which are considered a part of full costing by some administrators, are still assessed the same 2.4 percent rate as other expenditures.

Some administrators argued that money being transferred to other trust funds was being "full costed" twice: once by charging the trust fund making the transfer, and again when the money is spent by the trust fund receiving it.

Full costing charges on bond payments were opposed by many administrators. When guidelines were sent out last year, administrators were told not to pay the full costing rate on those payments or on transfers, but this guideline force each trust fund to pay 2.4 percent on all expenses.

John L. DeNyse, vice-Chancellor for Administration and Finance, compared this method to a "flat rate" income tax. Rather than allowing complicated deductions and charging a high "tax" rate, a low rate can be charged on all income. While the total collected is the same, paperwork is reduced using the "flat rate."

Voluntary funding bill may number MassPIRG's days

By MITCH ZEMEL
Collegian Correspondent

A bill has been filed in the Massachusetts state legislature to reorganize the funding of Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) chapters, which one student leader is calling "a serious attack on student rights."

Cindy Jacques of the University of Massachusetts' MassPIRG chapter said the bill, filed by state Rep. Joseph Manning, D-Milton, would change the MassPIRG funding from a "waivable" system to a "charitable" system.

Last year a compromise was reached with the UMass trustees, which changed the funding from a mandatory refundable system, which allowed students to get a refund if they did not want to support MassPIRG, to a waivable system. The waivable system now in effect requires students to check off the two dollar charge on tuition bills if they don't want to fund MassPIRG.

The proposed charitable system would remove the funding from the tuition bill and would make all contributions voluntary.

The Joint Education Committee will hold a hearing on the bill on Wednesday. State Rep. James Collins, D-Amherst, is the committee chairman. Two weeks ago about 50 people met with Collins to discuss the bill. According to Jacques, Collins was "favorably impressed" and said that he would make an effort to defend student rights.

Approximately 30 UMass students will go to Boston on Wednesday to talk to committee members and testify at the hearing.

"It would be very difficult for a nonprofit organization to get money on the soliciting route," said Greg Dillard, legislative aide to Collins.

Jacques said that MassPIRG "would not survive in terms of being effective" if the charitable system were to take effect.

According to Jacques, when the compromise was agreed upon last year, everyone was satisfied and felt that there would be no need to go through it again.

"This isn't being done to save students the two dollars," Jacques said. "People are getting their toes stepped on by PIRG, and they don't like it."

"If we weren't getting anything done they wouldn't attack us. We just want to show them that we're there and not sleeping," she said.

Jacques said that she hopes 100 people from around the state will attend the meeting.

Student Escort Service back in operation as two-credit offering generates interest

By MARY BALDWIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts campus may be a safer place to walk around due to the Student Government Association (SGA) Escort Service which was scheduled to make its first runs of the semester last night.

The student run service provides a man and woman team as escorts Sunday through Thursday, 7:30 p.m. to midnight. The routes run to and from the UMass libraries, Orchard Hill and Southwest.

Reports of assaults on campus, inadequate lighting and a lack of help phones prompted the establishment of the escort service program in the fall of 1981, said Anne Maynard, co-coordinator and co-founder of the program.

The service was inoperative during the fall of 1982 because of a lack of volunteers, she said. This semester, two credits are being offered to any student who each week works as an escort for two and a half hours and attends a two and a half hour seminar offered by the Department of Human Services. "We decided we needed an organization to make people feel safe on campus," Maynard said.

After its first year of service there was a decrease in vandalism, Maynard said. Vandalism decreased from 259 reported incidents during the 1980-81 academic year to 224 during the 1981-82 academic year when the service was in operation, according to statistics from the department of public safety.

"If people can be observed they are less apt to do something wrong such as break a window," said Mary Dumas, Staff Assistant to the Director of Public Safety.

The escorts stop at the Campus Center information desk and Goodell library as well as the library tower. "They will escort anyone who wants to walk with them," Maynard said.

Maynard said the service is not offered on Friday and Saturday nights because there are so many people on campus those nights that nobody will be walking alone. "There is safety in numbers," she said.

"The primary concern of the escort service is to provide students with access to academic needs such as the library," said Dumas, who has worked with the escort service in its program development. "The weekend traffic is to and from parties, not to and from the library, except at finals time," she said.

There are other contributing factors along with the escort service that have helped to fight crime on campus, such as improved lighting, said Larry Holmes, Assistant Director of Public Safety. Another critical part of the success of the escort service has been the emergency telephones on campus, said Dumas.

"The phones are mechanical. The person is important. The phone can be there but if no one is willing to use it, you're out of luck," she said. The escort service provides the people who put the phones to their best possible use by using them to report crime, she said.

An 18-year-old University of Massachusetts student, arrested Sunday by UMass police on a default warrant for non-payment of a fine or bail might also be charged with possession of stolen property, UMass police said yesterday.

When police entered the man's MacKimmie dormitory room they found a traffic light and several traffic signs. Police confiscated the stolen property but the man has not been charged with possession of stolen property, police said.

Police did say that either the man or his roommate will be so charged but the case is still under investigation.

Police yesterday also reported a stereo receiver valued at $250 missing from a room in John Quincy Adams dormitory in Southwest. The receiver was reported missing between midnight and 12:10 a.m. yesterday.

The complaint reported three subjects entered his room to use a phone and then left. The man went to the floor lounge, leaving his door unlocked and when he returned the receiver was missing.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Studying on campus is hard to do

There seems to be a plague festering at UMass, one which has probably been here longer than herpes and will probably continue to be here years after herpes is cured. This annoyance is Nuisance Librarious (medical reference) or commonly referred to as a pain in the ass. Unfortunately, the disease is found in every major study spot on campus. Even as I write, the affliction has infiltrated this study space I so carefully chose.

Michael Byers

The disease takes two forms. (It actually takes more than two but I am in no mood to write a three volume book.) The library newcomer is the most flagrant of the species. Take as an example a person, who after fifteen weeks of searching, finally stumbles upon the steps of Goodell or the Tower or anyplace else the university houses books. Unfortunately it is finals week and I, along with 20,000 others are attempting to study in quite seclusion. I have always asked myself the question: "Why are they here?," which is always followed by the nastier inquiry directed at the violators themselves: "Uh, excuse me, what the hell do you want from my life and why are you making so much noise?" This is my favorite.

The real kick is observing them. It is sort of like watching cancer cells develop under a microscope. First, you can hear them talking as they walk into the library, especially in the area where people are hardest at work. Interestingly enough if you stand in a corn field in Hadley you could also hear them talking from there. These people do not whisper, they holler at each other. Then they proceed to devour an eighteen course meal. I really wouldn't mind the food, especially if it was something like jello. You know, a nice quiet food. No, they bring what seems to be a small truckload of Doritos, and they crunch for an eternity with their mouths open. But wait, dessert is bubblegum. I'm waiting for the Wide World of Sports to film the Biggest Bubble Contest here. In a quiet room the sound of a bubble bursting sounds like a small nuclear explosion. These people are on a virtual mental vacation and are giving me a nervous breakdown.

However, my favorite little quirk that I have against all these pains-in-the-asses is listening to them before a major exam. SBA library before a Marketing 301 exam. This is the creme-de-la-creme. There is no worse feeling in the world than hearing 150 people panic simultaneously. I think it can only be compared to a real big league disaster, like an earthquake or heartburn. Psychiatrists love these people. What makes them so special is that they have waited until the proverbial last minute and rather than study, they bitch and moan. The most prepared student in the world who sits among this is sure to fall to pieces. If you ask them to be quiet you will either be told to drop dead or be told that they were whispering. Please remember this. If someone asks you to be quiet, they did so for a reason. Better yet, when you do come by the library for your annual visit please leave your lunch buckets and neurosis at home.

Star Wars plan is dangerous

The controversy over the defense budget rages on in Washington. President Reagan is lobbying hard for his five-year, $1.6 trillion military buildup, and a liberal minded Congress is seeking to cut that figure to a more reasonable amount. Last week, the showdown came to a head. The House voted for a budget that would cut the president's proposed ten percent increase in defense spending for fiscal 1984 down to four percent, despite much pressure from the White House. Their vote came minutes before a nationally broadcast speech by the president, in which he would take his case for more defense spending to the people.

Randolph T. Holhut

In that speech, Reagan painted a picture of American weakness and Soviet strength. He spoke of the Soviet Union's massive military buildup, and how the U.S. lagged behind in several key areas. He showed pictures of Soviet installations in Central America and the Carribean. In short, the Soviet menace is getting worse, and we must do something about it.

Reagan again denounced the nuclear freeze, he urged Americans to write their representatives in Washington, and let them know that they want increased defense spending, in order to keep this country safe.

If that wasn't bad enough, Reagan also proposed a massive program aimed at "eliminating the threat posed by strategic nuclear missiles." New defense technologies, like high energy lasers and particle beam weapons, would be developed to destroy incoming nuclear weapons. "Killer satellites" and other exotic hardware would be developed also. This plan, derided as "Buck Rodgers" and "Star Wars" type technology, would in the president's words, "give us the means of rendering offensive nuclear weapons impotent and obsolete."

The United States is currently spending about $1 billion annually on research and development of these sort of weapons. At the current rate of development, they will probably not be operational by the 21st Century. Evidently, instead of pushing for elimination of nuclear weapons, the Reagan administration would rather find new ways of fighting a nuclear war, using the aforementioned technologies as a way for making the thought of a nuclear war more plausible.

The administration is still pushing for the "zero-zero" option, where the U.S. would not deploy any missiles in Western Europe in return for the Soviets dismantling the many missiles they have aimed at Europe. But they are also pushing for the M-X and other new missiles and delivery systems, like the B-1 bomber and the Trident II sub, to get the nukes there. And despite any peace overtures by the administration, they still want to move forward on the $1.6 billion defense buildup.

So, what does it all boil down to? President Reagan is still fighting the cold war, still preaching the "peace through strength" theory, and is still resolutely against a nuclear freeze or similar type of arms reduction plan. Congress doesn't seem to be buying any of the president's rhetoric and neither do the American people. Peace is not achieved by building more weapons, peace is achieved by trying to get rid of them.

Watch out for Uncle Sam

To the Editor:

IMPORTANT NOTICE REGARDING FINANCIAL AID.

On the green form sent out from the Federal Department of Education (not sent out by UMass) there is a sentence which says that everyone applying for aid is required to sign the Statement of Educational Purpose/Registration Compliance. THIS IS UNTRUE for two reasons.

One: the regulations approving this statement are not finalized (only the proposed regulations have come out) and therefore they should not be allowed to include that on the form.

Secondly and more important: the law (Solomon Amendment) which requires proof of registration (if of that age and sex) before obtaining financial aid has been ruled UNCONSTITUTIONAL. This is a nationwide injunction. The Pell Grant hotline office in California admits that despite the fact that their form says that everyone is required to sign that statement, that is in fact not true. NOBODY is required to sign the registration part of the statement.

According to Bruce Bidle of the Pell Grant hotline office, schools cannot hold up aid if you do not sign the registration part of the Statement. Further, if the ruling changes and you are required to sign such a statement at a later date you will be given notice and several chances to sign.

For more information call the Pell Grant office toll-free at 1-800-638-6700.

Panel member's quote wrong

In an article headlined "Women's development projects subject of Peace Corps talk" (Wednesday, March 16) I feel a statement I made was taken out of context and may therefore be misconstrued. I quote from the Collegian, "Assuming universal subordination of women can cause misconceptions." In my panel talk at the conference entitled "Life in the Global Village — World Development Issues" the thrust of my point about this particular issue was that I do feel there is universal subordination of women but that each culture must be looked at individually in order to understand how that subordination manifests itself. The article made it sound as if I don't believe there is universal subordination of women, which is wrong. I also object to the fact that the incorrect statement was set off in quotes as if I had been interviewed by a representative of the Collegian, which I was not. Finally, this panel was part of a larger event which was not mentioned — it was part of a 2½ day conference which should have been mentioned in the reporter's coverage of this one event.

Tartuffe exudes comic energy

TARTUFFE
Thursday, March 17
Fine Arts Center

By JANINE BRUNELL
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts was recently honored by a visit from the Acting Company whose production of Tartuffe was both pleasurable and well performed. No doubt a comedy written during the period of French Classicism in the 1660's has a limited appeal to today's audience. Nonetheless, Moliere's Tartuffe remains an active part of our contemporary repertory. Concerned with religious hypocrisy the theme from Tartuffe is far from outdated, however, I think the sheer comic pleasure of the play is what appeals to the modern audience the most. An evening with the Acting Company's production of Tartuffe was educationally and comically fulfilling.

The actors, coming from such widely acclaimed drama schools as the Julliard School and Yale Repertory, gave performances that were as impressive as their biographies. Philip Goodwin, although not the corpulent man originally intended (the part was written to the irony of Tartuffe's adamant declaration of being a man of religion and fasting) did a wonderful job of portraying the play's namesake - Tartuffe. His display of hypocracy, sensuality, false humility, and greed was done with skill and ease, and he succeeded in creating a thoroughly detestable man. Both the audience and Orgon's family react to him with barely subdued contempt.

Of course, Tartuffe's false piousness is complimented and only allowed to exist because of the blind stupidity and naivete of the wealthy Orgon. Richard S. Iglewski played the gullible extremist with a wide range of comic skill that arroused his family's and the audience's impatience. Orgon shows the extent to which he has been taken in by Tartuffe when he insists that his daughter Mariane marry him, and when he disowns his son for Tartuffe's sake. The son Damis, played by John Stelin, is a man of harsh words who thinks before he acts in much the same manner as his father. Magaret Reed played the unfortunate daughter Mariane well, but perhaps with a few more whines than necessary.

The young and beautiful Elmire, the wife of Orgon and recipient of Tartuffe's passion, was played well by Megan Gallagher. Although all but ignored during the beginning of the play, Gallagher reaches her glory in Act IV when she unmaskes Tartuffe, and proves to her husband that he is a fake. With Orgon hidden under a table and Elmire falsely displaying a passion for Tartuffe, the scene is extremely funny in and of itself. However, the comic acting of Megan Gallagher succeeded in heightening the humor still more.

An excellent performance was given by Lynn Chausow as Dorine. Dorine is the maid of the house, but she is not the typical quiet maid that does only as she is told. Dorine's purpose in the play is to show the extent to which others are exaggerated in their behavior. Lynn Chausow played Dorine with such comic skill that the audience was literally begging for more. My one complaint is that Dorine becomes such an obscure character after the introduction of Tartuffe. What a shame to create such a charming and funny character only to have her practically disappear.

Recognition should also be given to Ray Virta as Valere and J. Andrew Mc Grath as Cleante. Virta does a wonderful job of portraying the lovesick fiance and McGrath is completely believable as the "common-sense" figure of Cleante.

All in all, the Acting Company's Tartuffe was all that I had expected. The acting was impressive and the whole expierience was really enjoyable. For those of you who missed Tartuffe, if the chance should arise again... don't hesitate to take it in!

Double trouble: calling all twins

The UMass Department of Theater keeps coming up with more resourceful and creative ideas for promoting upcoming productions. The latest gimmick is to get identical twins to attend Comedy of Errors, Shakespeare's story of twins separated at birth. Complimentary tickets will be given to identical twins in exchange for their photos, which will be displayed in the lobby of the Rand Theater during the week of the show.

Dick Trousdell, who directs the production, and Andrew Dolan and Lenny Egan, who play the roles of the twins, recently talked about the problems of trying to realistically portray identical twins. "If someone looks exactly like you, then who are you?" Trousdell mused. He decided that the best way to understand the play's central characters was to interview several sets of identical twins. He asked them about their experiences involving being twins, specifically how they felt about trying to fool others about their identities, often being misidentified, and having strangers constantly ask their parents if they were alike in personality, interest and temperment.

One man Trousdell interviewed remembered getting in trouble for things his twin brother had done wrong, when they were very young. His parents finally dressed them in different colored sneakers in order to distinguish the two. This twin was very defensive when confronted with the notion that twins are mentally and emotionally the same. He explained that despite their identical physical appearance, twins have very different abilities and interests. Such statements should hopefully give Dolan and Egan some insight into the characters that they are going to portray.

Identical twins wishing to take advantage of the free ticket offer should contact publicist Leslie Stainton as soon as possible at 545-3490. All photos submitted for display will be returned.

Comedy of Errors will be performed by the University Ensemble Theater on April 7, 8, 9 and 13, 14, 15, and 16 in the Rand Theater, FAC. Ticket information is available through the Rand Theater Box Office at 545-3511.

Johnny be good

SOUTHSIDE JOHNNY
Thursday, March 17
Student Union Ballroom

By SCOTT HERSEY
Collegian Staff

From the wild rock n' roll opening of "Talk To Me," through "Trapped Again," "Vertigo," and the closing "All I want is Everything," the Jukes gave the crowd a real old fashioned rock n' roll show.

As usual, there were different members of the band than the last time they were here; including an entirely new horn section. I've heard rumors that the usual "Miami Horns" are on tour with Diana Ross. The new horn players did well for themselves; however, It's when they punch those sharp holes through the taut melody of the soul songs that I find myself itching to dance.

And for a change, the band even previewed a few new songs, which seem to show more of a distinct dance beat than any of their previous stuff.

Maybe after all these years, Southside is trying for a hit single.

Call me old-fashioned. And I know that high technology is what music is all about music today. But give a show like this anytime, a couple of beers and some friends to dance with, and I'll be happy.

And it seems like a lot of people agree.

It was about 10:40 p.m. on St. Patrick's Day when Southside Johnny and the Asbury Jukes finished their encore song, "This Time It's For Real," Southside - a small man with spiky red hair and an impish grim that seemed perfect for the holiday - thanked the crowd, and wished everyone a good night. The 10-piece band then departed the stage; leaving only the soft red backlighting of the stage lights and legions of wildly screaming fans.

But the houselights in the packed Student Union Ballroom didn't come on. This meant that the band would come back for one more song. And everyone knew what it would be.

That's when it happened. It started as a murmur. But gradually more and more of the crowd picked up on it till it grew to a full-fledged chant.

The crowd hadn't bothered to wait for the band to come back. They were singing the Jukes' signature song, Sam Cooke's "We're Having a Party."

When the band did come back on;they held their microphones out to the crowd and let everyone sing the entire first verse before breaking into the jaunty rhythm of the old classic.

And , like always, they found a new way to rework the song- this time with rock n' roll organ and saxophone solos- and everyone danced, sang along, and generally had a good time.

They've been around for a while. Their shows never really change that much. They're always a little too loud. And I never miss a chance to see them.

Because of the large size of the band - two keyboardists; two drummers, bass guitar; and four horns - they can be really versatile. At the snap of a finger; or a count to three, they can jump from the heavy rhythm and blues of "Waiting on Your Reply," to the pure soul of "Keep Our Love Simple," to the blues of the introduction to Bruce Springsteen's "The Fever," at almost a moment's notice.

But the best part is that no matter what they play, they make you dance, smile, and have fun.

Southside: a heart-wrenching performance.

James Brown — the godfather's still rockin'.

A little bit of soul

JAMES BROWN
Thursday, March 17
Rusty Nail

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

Imagine you're a little bit overweight. You're standing at the back of the stage after having sung for about an hour and a half when all of a sudden, a man in a white tuxedo steps up to the microphone and shouts your name. The lights are hot as the audience too begins shouting your name over the grinding dance beat. Finally, you step up to the microphone and cooly say "That's me." Congratulations you're James Brown.

With horns blaring the Godfather of Soul, James Brown, and his band, the JB's performed their rhythm and blues review at the Rusty Nail. Brown, whose voice isn't quite what it used to be, sang for about two hours using the "James Brown/That's me!" routine about four or five more times. The show is a well thought out "show." There was nothing particularly spontaneous about it, but the act was effective as hell. From the opening notes, the crowd was dancing like someone had put muscle relaxers in the beer.

Running through classics like "It's a Man's Man's World," "Papa's Got a Brand New Bag," and "Please, Please, Please," Brown let the band do most of the people moving. During "It's a Man's Man's World," Brown stopped to pay tribute to some of the greats of our time, Otis Redding, Janis Joplin, B. B. King, and John Belushi. It was pretty funny. But, of course, it was great. The man can do no wrong!

One of the great vices the Nail held for Brown is that the stage was just not big enough for the man to dance. Perhaps for other acts, but Brown had a nine piece with him. He did do a few on his patented backstep/twirls/sidesteps. He even went for the famous cape trick at the end of "Please, Please, Please."

At a time when most white musicians are returning to black music to replace their own lack of creativity and their own need to dance, it is extremely refreshing to see the unadulterated original. A recent ad for James Brown in the Village Voice "defies you to find a hotter show" and I would be inclined to agree. James has the art of crowd manipulation down pat, and it was a blast.

In order to get the crowd ready, Mitch Chakour warmed up with a tight set of rock and soul music. Backed up by Urban Renewal (who are nowhere as interesting on their own), Chakour got the crowd ready with a particularly fine version of "You Can't Judge a Book by it's Cover." I would recommend going to see Mitch as a reasonable substitute for James Brown if you want to dance.

Borderline virtuosity

ADVENTURES IN SUBURBIA
(Downtown Records)
Urban Renewal

By DAVID CHEVAN
Collegian Staff

Local fusion artists, Urban Renewal, have finally released the first ever locally recorded and produced album. The tracks were put down and mixed in the Multi-Trax studio in Northampton, but they sound almost as good as anything out of L.A. Writer Bob Cummings has put together some exciting melodies and the band plays them with a flourish that is borderline virtuousity.

Urban Renewal is a six, sometimes seven man outfit with a lineup of local name players who are about the best in the valley. They have a regular Wednesday night gig at Sheehan's Cafe in Northampton, where they have honed their material down to a tight but freewheeling jazz-rock sound.

The material on the album is so catchy I don't know which tunes I should detail. One song in particular, Clearwater, is currently being turned into a video. The song is about Clearwater, Florida, and it takes little imagination to feel the soft breezes and hot sun burning down on you. Something Samba is an impeccable mix of latin and straighter rhythms. During the solos, sax player Bruce Krasin takes a wild double tracked solo with himself. The two lines weave in and out of one another in a manner that leaves you begging for more, so later in the tune Krasin blows even hotter lines against a burning, but tasteful Cummings synthesizer line.

The song I like most is a quiet number Cummings wrote for drummer Doug Plavin's newly born daughter, Jya. Several understated lead lines move into a guest harmonica appearance by another local talent, Mitch Chakour. Chakour's solo is a model of melodic beauty. He manages, in only a few bars, to capture the exact feeling of the piece and bring the whole song into a new sphere. Guitarist Joe Belmont's subsequent solo also stands out as one of the best on the album.

Belmont is no shirker, and his two writing contributions, Everything's Gonna Be Atright, and One Word, both groove with a smoothness that is ever so fine. All in all, this is one album you should get for the spring weather. Just pop it into your Walkman and you can be ready to take on anyone and anything.

The album is currently available in cassette form only. You can get it directly from the band at any of their regular Wednesday night Sheehan's gigs, or at Backroom Records in Amherst, the Union Records Unlimited in the Campus Center, Dynamite Records, and the Globe Bookstore in Northampton.

UM softball gears up in South Carolina

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

After a shaky start in which the University of Massachusetts softball team dropped their first two games of the year, the Minutewomen ran off an impressive seven game winning streak, posting wins over Rutgers and South Carolina during the team's trip down to South Carolina last week.

"It was our best trip down ever," said head coach Elaine Sortino. "I feel really proud of the team. The defense was incredible. Tough as nails. Both pitchers proved themselves."

The team jelled during the trip. The defense solidified, the pitching came around and the hitting was there.

UMass, after winning a exhibition against East Strousbourg, dropped two tough games to Michigan, 2-0 and 6-4. An infield bunt decided the first game and in the second, a UMass rally fell short.

Massachusetts took their next three with wins over Grassboro (5-2), Ohio University (3-0), and Seton Hall (9-1).

Freshman pitcher Cathy Reed, who compiled a 5-1 mark last week, threw a two hitter against Atlantic 10 rival Rutgers enroute to a 1-0 UM win. Senior All-American catcher Jackie Gaw hit a home run in the 4th to win the game.

UMass disposed of South Carolina, who had just won the Oklahoma Tournament — a very prestigious division I tourney, 3-1 in their next game. Freshman outfielder Beth Talbott hit a three run homer in the fourth to provide the winning margin. It was the first time in three years that UMass had beaten SC said Sortino.

Thursday's game with Rutgers was snowed out and the next day Ohio U. fell in two games, 8-0, and 4-1. Reed had a no-hitter in the first game and narrowly missed a perfect game. She retired 22 batters in a row.

"The team played tough all week and they played great," said Sortino. "They were diving all over the place all week long."

Throughout the course of the week, everyone at one time or another turned in a spectacular game and/or play.

The defensive lineup used in South Carolina featured Gaw behind the plate, freshman Sally Mahar at first, senior Debbie Pickett and sophomore Missy Oman rotating at second, All-American junior Allyson Rioux at short and All-New England senior Chris Coughlin at third.

While the freshman Reed and Lynn Stockley handled the pitching, Talbott, junior Tina Coffin and senior Mary Ann Lombardi combed the outfield.

Sophomore pitcher Patty Masury wasn't able to pitch due to a back injury.

After such an optimistic trip, Sortino thinks that UMass will have to be considered number one in New England. They will have a chance to prove that as they open their northern slate on Thursday with a doubleheader against Brown at home. Rival Rutgers, just itching for another shot at UMass, will be here for two on Saturday.

Gymnasts 2nd in Atlantic 10

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team ended a successful season Saturday, placing fifth at Regionals held in West Virginia after compiling an 11-2 season record and taking second place at the Atlantic Ten Championships.

Although the Minutewomen had a rough meet, according to coach Ken Anderson, they scored 169.05 points. There were no individual placings, however, but Anderson said freshman Sue Allen had a fine performance on the uneven bars.

"We put together a good team this year," Anderson said. "The judges came down hard. I was hoping we could move anywhere from fifth place to first. The ladies did very well considering the injury problems we had."

The Minutewomen did have a decent season even without two of the team's top all arounds. Freshman Tricia Harrity was out for a good part of the season with an ankle injury. Senior Janice Baker was out for most of the year with a nagging knee injury.

At the regional, UMass was consistent in the vaulting event. Anderson said the Minutewomen were scored hard and should have been scored higher.

The women did not have a good day on the uneven bars, but the balance beam and floor exercise events turned what could have been a disappointing day into a respectable performance.

"Our floor team looked pretty good," Anderson said.

Most of the Minutewomen will be returning next year, as the team will lose only two seniors. Baker and Karen Knapp closed out their gymnastics careers this season and performed well for the Minutewomen.

Aggies end year, 14 - 1

By GERRY deSIMAS

The Stockbridge basketball team ended up with an outstanding 14-1 record for the 1982-83 season. The Aggies, who had an eleven game winning streak at one point, have won 24 of their last 25 games.

The leader on coach Jack Leaman's squad was senior John Paquette of South Hadley, who was chosen as the team MVP. Paquette was the squad's leading scorer, averaging 19.9 points a game.

Paquette was not the only senior on the Aggie squad. Senior Craig Manning led the team in rebounding (10.3) and fellow senior Mike O'Connor led the team in assists (4.0 per game).

Paquette was not the only senior on the Aggie squad. Senior Craig Manning led the team in rebounding (10.3) and fellow senior Mike O'Connor led the team in assists (4.0 per game).

Underclassmen also made important contributions. Pittsfield freshman Chris Storie was the team's second leading scorer (15.7 a game).

Stockbridge took double wins over Hampshire College, Southern Vermont, Greenfield Community and Holyoke Community, and the margins of victory never fell lower than 13 points.

The only loss of the year was in 'the battle of Amherst' against Amherst College, a division III school. The Lord Jeffs proved to be too much for the Aggies and they suffered only their third loss in two seasons.

Besides Paquette, O'Connor and Manning, Andrew Fritsche, Shawn Cameron, Dennis Houle, and Pearl Keyes will graduate. Storie, John Biondo, Garth Dickson and Peter McDonough will return next year for coach Leaman's hoopsters.

Dunks-booming; blocks-mean the MVP belongs to Green

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

It was a season of highs and lows, of peaks and valleys, of turnovers and turnarounds, hirings and firings, and heroes and villains.

And when the end finally came and the dust began to settle on the 1982-83 version of the University of Massachusetts Minuteman basketball team, three things were certain:

The team was playing better basketball and that makes the future look bright for next year.

Ron Gerlufsen will be at the helm of the Curry Hicks Cagers, not Tom McLaughlin, who disappeared in a puff of smoke just days after the team lost a tough 79-73 Eastern Regional semifinal game to Rutgers University in the Atlantic Ten playoffs.

And, last but not least, Edwin Green emerged as one of the more dominant players the Cage has seen in some time.

Apologies extended to super freshman John Hempel, an Atlantic Ten All-Rookie selection for his efforts this year, and of course, sophomores Donald Russell and Horace Neysmith, two stablizing "veterans" on the young Minuteman squad. But, when the selection committee for the Collegian Men's Basketball Sportswriter's Most Valuable Player Award (CMBSMVPA for short) got together, the thought of an Edwin Green two handed slam danced in his head.

And Edwin Green did a lot more than just dunk the ball. When asked to compare Green's shot blocking abilities with past UMass players, Stockbridge athletic director and UMass women's golf coach Jack Leaman held Green in high esteem.

"He can play with anybody with the exception of probably Julius (Erving)," Leaman said and he should know. Before taking over his present duties he was the Minuteman head coach for 13 years including the tenure of one Julius "The Doctah" Erving, now of the Philadelphia 76'ers.

"The thing I remembered most about Edwin Green," Leaman continued, "was whenever there was one rebound up there that they had to get, he got it. He played the entire year like a winner."

Gerlufsen, who only recently was able to start decorating his new office, saw the improvement of Edwin Green as the result of one main ingredient, desire.

With the team hitting the post-season, it is time for Gerlufsen to figure on what aspects of the game to work on in order to continue to bring Division I basketball back to UMass.

Gerlufsen has a lot of tools to work with. Only Ron Washington, the senior point guard, will be missing from the regulars and A.J. Wynder, who never really got his chance to play before getting hurt, will be absent (Wynder withdrew from school, according to Gerlufsen).

Back will be Hempel, the new record holder of the UMass freshman scoring mark. He led the Atlantic Ten in field goal percentage from outside the three-point line and emerged as a genuine offensive machine capable of taking control of a game.

Back will be the intense concentration of Russell and the night-to-night consistency of Neysmith. Ron Young and Darryl Carter will continue to improve and improve and improve, Bobby Braun, Skip Connors and George Ramming will enhance the attack, they've already got a new kid named Jackie Sheehan and rumor has it that Tommy Emerson wants to make his presence felt next year.

And showing the way will be Edwin Green, a ballplayer who has taken his various skills and put them to good use. A man deserving of more than token recognition in a college newspaper. A winner.

"If he continues to make that kind of improvement," said Gerlufsen, "then next year he's gonna be someone that people will have to reckon with."

Professor Dean Alfange, who was recently appointed Acting Provost, responds to a question in his office Monday.

Professor Alfange is appointed acting provost

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Newly appointed acting Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and Provost Dean Alfange said one of his first challenges in his new position will be to aid the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate in developing an amended version of the general education curriculum proposal that has been hotly debated by the entire University faculty during past months.

"There is no consensus in the Faculty Senate on this question," Alfange said in an interview Monday. "I'd like to come up with a proposal that will achieve a consensus."

"I'd like to come up with a proposal that will achieve a consensus (on General Education)." Dean Alfange said.

Alfange, who began work as acting leader of academic programs last week, said that while he is familiar with the work of the Faculty Senate's Ad Hoc Committee on General Education, he plans to meet with the committee before making any specific suggestions for revisions in the proposal.

"The general education committee has come up with a number of interesting and exciting proposals that need to be evaluated," Alfange said. "It may be we ought not to change, but I think you never know until you have examined proposals for change."

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey announced that Alfange would serve as acting vice chancellor, replacing Loren Baritz who will be away from the University until he begins work as an adviser to the chancellor and a full-time professor in the UMass history department.

Alfange will receive an annual salary of $52,000 for his work in the University administration. He received $45,930 for his work as a political science professor.

Baritz will be on vacation from his duties at UMass until he begins his new job in June.

"His (Baritz's) accrued (vacation) time runs to June 1 and if he doesn't take it, he'll lose it," Duffey said.

Duffey said he expects the provost search committee to complete its work by June 1, allowing him to place the new administrator in office by August.

Until the new provost arrives on campus, Alfange will be responsible for all the administrative duties of the provost in addition to his duties as a professor.

"I have two full-time jobs," Alfange said while sitting behind his steel desk in his office in Thompson Hall. "The problem is going to be adjusting to the fact that I will have no spare time until this all ends." He is currently teaching two courses on constitutional law.

Alfange, who served as acting provost from June of 1975 to October of 1976 after former Provost Robert L. Gluckstern left UMass to become Chancellor of the University of Maryland, said he does not want to become permanent provost.

"I'm doing it because somebody needs to do it," he said. "It's not what I want to do. The chancellor asked me to do it and I could not reasonably think of an excuse that would not have been applicable for somebody else he asked to do it."

Alfange came to UMass in 1967 as an assistant professor in the political science department with an undergraduate degree from Hamilton College, a master's degree from the University of Colorado and a doctorate from Cornell University.

In 1970 he became acting dean of the faculty of social and behavioral sciences until he was appointed permanent dean in 1971. After taking a leave of absence from the University in 1977, Alfange returned to the political science department in 1978 as a tenured professor.

Faculty Senate survey rejects General Ed. plan

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The General Education Curriculum Proposal now before the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate is not supported by a majority of senators, who responded to a recent survey by the Collegian.

The survey was sent to all 111 senators. Anonymous questionnaires were returned by 46 out of 111 surveys mailed out.

The survey asked senators whether they supported the three motions of the proposal which the Senate is expected to vote on at its next meeting April 7.

All three motions were defeated in the survey.

The general education issue is, according to one senator, a "political hot-cake" which has "divided the Senate and caused infighting which may take a while to heal."

Debate within the Senate has focused on three major issues: the Breadth of Knowledge proposal, the Freshman Seminar and the cost of instituting these two parts of the proposal.

In the survey, many senators said because their questions concerning these issues have yet to be answered, they could not approve the motions.

The first motion calls for the replacement of the present C, D, and E distribution (core) requirements with six, four-credit courses from disciplines more strictly defined than core requirements. Of the senators responding to the survey, 22 opposed this motion and 19 favored it. Five senators were undecided.

One senator expressed disapproval with Breadth of Knowledge because it "ignores the diversity of background and interest of students and tends to homogenize the curriculum."

One of the major concerns raised by senators concerning the seminar was the cost of such a program.

"The Freshman Seminars appear to be a good idea, though I believe that the proponents of this proposal have grossly underestimated their impact financially," wrote one senator.

Several senators expressed approval of the motion and the Freshman Seminar.

"The seminar will give teachers and students an opportunity to finally be able to interact with one another the way they aren't currently able to do," responded one senator.

The seminar is an "imaginative idea which should be given a try," responded one senator.

Another question on the survey asked senators whether they approved of the motion calling for the establishment of the administrative structure for education.

The motion was defeated 19-8 with six senators undecided.

A question asking senators whether they supported a foreign language requirement was supported by a 16-13 margin. The Senate will not vote on a foreign language requirement.

"A top-to-bottom rewrite is unnecessary. We should keep the current (core) requirements, but we should release (reduce) the number of options," wrote another senator.

One senator expressed support of Breadth of Knowledge calling it "long overdue."

"The present system has no rationale except that it helps departments in their 'turf' protection."

The second motion calls for the approval of the Integration of Knowledge component of the proposal. Within Integration of Knowledge is the Freshman Seminar. While the Senate has debated the entire proposal this semester, the Freshman Seminar has proven to be the most controversial and heavily debated motion.

In the survey, the motion was defeated 23-16 with eight undecided votes.

"It will require a tremendous amount of resources to teach the rather vaguely-defined seminar. It just isn't worth it," responded one senator.

MANAMA, Bahrain — Patches of a growing, 100 square-mile oil slick from Iran floated closer to the island-nation of Bahrain and other Persian Gulf countries yesterday threatening "untold environmental and ecological damage," experts said.

Fears were expressed in Bahrain that the 6-week-old slick — which could not be cleaned up immediately because of the Iraq-Iran war — was capable of "engulfing the whole island" of 360,000 inhabitants. The crude from two bombed oil fields, continued to gush into the widening slick.

In the neighboring state of Qatar, second in the line of the slick's main area, the government issued a statement urging youth to "be ready to respond to the call of duty when asked."

Experts from 19 oil companies met in Bahrain and issued a warning that unless a partial cease-fire was arranged between Iraq and Iran in the blazing and leaking area of the Nowruz oilfield, the entire Persian Gulf would "become one vast oil-lake."

Iraq and Iran were not represented at the Bahrain meeting. But Iran has declared its readiness to cooperate in caping the bombed oilfields.

Iraq has made no firm response so far, and the Iraqi Embassy in Manama refused any comment.

The statement by the 19 oil companies warned that the damaged wells "have the potential for untold environmental and ecological damage, and the total combined anti-pollution equipment available would be of little use unless top priority is given to the repair and capping of the wells — the source of the continuing pollution."

The statement urged the two warring nations to declare the Nowruz field zone, south of the main Iranian oil terminal at Kharg Island, "an operationally safe area for as long as it takes for repairs to be effected by international experts, who are on continuous standby waiting for the go-ahead."

Kharg has been a favorite target of Iraqi bombings. The Iranian ambassador to Kuwait has accused Iraq of preventing colleagues of American firefighting expert Red Adair from operating at Nowruz.

The envoy also charged that the Iraqis were using the threat of the slick to exert pressure for a cease-fire in the 31-month-old gulf war but asserted the Iranians were ready only for a partial truce in the affected area.

Beharain's newspapers said the islands may have to fight "a sacrificial" battle against the advancing spill — maneuvering the slick into areas with the least inhabitants and to econmic installations so as to spare fishing waters and the vital water desalination plant at Sitra island.

Kohl, Christian Democrat victory freezes out Green Party

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Traditional political parties barred the anti-NATO Greens Party from key posts in the new Parliament yesterday and formally elected Chancellor Helmut Kohl, whose Christian Democrats swept to victory in national elections.

The Greens, who paraded to the Parliament building in jeans and sweaters with supporters playing bongo drums and waving flowers, voted against Kohl and boycotted his inauguration.

The Greens were shut out of the five-member presidium that chairs the chamber. All the other parties are represented on the presidium.

That meant no member of the Greens, whose anti-nuclear views are feared by many in the Parliament, will ever be able to control the gavel and thus the debate in the West German Parliament.

The Greens also saw their chances of getting on some other important committees sharply reduced after the Bundestag voted to keep the chamber's old rules of order.

The rules include a proportional system of committee representation. That means the Greens probably will not be on some smaller committees at all, including two that deal with internal security and terrorists.

Some conservatives have worried publicly about the Greens' access to state secrets discussed in committees. Several members of the Greens have said they will reveal state secrets, despite parliamentary secrecy rules, if they believe it to be in the public interest.

The decision barring them from key posts was blasted by Greens deputy Willi Hoss, who charged the established parties were abusing the minority.

"When the traditional parties represented in the Bundestag refuse our request (to be on the presidium), they are signaling the way in which they will treat minorities in the country," Hoss said.

A Greens' statement announcing the boycott of Kohl's swearing-in said the chancellor was "responsible for policies that endanger the existence of our people," a reference to his backing a NATO plan to deploy new nuclear missiles in Western Europe later this year.

NORTHAMPTON — A man accused of smashing rows of private airplanes in a late-night rampage with a snow plow, was released yesterday on condition that he voluntarily return to a state mental hospital.

Northampton District Judge Alvertus Morse said psychiatrists at Bridgewater State Hospital had found Robert A. Borucki, 34, of Northampton, competent to stand trial.

But saying "I don't think it would be good for him to be out in the community," Morse released Borucki without bail on condition that he return to Bridgewater.

Morse also directed hospital officials to inform the court three days in advance if Borucki sought to leave before his next scheduled court appearance, April 7.

Ten planes, costing up to $30,000 each, were destroyed and 13 others damaged in the bizarre incident Feb. 17 at the LaFleur Airport. Richard Giusto, part-owner of the airfield, estimated the total damage at $500,000.

Most of the smashed planes were plowed into each other in a tangled jumble of twisted propellers and torn fuselages as they sat on a field adjacent to the runway. Six were shoved into a storage hanger and pulverized with the plow.

Borucki was arrested the following night at the downtown Northampton rooming house where he lived.

Since then, he has been held at Bridgewater on two charges involving damage to one of the planes and the four-ton dump truck, equipped with wing plow, that was used to smash the aircraft.

Accused arsonist—mental patient incompetent for trial

Two women were killed in the fire last year in downtown Northampton.

Superior Court Judge Charles Alberti made the ruling after a court-appointed psychiatrist, Dr. Harry Michelson, examined Sandra Gosselin. He ordered her sent to Metropolitan State Hospital in Waltham for observation as a possible step toward involuntary commitment.

Miss Gosselin, 35, was charged with arson and murder in the February 1982 fire in a Main Street apartment building that killed Leona Andrus, 71, and her daughter, Jean Maslowski, 47. The women were trapped in a third-floor apartment.

Reagan arms compromise may break talks deadlock

WASHINGTON — President Reagan yesterday sent a compromise arms proposal to Soviet negotiators to take back to Moscow in hopes of breaking the deadlock on limiting medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe, a senior administration official said.

Reagan personally refused to comment on the development, but promised he would have an announcement on the subject today.

The president said he deliberately has made it clear in the past that "we would negotiate in good faith on any legitimate proposal" and that his "zero-zero" plan to eliminate all medium-range missiles in Europe should "not be taken as a complete, take-it-or-leave-it proposition."

In an interview with six journalists, Reagan said the zero-zero formula remains his ultimate goal. As to the planned deployment of U.S cruise and Pershing II missiles in Europe at the end of this year, Reagan said, "We've never retreated from our position that we are going to deploy on schedule."

Refusing to discuss developments in the arms talks, Reagan said, "We've made no change in our own goal, but beyond that I can't speak until tomorrow."

Reagan's proposal was outlined in Geneva, Switzerland, by chief U.S. negotiator Paul Nitze on the last day of the talks before the recess, according to a senior administration official who refused to be identified. The compromise calls for an interim agreement that falls short of Reagan's "zero-zero" plan.

House, Senate pass gas tax, increase to occur Friday

BOSTON — The Massachusetts House and Senate agreed last night to increase the state gasoline tax just over a penny, to 11 cents per gallon, effective Friday.

Combined with an increase in the federal fuels tax, it means a total tax increase of 6.1 cents per gallon April 1 above what motorists pay now.

Without a new law, the state tax on gasoline would drop nearly one cent on Friday. It now is 9.9 cents per gallon and would have dropped to about nine cents.

After legislative leaders announced agreement on a bill, the Senate quickly accepted it, 19-13, and the measure then won approval in the House, 85-57.

The tax increase, which was being linked to increased scholarship aid for higher education, was expected to be signed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis last night. James Dorsey, a spokesman for Dukakis, said the governor would sign the bill in private at home.

Final action was needed by yesterday in order to give the state time to send notices to gasoline dealers, it was reported.

"We're voting a bad deal for the Massachusetts taxpayer," said Sen. Paul Doane, R-Harwich.

Two weeks ago, the House voted for Dukakis' original recommendation of an 11-cents per-gallon tax, but the Senate voted for 12 cents last week.

The Senate proposal would have committed the equivalent of a penny on the tax, or $20-$25 million a year, to new scholarship aid.

Charlestown men charged in rape of 17—year—old girl

BOSTON — Seven men were arrested yesterday after a 17-year-old girl told police she was abducted at a bus station, taken to an apartment and gang raped.

Police said two women came to the apartment during the attack, but did nothing to help the girl and left after asking if the men were having a "good time."

"Nobody did anything to assist her in that apartment," said detective Sgt. Francis Graham, who headed the investigation. "They saw the girl there and made a statement to the effect, 'you boys having a good time?' and left."

The women were not charged. Under Massachusetts law, it is not a crime to fail to aid a victim.

The seven men were arraigned in Charlestown District Court, where Judge Mary Brennan set bail ranging from $2,000 to $50,000 cash or $20,000 to $200,000 bond.

They walked into the courtroom with jackets hiding their faces and kept the jackets over their heads when they rose to answer the judge's questions.

Financial aid allotment doubled to $30 million

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

State leaders late yesterday agreed to double the amount of state student assistance, climaxing more than one year of lobbying by student aid proponents.

The House of Representatives passed and the State Senate passed and enacted an appropriations bill increasing the Massachusetts General Scholarship Program to $30 million for the next academic year from the present level of $15 million.

After the House votes to officially enact the legislation, which is usually a formality taken after initial passage, the bill will go to Governor Michael S. Dukakis for his signature.

According to several legislative and press reports, Dukakis has promised to sign the bill as part of a compromise proposal drawn up by legislative leaders.

The need for a compromise arose when the House passed a one-cent per gallon gas tax, proposed by Dukakis. The Senate passed a two-cent gas tax hike, earmarking the additional one cent for student aid.

"We acceded to the size of the gas tax," Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, who along with Sen. Chester Atkins, was the major supporter of an increase, said. "They agreed to an up front, $34 million (scholarship) appropriation."

The increase will mean that more students will be able to receive a scholarship and each scholarship will be larger. Presently 75 percent of the financially needy students who apply for a State Scholarship are denied aid because of lack of funds. Currently the maximum scholarship a University of Massachusetts student can receive is $300.

Olver said it was important that the increased appropriation be passed quickly because the State Scholarship Office must notify students soon so that the aid can be used for next year.

Budget confusion reigns around full costing issue

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is the final article in a three-part series on the Trust Fund Management Policy and "full costing" at the University of Massachusetts.

The dollar impact of the "full costing" policy approved by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees last month is still not clear, but it will cost each student at least $100 per year.

When the policy was submitted to the Trustees for approval, the impact was expected to total $104.18, according to Stephen Saudek, budget director for UMass President David C. Knapp. But Saudek later admitted that he had not taken inflation into consideration in his figures.

And some administrators predicted that although efforts are being made to "soften the blow" of full costing, higher-than-normal fee increases will occur in the 1985-86 school year after reserves are depleted.

Another concern was that the full costing charge, which will increase from 2.4 per cent in 1983-84 to 2.7 percent in 1984-85, could be increased further in later years, since some indirect services provided using state funds are not included in the "full costing" charge.

The fee increases due to full costing are difficult to separate from inflation and other increased costs, but this year's budget confusion caused each trust fund to prepare two complete budgets, reflecting the impact of full costing.

Without full costing, student fees, room and board would total $2,753, a $35 increase over this year. When full costing charges were added, the total rose to $2,791.50, a $73.50 increase.

The "impact" of full costing this year could then be interpreted as a difference of $38.50 between the fee increase proposals. But some trust funds will be offsetting increases using reserves established last year, effectively delaying the increase until next year or the following year.

A "full costing reserve" was established last year to offset the policy's expected impact on many trust funds. In addition, reserves were set aside to pay for an expected fringe benefit assessment which has not yet been charged. That amount needed for the reserve was overestimated, however, so that many trust funds will be able to use excess fringe benefit reserves to pay for full costing this year.

After the Trustees voted on the policy in February, Saudek said the full costing and excess fringe benefit reserves would be taken away by the University to offset "Past years" of unpaid expenses. But that was changed to allow the reserves to offset fee increases in the 1983-84 and 1984-85 budgets.

"This takes the total impact and divides it over a longer time span," said Saudek. "It softens the blow."

But some administrators said that the reserves were being used to conceal the total impact of full costing by delaying it until the 1985-86 budget. Several of them predicted severe increases for that year. Saudek, however, denied this was the case.

After the full costing policy was approved, the Residence Hall Trust Fund, the largest trust fund on campus, requested no additional fee increase. But some of the assumptions made at that time may not come through, and the level of services in the dormitories might not be kept up.

According to Ann Koski, assistant director for finance for Housing Services, the revised budget assumes that excess construction funds from the UMass Building Authority will be used for some repairs and that bond payments will not be made for Project 1 dormitories (Brett and Gorman). But those two changes might not occur, following confusion at the February meeting of the Building Authority after a presentation by legal counsel.

If the authority money isn't received and if the extra bond payment must be made, Koski predicted new services planned for next year might be cancelled and repairs might have to be further delayed in order to avoid an extra fee increase.

Several other trust funds which did not increase their budgets after the full costing policy was approved also expect to cut back some services to pay the charges. Included in this are the Student Activities Trust Fund and the Athletic Trust Fund.

Jeol Watson, financial manager for the Student Health Services Trust Fund, said that reserves would be used to partly offset the full costing impact this year.

Campus Center Director Bill Harris said new revenue from the Campus Center would be used to offset the full costing charge, almost completely offsetting a planned $9 fee reduction originally proposed by the Campus Center.

The money generated by full costing has not been allocated yet. Saudek said the money would be used to boost activities in "areas which have had longstanding need" but which have been unable to expand because the trust funds had caused central services costs to rise.

Despite suggestions by student government leaders that the state Legislature might reduce the UMass state budget to reflect full costing, Saudek and DeNyse both said they considered that option unlikely.

No matter what the money is used for, student fees will rise, and campus administrators will have lost a long battle.

Handicapped Affairs offers vital transportation services

By MIRIAM ZOLL
Collegian Correspondent

Approximately 400 University of Massachusetts students could not attend classes at the Amherst campus if they were not provided with van transportation and other services by the Handicapped Student Affairs Office located in the Whitmore Administration Building.

Tory Grenier, a second year clinical psychology graduate student uses the van services every day to get to and from school.

"The van service is very good," Grenier says, returning from classes via the van. She also hires personal care assistants, another service offered by the office, to record her texts.

The van service is, however, the most utilized service provided by the office. Overcrowding is a problem this semester.

"Spring semester brings bad weather and ice and snow, and students depend on the van more," Caroline Gould, a full-time staff member and van driver for the Handicapped Student Affairs Office says as she adjusts the locks on a student's wheelchair.

Gould says the van drivers work a tight schedule. "If I'm scheduled to meet someone at 2:30 p.m. and they're not here by 2:35, I leave. The schedule is too crowded to wait five extra minutes for someone who is late," Gould says.

Maria Leanders says she is displeased with this semester's van service.

"The vans are always backed up with students and it's impossible to get on the schedule because it's booked up two months in advance," Leanders says from the back seat of the van. "I have been forced to cancel many appointments because I couldn't get rides because the van is on such a tight schedule," she says.

She has used the van service for four semesters and this is the first semester she has had problems with her scheduling, she says.

Paul Appleby, coordinator for the Handicapped Student Affairs Office, says the bad spring weather and additional temporary injured students add to the crowded van scheduling.

"An increase in staff and vans would help the problem but we do not have the funds to do this," Appleby says. The Alumni Association has provided money for equipment and vans in the past.

The Handicapped Student Affairs Office also has equipment to accommodate deaf and blind students. "We have a brailling machine, a large print typewriter for the vision impaired, audio tapes, American Sign Language interpreters and volunteer readers," Appleby says.

An estimated 50 students with severe disabilities use the office's services regularly. Another 100 students use the services each semester due to temporary injuries such as broken legs.

"All the services our office provides are free to all students," Appleby says. "Personal care assistants and volunteer readers are paid by the students who hire them, but the handicapped students are reimbursed by Massachusetts Rehabilitation and Medicaid," he says.

Before 1973, no significant funding was allotted to handicapped services at UMass. Renovations to make dormitories and academic buildings wheelchair accessible are financed by the Housing Office and Student Affairs. Approximately $100,000 a year is allocated by the state to Handicapped Affairs for staff salaries and office expenses.

Gould says the most frustrating part of her job is dealing with the pedestrians on campus.

"They get in the way and don't move. It's really tiring when I'm trying to rush students to class and the walking students get mad because the van is driving on the sidewalk," she says.

"This job helps me deal with other people's disabilities," Gould says. "After driving around with the students and building friendships with some of them you realize that disability or no disability they're just people."

Selectmen debate rent control

By MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

At the Amherst Selectman's meeting last night a town meeting warrant, which pertains to rent control, as well as three other petitions was reviewed.

The petition to renew rent control was introduced on the grounds that Amherst is a university town and many people are looking for temporary housing. The petition was introduced by Deborah Dizard who said because there are few vacancies in housing, the marketing system is not working, therefore rent needs to be regulated.

It is proposed that a rent-control board be set up that will be supported by fees paid by the renters. Out of the 4,500 rental units in Amherst, about 3,000 would be affected by the rent-control board. The board will represent the renters.

Other issues under the warrant included a motor vehicle excise tax exemption for prisoners of war. License plates will be granted to the P.O.W.'s, of which there are 7 in Amherst. The majority of people affected by this will be older than 55, predominantly from World War II.

The third issue under the warrant pertained to a zoning amendment. This petition dealt with 37 acres of land on East Hadley Road in Amherst, near Brittany Manor Apartments. The petition contained a suggestion to build rental units on the property and the effects of this were discussed.

The last issue on the warrant was similar to one introduced in May, 1982, which was concerned with a design plan for the town of Amherst. It suggests the redesigning of certain areas in Amherst, such as the land behind Jones library. It was proposed that the money for this would come from grants from the Executive Office of Communities and Development.

FAC equipment reported stolen

Perpetrators partly dismantled a storage room door in the backstage area of the Fine Arts Center concert hall Sunday evening and stole an amplifier and five microphones, University of Massachusetts police said yesterday.

Police valued the equipment at $1,500. Damage to the door and room was minimal and has since been repaired, the production manager for the Fine Arts Center said yesterday.

In other police action:

— Dominoe's Pizza has filed charged of larceny and forgery against several John F. Kennedy Tower residents in a case involving bad checks, police said.

The checks, from a stolen account that has since been closed, have been used by the suspects since December. The case is under investigation.

— A six-year-old bass guitar valued at $1,000 was reported missing from a room in Chadbourne dormitory yesterday. The guitar was last seen before spring break, police said.

— A case involving an 18-year-old UMass student and his roommmate and possession of a stolen traffic light and signs has been suspended, police said.

The youths said they found the light in a Weymouth town dump, but Weymouth officials reported no traffic light either missing or stolen. The youths also said the signs were purchased at a tag sale.

Employee denied job in contract controversy

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Staff

A decision was reached not to renew the one-year contract of Mary Wentworth, coordinator of the Poor Women's Task Force at the Everywoman's Center (EWC).

Wentworth, who filed a written grievance against the University Office of Student Affairs, said there was no basis for the decision not to reappont her to the position she has held since December 1979.

"The University has violated the established policy on the amount of time professional non-academic employees are supposed to be given on decisions of appointment and reappointment," Wentworth said. She said employees are to be given six months notice and she was given only three months notice.

Wentworth said she was told in December that a decision would be made in March. "I think the decision was made in the vice-chancellors office, as early as last July," she said.

The decision was made in response to a second evaluation of her work, conducted by Special Assistant to the Chancellor, Robert Welch, Wentworth said. The Director of the Everywoman's Center, Ruth Weekes-Washington has the power to hire and fire the center's employees, Wentworth said. Neither Welch nor Weekes-Washington could be reached for comment.

An Ad Hoc support committee was formed Sunday night to generate campus and community support for the issue, Wentworth said. She said the major issue in the decision is who is in control and to whom the EWC must be held accountable.

"The issue is will the Everywoman's Center be accountable to the women's community or to the white male-dominated administration," Wentworth said.

The committee will distribute letters and petitions demanding her reappointment by Chancellor Duffy, Wentworth said.

It was the feeling on the part of the administration that she had not fulfilled the specifics of her job description, she said. "I was told I haven't fulfilled examples of duties in the job description," she said.

"I believe the fact is that I have been too outspoken an advocate of AFDC (Aid to Families with Dependent Children) to women in the community and in the state," Wentworth said.

She had always received excellent evaluations in past years, she said. She said she is proud of the work she has done and the women with whom she has worked to help in their struggles.

"Just because they are in school as welfare recipients, doesn't mean these women do not live in a state of financial crisis," Wentworth said.

Eating disorders in women prompt events this week, including films

By PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Staff

In response to a growing trend of women on college campuses who suffer from eating disorders, a week of events examining women's self-image and the problems that arise from these images is being held at the University of Massachusetts.

Five to 20 percent of college students suffer from eating disorders nationwide, said Carol Monaco, the sexism coordinator for the east side of campus and co-organizer of the event entitled "Our Bodies and Ourselves."

The events which began Monday with two films examining women in the media and continue until tomorrow night are sponsored by Residential Education and the Northeast/Sylvan and Orchard Hill/Central Women's Centers. Specific events are being sponsored by Food Services and Health Services.

The events are needed because of the rising incidence of eating disorders, a direct result of a woman's distorted self-image, Monaco said.

"Eating disorders are increasing, but people are also looking for help more," she said.

"Eating disorders are a manifestation of society's distorted image of women," she said. "I think a lot of education has to happen in order for things to change. Anorexia and bulemia are important issues on campus. They are a result of women's self-images."

Referring to Karen Carpenter who died of anorexia nervosa, Monaco said it is unfortunate that it took the death of a famous person to make people conscious of eating disorders.

"It is terrible that it had to go to that extent to get attention," she said.

Last night, the Northampton-based theatrical group "Present Stage" performed the play "Food Fright" in Worcester Dining Commons. The play addressed issues surrounding anorexics and bulemics.

At 7 p.m. tonight, Lynn Bechtel and Leslie Chambers of Health Education are giving a workshop titled "Food and Feelings" in the basement of Knowlton dormitory. The workshop also addresses eating disorders.

A film series examining women's self-images is scheduled for 7 p.m. tomorrow night. "Size 10," "Dieting: The Danger Point," and "Women: The Question of Self Concept" will be shown in both the Orchard Hill/Central Women's Center in Wheeler dormitory and the Northeast/Sylvan Women's Center in Knowlton dormitory.

Ahora continues to funnel hispanic students into one

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

The decade of the 1970's was a long period of readjustment and struggle for hispanic students as they tried to succeed in the culturally diverse campus of the University of Massachusetts.

The future of these students and of their community was at stake, thus it was imperative to unite and build an organization to voice the ideas, philosophies and interests of the hispanic community here at UMass.

With various efforts in mind, an organization was established with the main goal of recruiting hispanics to the university. The organization was named AHORA, which was spanish for now, because of the immediate need for reform.

AHORA promoted educational programs aimed toward career and job advancement, developed activities to magnify the awareness of the students toward the hispanic community, and to break language barriers and cultural isolation.

With its concern for the future of the hispanic community, AHORA founded the Billingual Collegiate Program (BCP). BCP was founded in 1974 mainly to recruit hispanics and offered such services as academic, personal/tutorial and financial aid counseling.

Although lack of representation is no longer a problem in the hispanic community here, there still is a problem of readjustment within the university. Many of the hispanic students on campus are the first in their families to leave home. This separation causes a psychological setback and can help to destroy a student's academics. AHORA attempts to enlighten the student's social and political interests, said AHORA's president Cynthia Estriba.

"AHORA has a financially secure future, but students efforts and active participation are more important now," Estriba explained.

Solidarity among hispanics is essential if there is to be a future for AHORA and for the hispanic community, stressed Estriba.

"If hispanics do not establish a bureaucracy in the university, AHORA and other organizations will desintegrate," Estriba added. "AHORA's future is in the hands of its students."

We have organizations like AHORA because in the past others cared to build a future for today's students. We should further this action by keeping AHORA alive.

All it takes is a few hours a week to discuss plans for the upcoming year and to broaden student's perspective on the hispanic community.

We are the future of Latin America and the hispanic community in the United States, without our efforts, there will never be a tomorrow for Bolivar's beloved continent.

Jury convicts whites in death of black man

BOSTON (AP) — A jury convicted two young white men of manslaughter Tuesday in the death of a black man who ran into the path of a subway train trying to flee a gang of whites who were stoning and jeering him.

The jury of eight whites and four blacks deliberated all day Monday before finding Francis X. Devin, 20, and William M. Joyce, 19, guilty of three counts each of assault with a dangerous weapon. The jury met for half an hour Tuesday morning before finding the two Boston youths guilty of manslaughter.

Attorneys for the two said they will appeal the verdicts.

The prosecution charged that on the night of March 13, 1982, William Atkinson, a 30-year-old maintenance worker, ran into the Savin Hill rapid transit station in the city's Dorchester section to escape the jeering youths. They threw rocks and bottles and shouted racial slurs at Atkinson, the prosecution said.

Atkinson, who died when he ran into the path of a subway train, found himself "in a funnel from which there was no escape," the prosecution contended. A white man who was with him was knocked unconscious during the attack, but later escaped.

Three other Boston men, Edward Tuffo, 18, Michael Nowacki, 20, and Paul MacGregor, 19, are awaiting trial.

Atkinson's sister, Regina, was in the courtroom when the verdict was announced, and said, "Maybe the decision that was made here today will stop" violence in the city. "These attacks on people have to stop," she added.

Joyce shook his head as the verdict was read; Bevin stood impassively.

Suffolk Superior Judge Roger Donahue ordered them held without bail until sentencing April 8. Devin and Joyce face up to 20 years in prison for manslaughter and five years for each assault conviction.

Donahue told the jury that to convict Joyce and Devin of manslaughter, the panel had to believe that the attack set in motion "a natural and continuous sequence that produces death."

Community call says halt to klan activities

The Ku Klux Klan has announced plans to rally in Meridan, Connecticut on April 30, and possibly in Boston, Massachusetts on May 1. They have proclaimed this "National White Christian Solidarity Day". This will be the third year in a row that the Klan has rallied in Meridan and their second appearance in the last year in Boston.

In recent years, and in particular since 1978, Connecticut has experienced a significant increase in the number of white supremacist attacks against Black people.

Seventeen cross burnings occurred in 1979, according to a report issued by the state's Commission on Human Rights. This was followed by the emergence of the Klan publicly at a 1980 cross burning and rally in Scotland, Connecticut, on the land of a Mr. Rood, a former member of the fascist, military organization, the Minute Men.

The level of public Klan organizing has intensified since that time under the leadership of Bill Wilkinsons faction of the Klan, the Invisable Empire of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. Wilkenson has admitted to being on the FBI's payroll, in an interview with the Nashville Tennessean. In the Spring of 1981, the Klan marched in support of killer cop Eugene Hale, who only weeks before had been responsible for the shooting death of a young Black man in Hartford, Connecticut.

Since then the Klan has rallied every year in Meridan and elsewhere, in support of the police in particular. At every point the Klan has received full police protection. In fact, a total of seventy police received awards for protecting the Klan in the '81 rally. When the Klan attempted to rally in Boston in November of this year, the police, after escorting the Klan away from approximately 2,000 demonstrators, launched a violent attack on the demonstration.

Acts of resistence to the Klan are not particular to Connecticut alone. In the past year, the Klan has been met with active resistance in Boston, Washington, D.C., and most recently in Austin, Texas.

The Klan is a paramilitary force organizing for genocide against Black and other Third World people within the U.S. boarders. It is a basic human rights struggle that the Klan not be allowed to march.

Join us in stopping the Klan in Meridan on April 30th, and in Boston on May 1st. The John Brown Anti-Klan Committee invites people interested in this mobilization and in ongoing work against white supremacy to an open meeting on March 31st.

A discussion will follow a presentation by the John Brown Anti Klan Committee, and a film on the history and current rise of the Klan. The meeting will be held at UMass Campus Center Room 172 at 6:30 p.m. Child care will be provided and the room is wheelchair accessable.

Recovery signs still doubtful

By NORMAN HILL
A. Philip Randolph Institute

A January rise in the leading economic indicators, a decline in the world price of oil, and a lower rate of inflation resulted in a wave of euphoria among certain conservative economists and politicians. "At last, the Reagan program is taking hold," Administration, spokesmen were trumpeting. "A strong recovery is on the way," they said.

Yet only weeks after the initial euphoria, Administration spokesmen have suddenly become more cautious. Martin Feldstein the chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, has asserted that the statistics for January had overstated the strength of the recovery. Paul Volcker, who as Chairman of the Federal Reserve has been a principle architect of the current recession, stated that there had been "a certain amount of wishful thinking in recent weeks" and that the economy confronts substantial difficulties.

Indeed, statistics from the Department of Commerce confirm this new-found pessimism. The Commerce Department's figures which show a decline of nearly one percent in retail sales for the first two months of the year: Hardly the stuff from which a recovery is made.

In the past, critics of the Administration's economic program focused on its inequities: substantial tax reductions for the wealthy; meager tax savings for workers and cutbacks in services and social spending on those most in need. However, there is another reason to be opposed to Reaganomics program: no significant economic recovery is possible unless it is led by consumer spending.

The weakness of the recovery for which we now are waiting is a direct consequence of the fact that today millions fewer consumers hold jobs than when the President took office. Moreover, fewer paychecks means that there are fewer workers who can spend their dollars. Therefore, it is not at all surprising that retail sales continue to decline.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Blind claims lacks brains

Editor's Note: This is the first in a three part series which will examine U.S. foreign policy in South America with a particular emphasis on America's role in El Salvador.

As one examines the current debate over U.S. involvement in El Salvador one can not help but be struck by the total onesidedness of the critics who protest against U.S. intervention. Over and over we are told that all the people of El Salvador want is a rebel victory since they do not support the current government which has been labelled brutal and inhumane. This belief, however, is rather dubious since 80 percent of the electorate braved guerilla threats and bullets to vote in an election that the rebels played no part in. Also, if one was to listen to the protesters, one would have the impression that the guerillas never killed anyone. This particular belief is an example of one of the most interesting characteristics of these protesters. Their righteous indignation and abhorrence of human rights abuses always seem to disappear once any sort of revolutionary group comes to power. The most current example of this selective indignation is the case of Nicaragua.

Katherine Curda

Four years after the revolution which ousted Somoza and gave many of us the hope that things would now be better, the revolution has been betrayed. Freedom of expression is severely limited, and press and radio are subject to strict censorship. Managua has copied Castro's neighborhood political-control groups and created its own "defense committees". Those who don't join are labled counter-revolutionaries and are thus unable to get a ration card. Today Nicaragua's armed forces are twice the size of Somoza's National Guard and now represent the largest armed forces in Central America. In July of 1981, Eden Pastora Gomez, known as Commander Zero and a hero of the revolution, fled his country denouncing the growing repression and Cubanization of his country.

Earlier in January of 1981 the two moderate members of the 5 man revolutionary junta, businessman Alphonso Robelo Callejas and the proclaimed "symbol of the revolution" Violeta de Chamorro, widow of assassinated newspaper editor Pedro Chamorro, resigned from the junta, leaving power to the self-proclaimed Marxists Daniel Ortega Saavendra and Moises Hassan Morales. In examining these three prominent defections from the Nicaraguan revolution, the hypocrisy of the protesters became apparent. When the more radical elements of Salvadorian politics broke away from the 1979 revolution to form the Marxist FMLN, they were given support by all good progressives and today are being proclaimed the true voice of the people. However, when three moderate supporters of the Nicaraguan revolution broke away, no support was given to them. Apparently only certain dissident movements are pure enough to merit the support of the protesters.

One of the most prominent anti-Sandinista protesters is Jose Esteban Gonzales, the 1977 organizer of the Nicaraguan Commission on Human Rights against Somoza, who now leads the Nicaraguan Committee for Human Rights in exile. Writing in March of 1981 Gonzales stated, "What has been happening in Nicaragua is very grim. There have been massacres of political prisoners. I myself, with other members of the committee, examined mass graves on two different sights. These killings cannot be dismissed as rash acts of post-revolutionary anger. They have occured for over two years — some have occured within the past few months."

Having examined these various examples of the growing political repression and human rights abuses going on in Nicaragua, what is most interesting is the fact that the very people continually complaining about the human rights abuses in El Salvador, which is fighting a guerilla war, ignore those same abuses occurring in Nicaragua which ended its revolution four years ago. We who support U.S. intervention in El Salvador realize that the country has a long way to go. It would be nice if those protesters who seem so eager to believe every bad report from El Salvador were as critical of the Sandinistas of Nicaragua. As George Orwell once wrote, "Actions are held to be good or bad, not on their own merits but according to who does them, and there is almost no kind of outrage which does not change its moral color when it is committed by our side." Perhaps if the protesters were to also lend their support to the growing dissident in Nicaragua, their protests about El Salvador might seem more sincere.

Improving UMass' image will help aid

During a March 7th hearing in Washington for the National Commission on Student Financial Aid, a young man from Suffolk University in Massachusetts, and a member of the National Coalition of Independent College & University Students (COPUS), made a very startling and unflattering comment about UMass-Amherst.

He told the commission of how he and a close friend were able to have the same choice of schools, (presumably because of federal aid) and that his friend who went to UMass-Amherst was disappointed that he didn't have enough "access" to his professors. Oh — there's more to come. The man from Suffolk even went so far as to tell the commission that the smallest classes, (according to his buddy attending UMass-Amherst) held a hundred or more students.

Steven P. Barrett

When asked about his information concerning the class size and lack of "accessability" at UMass-Amherst when the COPUS hearing was over, he replied, "My friend told me this, and I believe my friend." Understandable, but with such well informed and enlightened friends like his, the gent from Suffolk doesn't need any more adversaries.

All his friend ever had to do before providing the false nonsense about class size and "accessability" was to simply stroll the ground floor classrooms in Herter Hall, or take a closer look at the small newswriting labs in the Journalism Department, (twelve or so students).

Yes — there are some large lecture classes, and in a large institution, they are a logistical necessity. But, logic — even plain political logic is often ignored when emotional and highly politicized issues like student aid are concerned. The man from Suffolk, after being presented with some hard, cold and irrefutable facts, admitted his error and promised to include his corrections when he forwards his final statement to the commission. Unfortunately, it's too late, and the damage is done. No one will ever bother to remember whether or not he changed his views and facts with regard to the class size and "accessability" at UMass-Amherst. But those who attended the hearing who may be unaware of UMass' outstanding credibility as an academic institiuon were misled, and UMass-Amherst was in effect, slandered.

Parents don't want to send their children to an overcrowded public institution. Politicians become wary of providing additional support for them, and common stereotypes are only cemented in the minds of many taxpayers.

Stereotypes an denigration of UMass-Amherst are not uncommon in the Commonwealth. But isn't it a disgrace when a state's major public university earns more respect outside of its borders? Yes, UMass-Amherst has to compete hard with an unusually high concentration of excellent private colleges and universities — Suffolk among them. But, the man from Suffolk did not help the prestige of his institution by slandering UMass-Amherst — especially when his comments were based upon fallacious nonsense for evidence.

His comments also did harm to the students' cause. In fact, they smacked of unbridled snobbery and elitism. And besides, why should extra taxpayer money be spent to provide for him and others the opportunity of choice to attend the more expensive private institutions when one of the best universities in the entire nation is virtually in his backyard — especially at a lower cost?

Contrary to common misperceptions — public universities are not "cheap". The people who attend them and work for them are no less valuable, intelligent or competent than their counterparts in the private educational sector.

Think about it for a moment — why does the word cheapness always have to be connected with another term — relatively less expensive? In addition, the Suffolk student's comments, which albeit were not given with any deliberate malice against UMass-Amherst or other public institutions of higher learning with the common misperception as the "cheaper alternative".

Let's hope the student movement will gain a sense of sobriety and come to its senses when delaying with officials in Washington. Sob stories which in effect have bordered on manufactured fear, and fueled by demagogic "leaders" in the student movement, (who in reality are only looking out for themselves and their political futures) only serve to impede their movement rather than aid it.

No to Amherst rent control!

To the Editor:

Once again, the drums are beating for rent control. I am referring to Brooke States' column of 3/28. Brooke offered several reasons why Amherst should have rent control. I totally disagree with all of them.

First, apartment vacancies in Amherst are quoted that are anywhere between 1 and 3 percent. When supply is tight, prices will rise, as Brooke duly noted. If this means increased profits, capital will flow into contruction of new housing. Obviously, it hasn't. Why? Because Amherst effectively banned apartment building (Joanne Levenson, Amherst Bulletin, 3/16/82). So the free market was subverted by government interference. The solution? If you can believe it, Brooke proposed more government interference via rent control.

Second, experience has taught us that rent control inhibits new private apartment construction. Brooke attempted to negate this fact with obfuscation. A Boston Globe article was cited which said that there has been no noticeable drop in housing construction in the five years that Massachusetts has had rent control as a local option. Question: Is that apartment construction or housing in general? Does it include both private and public projects? Better yet, do you really think that rent control is seriously considered in most towns in this state? I would venture to say that rent control is a viable issue only in certain communities, such as Amherst and Boston, where renters make up a large block of voters. Can you now tell me that private apartment construction in those two towns hasn't "dropped noticeably" over the last five years?

Finally, what interested me the most about Brooke's column was the following quote: "Private land ownership also is a principal instrument of accumulation and concentratin of wealth, and therefore contributes to social injustice." This quote, in essence, is what the real argument is all about: collectivism versus private ownership; socialism versus capitalism; slavery versus freedom. If rent control wins, we are one step closer to a new fascism: rule by consensus (to borrow a phrase from Ayn Rand).

I urge students to vote on April 5 for candidates who support freedom and oppose rent control.

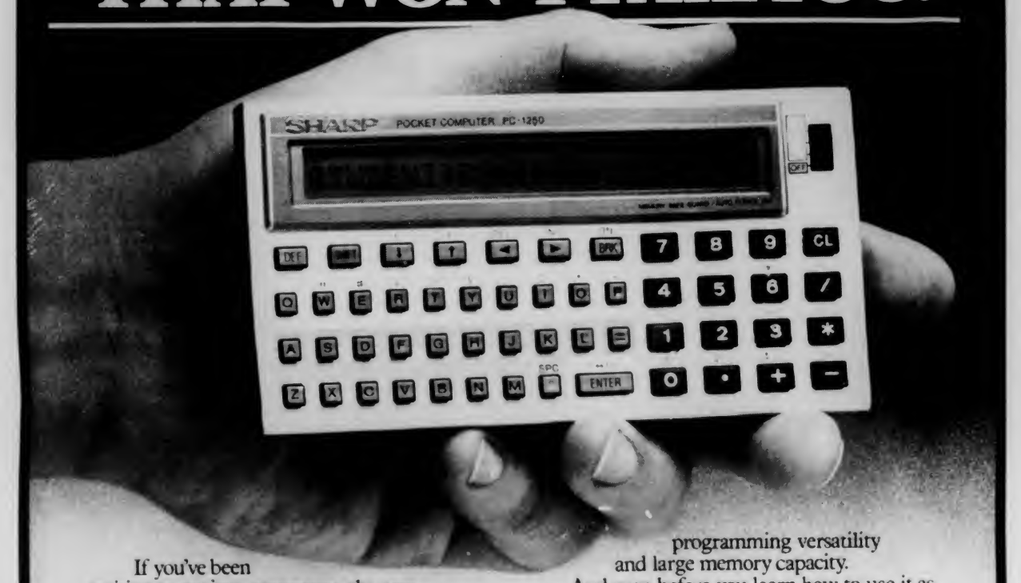
ANOTHER TECHNOLOGICAL ADVANCE FROM SHARP.

INTRODUCING A COMPUTER TEACHER THAT WON'T FAIL YOU.



If you've been waiting to get into computers, the new Sharp PC-1250 is the computer you've been waiting for. Not only is it an advanced personal computer that fits in your pocket, it's also an excellent teacher.

It comes with a self-teaching manual prepared especially for Sharp by the New York Institute of Technology. It teaches you quickly and easily how to master the Extended BASIC language—one of the most widely used and respected programming languages in the computer industry today.

And before long, you'll be taking full advantage of the PC-1250's programming versatility and large memory capacity.

And even before you learn how to use it as a computer, the PC-1250 can perform many valuable classroom calculations as well. It provides trigonometric, logarithmic, exponential functions plus extraction of square roots, financial and statistical calculations.

But best of all, size isn't the only thing that's small about our new computer. Its price is well within the student budget.

The Sharp PC-1250. The computer you've been waiting for. Also available with CE-125 cassette and printer.

Watch for our TV commercial to learn about the latest advance in computer technology from Sharp. We replaced a half-million transistors and diodes with one tiny "chip."

Echo's Porcupine bristles with contradiction

ECHO AND THE BUNNYMEN (Korova)
Porcupine

By DOUGLAS MUISE
Collegian Staff

Echo and the Bunnymen — such a great moniker for a psychedelic rock outfit. The title's got a mean, kind of dada-absurdist nonsensical buzz to it which sort of twinges the spine with fascination. Porcupine, Echo's latest product, twinges the spine as well — but not under the innocuous pretext of merely nudging this strip of viscera. The work intends to rip it out. Or at least convince us to that effect.

Porcupine approaches us in standard Echo fashion: snorting and snarling — like a rodent in heat — bristling with unfathomable metaphor, confounded contradiction, and unsolvable paradox. The title supposedly says it all: tangle with this mother and you'll peal away with a mass of prickly quills lodged in your snout. But is the message really worth this hardship?

Beginning with the edgy, spaghetti-western guitar strains of "The Cutter," Ian McCulloch's apocalypse-pop vision begins to take shape. The bridges and beats are all in total inimitable Echo style, as shades of Crocodile and Heaven Up Here bubble up through the constructions. This is the current single (for whatever "current" is worth), and little wonder. With the possible exception of "Back of Love," one would be hard pressed to come up with a more accessible cut on the album. McCulloch's poetry has always be difficult to discern, but here at least I think I know what he's talking about — the standard "sythe of death" stuff. Old hat, yes, but the song remains convincing, powerful, and poppy as hell.

But not as poppy, perhaps, as "Back of Love," a single which incited a slight riot on the pop charts of the summer past. The song is definitely quirky — "I'm on the choppin' block, choppin' off my stompin' thoughts" — but when the psycho-mystical mist clears, you've still got all white meat; it's solid pop with very little filler. McCulloch groans and grimaces his way through this ode to a love forsaken as Will Sergeant's bunny-hop guitar blips piggyback the song through your loud-speakers. By far the record's most entertaining tune.

I can't say for sure, but I guess from this point on we become involved in somewhat of a downward progression as far as quality (and comprehensibility) is concerned. I find that I enjoy the record as a mysterious, total ambience piece (to be listened to late at night, just before that last cigarette), but as you go on it becomes increasingly apparent that things are getting pretty weird and for the worst. McCulloch's lyrics begin to stray into the unintelligible, and even the banal. In "My White Devil," his fondness for making heavy-duty literary references is once again revealed, but I can't really figure out the point he's trying to make here: "John Webster was one of the best there was/He was the author of two major tragedies." What's that you're saying?

Though "Clay" has got some nifty industrial battle-field clatter in the background, the poetry is stilted: "Am I the half of half and half, or am I the half that's whole?" At this point, I'm pretty confused. The music will carry us through this scenario of torture and despair, but the heavy-handed psychedelia tends to muddle the message.

To sum, Porcupine stands as a potent, if prickly dialectic on stagnation and despair. And though I'm sure that there's a ton of heart and meaning at the core of this mass of quills, I'll be damned if I'm going to grapple for it.

Lydon's new public image

PUBLIC IMAGE LIMITED
Sunday, March 27
9 Landsdowne, Boston

By ALICIA MARQUIS
Collegian Correspondent

The crowd was kept waiting outside in the rain while the management of Boston's "newest hot spot" (yuck!) got its act together. Sunday night was the first Boston appearance of the British band, Public Image Limited, since their October 7 performance at the Channel. An interesting array of characters it seemed, had shown up to re-welcome John Lydon and Keith Levene. The performance that evening at 9 Lansdowne, however, turned out to be worth the aggrevation, and every cent of the overpriced tickets ($12 for a non-commercial band?).

Opening for PIL was the Dark, mediocre rock-and-rollers with punk haircuts, and not much more. After their 45-minute set and a brief intermission, Lydon, Levene (and touring musicians currently working with them) appeared on stage. Lydon immediately established his routine love/hate relationship with the audience, greeting them while inserting his customary cynical jabs and insults. He opened with "Lowlife," scorning ego-mania.

PIL's style is not easily catagorized; it is unique to say the least, perhaps "avant-garde" punk (as opposed to hardcore, pseudo, etc.). The direction that PIL has taken is an entirely new departure for Lydon (who sand for the Sex Pistols in the late '70's) and the music stands in direct opposition to what is commercially offered today. Lydon is a socially conscious lyricist — you'll find no mention of chicks, sexual exploits, and beer parties, (a la Van Halen) — and the impressive Levene is equally unique and experimental in his guitar work. It is a refreshing modern alternative, free of sickening love ballads and repetitive electro-synthesized beats — the trap into which many "new music" bands have fallen.

The focus of the show was primarily on the more danceable songs from Public Image: First Issue and Second Edition, although others were included. In "Religion II," Lydon followed in the footsteps of Chaucer in denouncing money-hungry pulpit preachers who offer empty promises, and the mockery of salvation and deliverance. Performed exceptionally well with strong vocals was "Public Image," although Lydon jestingly introduced it as "pop" (presumably because it has received the most exposure). Lydon at one point asked the crowd what they wanted to hear, then opted to "make something up." This was the only time there was dissent from the crowd: the more devoted fans viewed it as a treat, while a few others were angered with Lydon's presumptuousness. During the rest of the show, which included "Attack," "Swan Lake," "Bad Baby," and "Annalisa," the crowd danced, slammed (a few diligent fans actually made their way onto the stage), and along with the band, seemed to enjoy themselves tremendously.

Baseball team spends vacation in California

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

While most University of Massachusetts students spent this past week relaxing, either at home or in Florida, the members of the University of Massachusetts baseball team were busy starting their season with nine games in, as a consolation for missing spring break, California.

The results of the trip might seem disappointing on the surface — 3-6 with one of the victories coming in an exhibition game — but four of the losses were by two runs or less and the young pitching staff gave some promising performances. Besides, this trip was the college equivalent of spring training before the Minutemen get into league play.

UMass opened its western swing by feasting upon Imperial Valley Junior College, 19-5. Senior southpaw Adam Grossman was the winning pitcher with the offense being provided by senior outfielder Chris Waszczuk, who knocked in five runs, and first baseman Todd Comeau, who drove in four more. Waszczuk also hit a home run.

Co-captain and leadoff batter Dean Bennett also had a good game, scoring three runs, as did sophomore shortstop Angelo Salustri, who had three hits and two runs batted in.

In their next game, the Minutemen could not turn their hits into runs and lost to Lewis and Clark, 2-1, despite a 9-4 advantage in hits. Even though the team lost, Scott Foster and Dave Valdanbrini pitched very effectively. Valdanbrini took the loss.

The Minutemen picked up another tough loss the next day against Central Washington University, 7-6 in 10 innings.

Newcomer Bob Kostro was impressive on the mound while catcher Butch LeBlanc, with three RBI, and Waszczuk, with another home run, starred on offense.

Co-captain Bruce Emerson, in a switch from his shortstop position of last year, pitched when UMass faced the University of Washington. Emerson lost in his debut, 7-5.

Mired in a three game losing streak, the Minutemen behind the arm of staff ace Tony Presnal, defeated United States International University, 7-5.

Waszczuk, with still another home run and three RBI, once again provided the bulk of the offense. It looks like Waszczuk will provide some of the power that left when Warren McReddie signed with the Texas Tangers.

The next two games the team would rather forget. UMass lost to San Diego State University, 14-3, and then they were bombed by Lewis and Clark State, 19-0.

The Minutemen rebounded to lose narrowly to the University of California at San Diego, 7-5 in their next outing. Emerson picked up his second loss of the trip.

UMass ended their California journey with a victory, edging the University of California at Santa Barbara, 6-5.

Matt "Submarine" Subocs was the beneficiary of some timely hitting as Waszczuk tied the game in the eighth inning with a two-run home run and then Bennett knocked in the winning run in the ninth with a sacrifice fly.

The team is now back East and will play at Yale at 3 p.m. tomorrow before hosting national power Maine University April 2 at noon.

The biggest mistake that the NBA can make !Strike!

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

The date lurks menacingly like a thief in the night: April 2, 1983.

Most religious folks will recognize the date as Holy Saturday, the day before Easter. But, ironically, on a weekend that celebrates new life, a major professional sports league could breathe its last.

For on the aforementioned date, the players association of the National Basketball Association have plans to strike to protest the nonexistent of a collective bargaining agreement between themselves and NBA management.

Let's not kid ourselves, people. If the strike does indeed come off, it just might signal the end of the NBA as we have come to know. Oh sure, some teams may survive, but the vast majority will not. Why? Unlike major league baseball and pro football, both of whom nicely survived labor disturbances of their own, the NBA is plagued by public disinterest, mismanagement, and failing franchises, many of them up for sale with no takers (or is it suckers?). In many league cities, the NBA ranks somewhere below shoveling snow (or sun-bathing if you happen to be San Diego) in popularity as a recreational activity.

As a collective unit, the NBA lost $35 million last year. If the league closes its doors on April 2 that figure could approach $75 million. Stripped of lucrative playoff and TV monies (CBS shells out $1 million per team), the owners will simply fold, instead of taking a financial bath in red ink. The TV money already keeps several franchises' heads barely above water. Without it, they will drown.

Three-quarters of the franchises (18 of 23) lost money last season, with some teams, Cleveland for example, losing upwards of $4 million.

As far as the strike talks go, the players, who average $250,000 per season, are willing to settle for status quo. It's the owners who want change.

Management is proposing a cap on team salaries. The figure of $3.8 million per team is now being tossed around. Right now, several clubs exceed the proposed limit, with Philadelphia's $5 million tops. The players would receive, as proposed by the owners, 53 percent of the gross revenue, estimated to be $160 million.

The owners also want elimination of the right of first refusal and restoration of compensation for free agents. Other items desired include elimination of mandatory first-class travel and a share of the players shoe endorsement money.

So far negotiations have not been going well. Larry Fleisher, general counsel for the players, walked out of a meeting last week after only 20 minutes. Since then, a news blackout has been imposed on the talks. The only thing known is that they are being held somewhere in New York City.

The NBA Board of Governors will meet Thursday morning. At that meeting, they will either vote to allow the strike or to go ahead with last-minute negotiations. In a straw vote taken last week, the 23 owners were unanimous in letting the strike happen. Harry Mangurian, owner of the Boston Celtics, is on record as saying that a strike will happen and that most owners are not crying because they stand to lose less if the players walk.

So, in the final analysis, it looks like there will be a strike. One final question remains: With Final Four fever sweeping the land and all eyes on Albuquerque, with the new baseball season only days away, will anybody notice if the NBA players strike, or worse, even care?

The Gorillas will have to do without the services of now assistant coach Jim Weller in Saturday's showdown with Hobart at 1 p.m. at Boyden.

Boyden Hill: The constant force for Garber's Gorillas

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

"Go go gorillas, go go gorillas," ran through my head as I sat and watched the University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse team prepare for Saturday's season opener against Hobart. (Game time 1 p.m.)

Suddenly, a voice that seemed almost stereophonic spoke out to me, not from any real direction, but from all around me.

"What are you doing here? This is only a practice. The game is not until Saturday," the walkman-like voice inquired of me.

I looked around but could not lay an eye on anyone except a few people with late classes working their way back to Southwest but slowing down by the field to watch the springtime ritual, UMass lacrosse, in preparation for battle.

"Who said that?" I said, hoping that nobody sane would notice that I was talking to myself.

"This is the hill," the voice said, "Boyden Hill."

"Boyden Hill," I said in amazement. "Hills don't talk. Who is this anyway? I don't think this is funny."

"No, it really me. Hills can talk. We just don't usually get into talking to lower life forms like humans," I heard echoing back at me. "But, me, I'm different, I like humans. That's why I'm here."

Now Boyden Hill would be a pretty knowledgeable authority on Gorilla Warfare and I was not altogether sure that I had a Spring Break hangover big enough that I would be hallucinating something like this.

"Oh yeah," I said back in my best Perry Mason voice, "if you're Boyden Hill, then why don't you explain to me a little bit of the history of the lacrosse that's been played here?"

"Oh," he answered, "I've had the greatest time the last couple of years. The team has been nationally ranked and pretty high at that. And with the team being so exciting and so good, people came in droves to watch the games. Like I said, I enjoy the company. I like people."

"Must be kind of lonely," I said, "since you have to wait so long between visits. I mean, people are just starting to go to soccer games in the fall, so you really don't get packed until spring."

"That's very true," he said as I thought to myself that if this was one of my friends playing a trick on me, I WOULD get revenge.

"But," Mr. Hill continued, "I get the visits during the best time of the school year. Thousands of kids, real fans going crazy, sunning themselves and having a party all over me. All those buns make me warm all over."

I asked him if he were able to change anything over the past couple of years, would he have anything in mind.

"No question about it," he responded quickly, "I would have alcohol back in here. I had the greatest time late in close games when sloshed students started spilling beer all over me. What a buzz! When people told stories about the hill rocking near the end of a close game, they weren't kidding."

Then, of course, I had to ask the next best authority to 29-year veteran head coach Dick Garber, how this year's squad was going to fare this season.

"They are a loose bunch, a very good team, too," he answered. "It's going to be tough to look across the way over to the bench and see Jimmy Weller (now the assistant coach) and know that he can't come in and play anymore. If I had had any pull over on the Whitmore Mound, he wouldn't have graduated. I miss him already.

"But," he said, "these guys look good. The talent is here. The desire is here."

"And," he said with a gleeful tone, "the people will be here soon too."

And then I woke up and realized that the whole thing had been nothing but a dream. The Hill sure is comfortable though.

Plan revision attacked by SGA president

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

BOSTON - The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees yesterday discussed an extensively revised version of the Long Range Plan, and heard strong criticism of the plan by Student Government Association (SGA) President and Student Trustee Jim Murphy.

Murphy attacked two parts of the plan dealing with Student Activities and with the Residential College system. The Trustees did not vote on the plan, but said they will consider it at their April 13 meeting.

Murphy attacked the plan as an attempt to remove student control over the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) and also criticized the revisions made to the plan after an earlier version was approved by a campus-wide committee last year.

The revised plan recommends the University "submit for Trustee approval a charter for the SGA."

It also recomends the University "undertake a more substantive review of the Student Senate's annual budget," and suggested the SATF be divided into several smaller components.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said he had "extensively rewritten and edited" an earlier plan approved by several campus agencies, including students. He said the revised document "is being widely circulated on the campus," but that time for a thorough review will not be available before the Trustees are required to submit a long-range plan to the Board of Regents.

Murphy strongly criticized the lack of student input into changes in the plan.

"One could easily suppose the school was being set up, and we were waiting for the students to arrive on a bus," Murphy said. "Students play a role in assessing the relevence of their education."

Murphy called the student activities section of the plan "very negative."

"What the section is asking for is to take the Student Activities system and take it apart, piece by piece," Murphy said.

Murphy also charged the Student Activities division on the Amherst campus did not deal in good faith.

"We don't feel comfortable submitting a constitution to a Student Affairs Division that has shown nothing but bad faith," Murphy said.

As an example of "bad faith," Murphy cited a recent effort by student government officials to submit their longstanding dispute over control of the SATF to mediation. But Murphy said that shortly before it was to begin, the director of Student Activities withdrew, saying he had nothing to negotiate.

Duffey said he understood a new effort was under way to resume mediation, but Murphy said he was not aware of the effort.

Murphy also criticized the plan's section on the Residential Colleges. The Board did not vote on the Long Range Plan, but planned to vote at their April 13 meeting following discussions between Murphy and Duffey and following minor revisions expected to plans submitted by all three UMass campuses.

Later in the day, the Trustee Committee on Budget and Financial Affairs recommended the full Board approve most fee increases requested for next year.

Following charges by Murphy that the Campus Center budget was in violation of the Trust Fund Management Policy approved by the Board last month, the committee voted to delay consideration of that fee until a meeting April 13 before the full Board meeting.

Senate swears in new officers in non-traditional ceremony

By JOHN O'CONNELL
and MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night swore in new officers and approved a fifth referendum question to be added to the April ballot.

In a departure from Student Government Association (SGA) custom, outgoing President Jim Murphy did not swear in co-presidents Charlene Allen and Tom Ahern using a copy of the SGA Constitution.

Instead, Murphy, a self-described anarchist, had Allen and Ahern "swear in" using a copy of Kropotkin's Revolutionary Pamphlets.

Murphy gave the traditional bottle of champagne to Allen and Ahern, but qualified it because he dislikes tradition.

"This is not just a bottle of champagne," Murphy said. "This is a bottle of cheap champagne. It's cheap because that's what they're going to get paid."

Allen and Ahern gave Murphy a gift also: a clip-on tie. Murphy has never worn a suit or tie to the Board of Trustees meetings.

SGA Treasurer Eric Nitzsche and Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan were also sworn in.

A referendum question on the University's policy on "academic contact with South Africa" was also added to the SGA ballot.

"Do you favor University regulation and reviewing of UMass funding and sponsorship of academic contacts with South African educational institutions, government and corporations?" the question will ask.

After the question was added to the ballot, a motion to spend $250 to promote the referendum was defeated.

Publicity of all five refrenda will be done through a $500 advertising and leaflet campaign by the Senate's Governmental Affairs Committee. A grant of $750 from the Finance Committee to the State Student Association of Massachusetts last week will also publicize that question.

In other business, Union Program Council Talent Coordinator Bill Prichett officially announced "there will be no Spring Concert in Alumni Stadium."

Prichett said he would ask the Student Senate for funds next week to fund a concert series which he called "The Mystery Series."

"It will be similar to the Pond Series, but not by the pond and the talent will be upgraded," Prichett said in reference to the three-day spring event held last year. He would not specify the date or time of the event for security reasons, he said.

Academic Affairs Committee Chair Lauren Bertsch announced that the Course And Teacher Evaluation (CATE) forms were sent out to students last week, and encouraged senators to return them and to ask others to send them in.

The forms will be used to produce "On the Other Hand," a student evaluation guide produced each year by the SGA.

University Store may swallow Coffee Shop

By DAVID K. SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

In the past year, the demand for more space in the Campus Center has vastly surpassed the supply available. With such a clear cut lack of room in the building, how can groups now acquire more space if they have a justifyable need to do so? The answer just might be that one operation will end up displacing part of another if it the move is beneficial to the building as a whole.

This week, officials at the University Store proposed to the Campus Center Administration that the Coffee Shop be closed and the space instead be used as an annex of the store.

We are currently overcrowded in our existing space and we would like to expand our operations by adding more clothing lines and also by selling personal computers to students and faculty," said David Curley, assistant manager of the store.

"We just need more space," he said.

The Administration said it is in the process of evaluating the proposal from every angle to see if the Campus Center could benefit by the move and if Food Services could provide as good or better service without the Coffee Shop.

"'We just need more space,' (Assistant Manager David Curley) said."

"What we have done is to ask our Food Services manager, Dick Ellis, to take a look at the Blue Wall and the Hatch to see what changes could be made to absorb services in as good or better manner than they are now," said Bernard Wilkes, assistant director of the Campus Center.

"The Blue Wall is valuable real estate that is underutilized, and maybe to improve efficiency in Food Services we can move all the services of the Coffee Shop into the Blue Wall. We want better utilization of space within the facility, better service and increased revenue," he said.

"I think people have to realize it is just not going to be a closing of the Coffee Shop without other changes," Wilkes added.

If the proposal passes examination, starting next September the University Store would move into the space and create a UMass Impressions Shop selling all their clothes and imprinted giftware.

Paul Knight, Food Service Coordinator on the Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG), said the proposal has its advantages and disadvantages.

"It seems like a good idea to me because I don't use the Coffee Shop, but there are people who do and are very attached to it, and that is something to consider," he said.

With this in mind, the Board of Governors announced that within the next week it will be conducting a questionnaire in the Campus Center to inform people of the proposal and see how students stand on the issue.

"We do not want this decision to go by so fast that students are not given a chance to voice their opinions on the issue," Knight said.

"My initial impression is that the Coffee Shop should not be closed down," said Ron Keefe BOG Chair. "I think students would rather have a Coffee Shop than a clothes boutique," he said.

Reagan seeks new arms pact

WASHINGTON(AP) - President Reagan, accusing the Kremlin of failing to offer serious arms control proposals, spelled out a new plan yesterday calling for the United States to install new nuclear missiles in Europe and the Soviet Union to dismantle part of its arsenal.

Reagan proposed that the United States cut back the planned deployment of Pershing 2 and cruise missiles late this year if the Soviet Union agreed to reduce the number of warheads on medium-range missiles throughout the world.

Both superpowers would be limited to an equal number of warheads on medium-range weapons. Reagon did not propose specific limits, and a senior administration official said that would be open to negotiation.

Reaffirming his goal of eliminating all medium-range missiles, Reagan said "it would be better to have none than to have some. But, if there must be some, it is better to have few than to have many."

Speaking to NATO diplomats invited to hear his address, he said, "If the Soviets will not now agree to the total elimination of these weapons, I hope they will at least join us in an interim agreement that would substantially reduce these forces to equal levels on both sides."

His speech is part of an intensified campaign to win worldwide support - particularly in Euope - for U.S. arms proposals and to put pressure on the Soviets to move toward an agreement.

After the address and a meeting with Zambian President Kenneth Kaunda, Reagan flew to California for a five-day stay and a speech today in Los Angeles on curbing nuclear arms, chemical weapons and cutting the size of conventional forces in Europe.

Lobbyists spend $8 million

WASHINGTON (AP) — Groups backing 6,500 registered lobbyists shelled out at least $8,756,609 trying to influence Congress in the final months of 1982, House and Senate records show. And the biggest declared spender of them all was Common Cause, the self-styled citizens lobby.

The Washington-based organization said it spent $442,537 on lobbying activities in the last quarter of 1982 — nearly 25 percent more than the second-highest spender in the latest spending reports, a gun control group.

The latest quarterly expenditures, if sustained for a year, would top $35 million or about $65,000 for each of the 535 members of Congress.

But people such as Fred Wertheimer, president of Common Cause, say the actual amount could be much higher and that some lobbyists are using loopholes in the disclosure law to avoid reporting all their expenditures.

Hondurans fear leftist attack

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) Hundreds of poor Honduran villagers were reported fleeing their homes along the Nicaraguan border yesterday, fearing attacks by leftist Nicaragua's army in retaliation for attacks by rightist exiles based in Honduras.

Eighty residents of the tense Choluteca border zone, on the Gulf of Fonseca between Nicaragua and El Salvador, petitioned President Roberto Suazo Cordova for troop reinforcements. They claimed Nicaragua's Sandinista government had put 1,500 troops on the other side of the border.

The petition said hundreds of peasants have been leaving their villages in recent weeks, fearing fighting would break out.

The Sandinistas "are constantly watching our every movement," said the petitioners. "We cannot live, we cannot work, we cannot breathe in a ...climate charged with tension due to constant incursions by air and overland by Nicaragua's Sandinista guards."

There was no immediate comment from the Honduran government, which has 400 soldiers patrolling the Choluteca area.

Shooting across the border has been reported frequently, and the government claims the Sandinistas have been smuggling weapons through the area to leftist rebels fighting the U.S.-supported conservative government of El Salvador. It reported Tuesday that an army patrol intercepted 12 Nicaraguan soldiers last week near Nacaome, 52 miles from the Nicaraguan border, with a "large amount" of weapons.

Dozens of people have been killed or wounded in clashes between Nicaraguan and Honduran soldiers along the sparsely populated border in the four years since the Sandinistas overthrew right-wing President Anastasio Somoza, and an estimated 26,000 Nicaraguans fled to rightist-ruled Honduras.

Scholarship increase viewed as 'significant'

BOSTON — The agreement to increase state scholarship aid that got a gasoline tax increase through the Legislature "is one of the most significant developments for higher education" in Massachusetts history, Northeastern University's president said yesterday.

"This will open the doors to college for 10,000 young men and women from low and middle income Massachusetts families who otherwise might have knocked on the doors and found them barred," said Northeastern President Kenneth G. Ryder.

About a dozen public and private college presidents joined Senate President William M. Bulger, House Speaker Thomas W. McGee and other legislators at a meeting to discuss the impact of the proposed $15 million scholarship increase that cleared most legislative hurdles Tuesday night.

The $34 million appropriation for the school year beginning in September requires only enactment votes in the House and Senate, usually routine, before going to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

Dukakis, who had requested $23 million in state scholarship aid in his budget recommendations for the next fiscal year, has announced his support for the new figure.

Low income housing approved for Greenfield

BOSTON — An Appeals Court panel said yesterday that developer Raymond Daddario was entitled to a comprehensive permit to construct 60 low or moderate income housing units in Greenfield.

However, because of a technical defect, the opinion left it to the parties involved to arrange a resolution of the dispute.

The litigation stemmed from a December, 1979, application by Daddario for a construction permit on a 10-acre tract on Homestead Avenue. This was denied by the local zoning board and Daddario appealed, under the state's anti-snob zoning law, to the state Housing Appeals Committee, which granted the permit.

State worker contracts face midnight deadline

BOSTON - Negotiations for a new contract with about 30,000 state workers intensified yesterday, as a top state official predicted "a fair chance" of settlement before the old contract expires at midnight tonight.

"We hope to wrap up negotiations by the deadline," Frank Keefe, administration and finance secretary, told a news conference.

Joseph Bonavita, chairman of the state workers' Alliance, said in a statement, "We are prepared to bargain round-the-clock to reach an agreement by midnight."

About 1,500 angry members of the Alliance, a coalition of several state employee unions, pressed for a settlement in a demonstration last week. The workers complained the state's then latest offer of 4 percent raises each year of a new three-year contract wasn't enough, and Alliance leaders raised the threat of an illegal strike if an agreement isn't reached soon.

Boston colleges may lose tax exemptions

BOSTON - Colleges and universities continue to swallow up property in Boston, causing the percentage of tax-exempt buildings to rise, City Councilor Albert L. O'Neil told a legislative committee yesterday.

O'Neil urged the Taxation Committee to approve a bill that would eliminate property tax exemptions currently enjoyed by colleges, churches, charitable organizations and state authorities within the city of Boston.

O'Neill said his bill, co-sponsored by state Rep. Michael F. Flaherty, D-Boston, would not tax actual church buildings, but other property which religious organizations may own and not pay taxes on.

Merrimack Valley cited as good business area

LAWRENCE - The Merrimack Valley area in northeastern Massachusetts is a good example of where "older industry, high tech and resurgent downtowns can all happen together," Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said yesterday.

Dukakis spoke to officials from 25 valley communities during the state's third conference on drafting strategies to promote regional development.

Similar meetings have been held in the southeastern and western parts of the state, at Southeastern Massachusetts University and the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

"Economic development translates into jobs for people, and that is - and will remain - the No. 1 priority for this administration," Dukakis said in a speech at Lawrence High School. "With recovery and jobs comes community revitalization, something the Merrimack Valley has come to stand for "

Protesters clash with students in Campus Center

Masked demonstrators assail Iranian information table

By GLEN GOLDSTEIN
Collegian Staff

A series of clashes yesterday in the Campus Center concourse between supporters and opponents of the Khomeini regime in Iran resulted in Campus Center officials shutting down an informational table.

Anti-Khomeini protesters arrived at the Campus Center yesterday at 11 a.m. Many of the protesters wore masks that had written on them, "Stop squealing on Iranian students".

The protesters said they were being spied on by pro-Khomeini students. The masked students said if pictures were taken of them being involved in an anti-Khomeini protest, or attending a progressive class, reached Iran, their educations and their families would be in danger.

"If my parents want to exchange currency in Iran to send some of their own money to me in the United States, they have to go through an Iranian government office," a masked protester said. "If the Iranian government finds out that I am suspected of activities like this, they will not let my parents send the money."

The protesters said they know of five to ten students at the University of Massachusetts that have been financially cut off from home in this manner.

The protesters said the main focus of their action yesterday was the table set up by the other students in the Cmpus Center.

"To us it's as if during World War II some German students had wanted to set up a pro-Nazi information table here," a protester said.

The informational table that was picketed yesterday had a sign on it saying, "Islam Republic". Campus Center officials said they thought the table had been signed out for use by the Islamic Society, a Recognized Student Organization at UMass. The president of the Islamic society, Antar Shakir denied this.

"The people who had the table did not have my permission or permission from the majority of the group (the Islam Society). They had the table illegally. I am the only person in the group that is supposed to have signature power to get the use of an information table. Someone slipped by this rule," Shakir said.

At about 11:15 a.m. the protesters were asked to move behind a table by Dudley Bridges, director of building operations, because they were blocking exits, Bridges said.

A spokesman for the protesters said later the picketers left the Campus Center around 12:30 p.m. A crowd estimated at 100-150 then started arguing in front of the information table, and it was then shut down by Campus Center officials.

Court ruling, policy changes may hurt registration law

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The Solomon Amendment, a law which requires students to provide proof of draft registration on their financial aid forms, has run into problems from several sources which may block its enforcement.

A Minnesota judge earlier this month struck down the law as unconstitutuinal, and issued an injunction which the government has until April 8 to appeal.

Also, the Department of Education has announced it plans to revise its rule concerning enforcement of the Solomon Amendment. Students will still fill out draft information on the financial aid forms, but the schools will not be required to request verification from the draft board for the next two years.

Finally, a House of Representatives subcommittee voted to delay application of the law for seven months to allow for organization of enforcement procedures. The subcommittee bill is currently being considered by the full House.

"The law forcing students to present proof of draft registration when applying for financial aid is in limbo for another few weeks," said Art Jackson, director of financial aid at UMass. "No one knows the implications of the law, that's why its being reviewed."

Jackson recommended students use "their personal judgement" as to whether they should fill out the draft registration information on the financial forms.

"Right now the forms say students must sign, but we don't know how long that is going to continue to be true," Jackson said.

Students who fail to fill out information regarding draft registration will not be penalized or denied aid according to Jackson. Students may, however, have to provide the information at a later date.

The lack of direct communication between the Department of Education and the schools has created some of the confusion as to whether students have to provide proof of draft registration. "What we have been receiving is second hand news," Jackson said.

Proposals seek student on Regents, building board

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Correspondent

BOSTON-- Members of the Undergraduate Student Senate's Public Policy Committee yesterday testified to the state legislature's Joint Committee on Education in support of several bills that could directly affect University of Massachusetts students.

The education committee will make recommendations on the six bills, which range from student membership on the Board of Regents to shoplifting at the University Store, either today or tomorrow, according to Rep. Joan Menard, D-Somerset, vice-chair of the education committee.

Although public policy committee members come to Boston once a week to lobby legislature, "we only get the chance to do this (testify) once a year," committee member Doug Storey said. "The first step is getting the bills out of (the legislative) committee."

The bill, which would add a student to the Board of Regents, would also require that all gubernatorial appointments to the Board be confirmed by the education committee, and would prohibit persons who are principally employed by private institutuions" from serving on the board. These changes would "prevent conflict of interest" in the Board members, Storey said in his testimony to the committee.

The student member of the Board of Regents would be chosen by a Student Advisory Council, to be composed of student trustees from the state, Storey said. The bill would add a student to the Board to increase the accountability of the Board, he said.

Another bill supported by the Public Policy Committee would "give the control of budgeting each campus to the legislature," according to a Public Policy Committee statement, because "the legislature is a far more accountable body for such an important allocation." Under the bill, the legislature would disburse money to each campus by "line item appropriation," rather than giving the Board of Regents a lump sum amount to distribute to campuses as they see fit.

Students also testified in support of a bill that would place a student on the Public Education Building Authority Board. There has been no opposition to this plan by the University or the Board, student committee member John Flynn said.

Legislature expected to leave MassPIRG funding on bill

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

BOSTON - The Joint Committee on Education of the state legislature will likely recommend that a bill which would reorganize the funding of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) chapters should not pass the state legislature, after hearing testimony from MassPIRG members yesterday.

The bill, filed by Rep. Joseph Manning, D-Milton, would change the MassPIRG funding from the present system, where students can check off the two dollar charge if they do not want to fund MassPIRG, to a system that would remove the funding from the tuition bill and force MassPIRG to seek charitable contributions.

About 50 members of MassPIRG from chapters around the state crowded into the hearing room yesterday, prompting senate committee chair Gerard D'Amico, D-Worcester, to hear testimony against the Manning bill earlier than planned.

"I appreciate the anxiety that has brought a large number of the student body here today," said D'Amico, who asked that the committee give the bill a negative recommendation.

"We worked out a very fair deal last year," D'Amico said, referring to the compromise between MassPIRG and the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees, which resulted in the present funding system.

"It's too soon to make any radical changes in the system," he said.

D'Amico said he has opposed the Manning bill from the beginning, but he was impressed by the turnout nonetheless.

MassPIRG executive director Doug Phelps noted the present funding system passed unanimously in both houses of the legislature before it was signed by former Gov. Edward J. King, and UMass chapter chair Lisa DeCarolis stressed the "real educational value" of MassPIRG experience to the committee.

Cane tree stolen from Student Union lobby

A four-foot high yucca cane tree, complete with green leaves, brown bark and a plastic pot, was reported stolen from the Student Union lobby Tuesday, University of Massachusetts police said yesterday.

The tree, valued at $75, was last seen Monday at 4:30 p.m. when it received its last watering by Scott Cashman, who is in charge of plants for the Student Union complex.

The plant is one of six trees which adorn the lobby of the building. They are located on a window platform above the main entrance doors to the Student Union.

UMass police also reported yesterday the arrest of a 33-year-old Holyoke man. Philip P. Seymour of Main Street, Holyoke, was placed under protective custody at 12:17 p.m. Tuesday at the Haigis Mall on a Peter Pan bus, where he had passed out, police said.

Upon booking, police said they found out he was wanted on a default warrant held by Barnstable police. At 12:30 a.m. yesterday, police said he was placed under arrest on the default warrant and later released to Barnstable police.

Student arrested on motor vehicle charges

Amherst Police yesterday reported the arrest of a University of Massachusetts student on motor vehicle violations.

Amherst Police Detective David Burns said the student, from Seattle, Washington, was arrested at 1:20 yesterday after he was observed by Amherst Police making a U-turn in traffice on Lincoln Ave.

Amherst Police said the student was unable to produce a vehicle registration and was driving with an expired state of Washington driver's license. He was arrested on the no license charge and cited on the U-turn and no registration complaints, police said.

Burns said the student was released on bail for an appearance in Northampton District Court later in the morning.

Selectmen's positions to be voted on Tuesday

By E.L. BIRK
and TRICIA YACOVONE
Collegian Staff

Two of the five seats on the Amherst Board of Selectmen are up for grabs and voters will have the opportunity to fill them in the town elections next Tuesday.

Probably the oldest elecitve position in American government, according to John Gillespie of the Bureau of Government Research at the University of Massachusetts in a booklet called the Handbook for Massachusetts Selectmen, each seat on the board carries a three-year term.

Both of the seats opening up are for the full term and are sought after by the following three candidates, as they appear on the ballot: Frederick Steinbeck, Allen Torrey and Joanne Levenson.

Current Selectwoman Francesca Maltese will not seek to retain her seat while incumbent Steinbeck will.

FREDERICK STEINBECK

Selectman Frederick Steinbeck is a lifelong resident of Amherst. Steinbeck, a contractor based in the town, was never involved in the Amherst government until elected to his present position one and a half years ago.

"I have been a moderate public official and I can stand on my record," said Steinbeck. "I feel pretty confident about the election."

He said his only platform is "moderation and objectivity," which is evidenced in his position on rent control. Unlike the other two candidates, Steinbeck said he does not make a definite decision at this time because he has not had the opportunity to explore all sides of the issue.

"I voted against rent control at the last town meeting because there was not sufficient evidence to warrant it. However, I am not for or against it," he said.

Steinbeck suggested that the proponents of rent control ask the town to set up a study committee so that a rational decision can be reached.

"In the past, we have had to extract facts from differing reports presented by the landlords and the proponents of rent control. A report done by a study committee would be a wise decision."

Right now, on the knowledge he has, Steinbeck is against rent control "unless there is a significant change in the circumstances of rents from last year."

ALLEN TORREY

Former Town Manager Allen Torrey has spent 29 years in Amherst. Many of those 29 years have been spent in town government. From 1954 to 1975, Torrey was town manager, and since 1975 he has served as a town meeting member.

"Based on the number of years I have lived here," said Torrey, "and my experience with municipal government, I'd be helpful to the board."

Torrey, who earns a living as treasurer and business manager for Hampshire College, says his experience at Hampshire "is tailor made to municipal government. There's not much difference with my job at Hampshire and my work with the town."

"At least maintaining and improving municipal services," is what Torrey hopes to accomplish as a member of the Board, he said.

"I don't have a great philosophical difference with rent control," he said about one currently popular issue, "I think it's an administrative nightmare."

JOANNE LEVENSON

Currently the Director of the Off-campus Housing Office at the University of Massachusetts, Levenson said she is "the best person running to represent the diverse needs of the Amherst community."

While the other candidates may contest that statement, Levenson said she will stand on her record of community activities to convince voters she deserves the seat.

She chaired the town's Fair Housing Commission, a body set up to receive and act on complaints of discrimination in local housing. She has participated in the Condominium Conversion Commission, and is a member of the League of Women Voters and the Hampshire After School Program.

"The financial picture for Amherst," she said, "is not a bad one. This is the best possible time to improve services."

Some of the issues that she said stand out in her mind as worthy of federal and state funds include street lighting, child care, parking spaces, instituting rent control, keeping the tax rate stable and reenfranchising the elderly and younger populations into the mainstream of town activities.

Coolidge uses dorm funds to support area youth programs

By MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Correspondent

In an effort to increase student involvement with the surrounding communities, the House Council of Coolidge Dormitory in the Southwest Residential College is taking a step forward through their support of two local social programs.

Glen Daly, assistant head of residence of Coolidge Lower, said, "the first of the two programs that Coolidge Dormitory is participating in is to sponsor a foster child in one of the nearby communities, who will be referred to as 'Coolidge Kid.'

Sponsoring this child will include such expenses as clothing, food and school supplies. If the program is a success, the child will be sponsored until he or she is 18-years old, he said.

The second commitment Coolidge is undertaking, Daly said, is to coptribute towards Tri-County Youth, a social service agency in Northampton. The agency offers services and housing by the state for emotionally disturbed adolescents, according to an agency employee.

The agency has two houses in Northampton and a school in Easthampton. The adolescents are placed in foster homes and eventually move out on their own.

The contribution to the Tri-County Youth Agency won't be much, compared to what they need, but it will help," Daly said.

"Coolidge dorm government is currently in the process of making the arrangements necessary to a sound beginning of both programs, which will hopefully go into effect next semester," Daly said. The money for these programs will come from dorm dues and from fund raisers, he said.

Dorm committees put on a benefit at the Hangar One last night, and proceeds from the event will go toward Tri-County Youth and sponsoring a foster child.

The House Council has designated Penny Salter of Coolidge Dormitory as "Social Action Coordinator".

"This position was established to ensure the continuance of the two programs in future years," Salter said. "One of her responsibilities will be to maintain contact with the foster child through letters."

"The reason we are pushing these programs is so the students on campus can get involved with events in the surrounding communities," Daly said. "Living on campus can tend to isolate us from the outside world. Coolidge Dormitory would like to encourage other dorms to get involved in these programs."

Working mothers examined

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Working mothers of today are better able to cope with the pressures of managing both a career and a family than they ever have been, the co-authors of a book on working women said last night at Amherst College.

Bonnie Mitelman and Jeanne Bodin, authors of Mothers Who Work; Strategies for Coping, said many working women are finding it less difficult balancing family life and the work place because of society's acceptance of working mothers.

"There are new expectations of women which are propelling women into new roles," Bodin said.

There have been "changes in the economic climate and the social world" which have increased the need and opportunity for women in the professional world, she said.

Despite the increase of working women, there still exists a great deal of pressure on mothers who decide to leave the house and enter the work force, she said.

"Many working mothers don't have time for friends and are under a great deal of stress both at home and at work," she said.

"In our society there still exists very traditional views about what mothers should do," she said. As a result, many working mothers feel "defensive and isolated, like they are doing everything alone," she said.

In compiling their book, Mitelman and Bodin said they sent surveys to thousands of working mothers.

"From the responses we got, we found a lot of women manage families and careers very well," Mitelman said.

Stress, however, continues to be a problem confronting working mothers, she said.

"People that had the less stress were those more clear on their priorities," Mitelman said.

Women who know exactly what their goals are in their career and in their family, are the ones who manage better in the work place, she said.

South African ties knocked

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate Tuesday night clarified its position on academic contact with the Republic of South Africa by merging two different resolutions.

Resolutions were presented to the Senate by John Howley, a graduate student in the economics department, and by students in the anthropology department.

The final motion, which passed 25-0 with two abstentions, states in part "that the responsible University authorities should immediately enact strict regulations to ensure that no (University) division, department, council, center, or other affiliated organization shall provide funds, regardless of their source, or otherwise provide sponsorship for any form of contact with South Africa, including teaching, research, or attending conferences.

"Furthermore, that the University will not provide funds for any scholar or other individual visiting from South Africa."

The proposal also asked that future proposal for research in South Africa not covered by the suggested guidelines be examined for political ramifications to see if the work would aid South Africa, and to see if the work could be done elsewhere.

This new motion supercedes the motion previously accepted by the senate which was considered by some graduate students and senators to be too broad and general a statement.

The Collegian comics controversy continues

Survey results show readers' opinions divided

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

When we orginally planned to survey our readers on their opinions of the comic strips, we honestly did not know what kind of response to expect. In the end, to say the least, we were surprised.

Nearly 600 Collegian readers took the time to fill out the surveys and express their opinions, many adding lengthy letters detailing their thoughts. While the volume of responses was impressive, the actual results of the survey were somewhat confusing.

In a nutshell, it appears as if something can never be all things to all people. "The UMass Zone," the most controversial of all comic strips, received very mixed reviews from our readers. People either hated or loved it, with few in between. Many of the comments added to the questionnaires reflected on "The UMass Zone," with opinions spanning the spectrum.

In their comments, some readers suggested the Collegian editors remove some or all of the existing comic strips and replace them with others, either student-drawn strips or professional syndicated strips. Unfortunately, syndicated strips cost money and in these times of tight dollars, the Collegian is not in a position to afford a second syndicated strip beyond "Bloom County." As for other student strips, we have yet to see submissions of greater quality than we currently have in the paper. Others wanted to see "Under the Influence" or other local strips return. Besides the syndicated strips, however, we only run material drawn by current students, not those who have graduated or left school.

In attempting to evaluate the results of the survey, we weighed the responses to each comic strip. "Great" responses were given a value of five points, "good" four and so on, down to "awful," with one point. Overall, "Bloom County" rated the best, with an astonishing 4.59 points out of a possible five. Of the student-drawn strips, "Scrod" rated 3.46, falling somewhere in between "fair" and "good." "The UMass Zone" was next with 3.07, slightly above a "fair" rating. Only "Katfood" (2.15) and "After the Fall" (2.48) received less than an overall "fair" rating.

While it is clear "Bloom County," "The UMass Zone" and "Scrod" have the approval of a majority of those responding to the survey, the fate of "After the Fall" and "Katfood" remains less certain. However, we do not, at this time, plan to remove any of the comic strips until we see something we feel is better.

To achieve this end, we encourage any readers who feel they can draw a superior comic strip to give it a try. Interested UMass students should draw up at least 10 sample strips with black pen on white paper of the same dimensions of the Collegian comics and submit them to our offices at room 113 Campus Center. If we like what we see, we'll give them a shot, replacing those current strips with which received the lowest reader approval rate.

Many thanks to all the readers who took the time to respond to the survey. We enjoyed hearing from you and hope you will continue to let us know what you think of your newspaper.

Comics soapbox: The readers speak

The following is a sampling of the comments returned by our readers on the issue of the comic strips:

"If people can't take an artist's joke, then they shouldn't be reading their strips. I think the funniest ones are the ones that cut people down, especially the ones that are practical and talk about sex. That's what students are into, not drunken fish...Satire is acceptable. Out and out harassment is not...The UMass Zone wallows in the gutter of bigotry and contemptable behavior...There is a fine line between 'poking fun' and insulting the object of the joke and I think sometimes that line crossed and then people should hollar long and loud, but so far there have been, in my opinion, few reasons for it...I think you have some nerve denying me Bloom County on a Thursday morning when just thinking of seeing it got me through a three and one-half hour accounting exam on Wednesday night...Don't let a few paranoid individuals stop the wheels of free speech from printing what the majority of us enjoy reading...There's a difference between insults and parodies...Comics should not be taken so seriously. That's why they're called comics...The comics are the only reason I go out of my way to pick up a Collegian. Then, after I read them, I may take notice of some of the articles...A liberal newspaper such as yours should not be hypocritical and indulge in censorship...What kind of impression do you think our shoddy comics leave on prospective students and their parents when they visit our campus? Whether you like it or not, our paper should be representative of the school and I think the UMass comics are too vulgar to be printed in our paper...All the fuss about people being offended by the comics is silly because they are not funny and rather moronic and those who find them funny are also moronic...Humor, whether good or bad, allows people to keep a sense of perspective about life...You don't see President Reagan getting pissed off because of some funmaking cartoon, do you?...these comics are grating and inconsistent with the rest of the Collegian, which is informative, professional and enjoyable...I realize it may be hard to think of new ideas day after day, but the consistency of humor is bad...Maybe you should stop printing the stupid letters attacking the comics authors...What makes someone laugh won't do the same to another...The comics allow some of us to express our feelings toward subjects in Amherst, there will always be someone who is offended by something in the Collegian, comics...Do we need a constant diet of sexism, rock & roll and bragging about pot and beer consumption?...The Collegian has many more serious problems than the comics to worry about...You have to insult someone. Insult me, I don't care...Opus is God...Don't let a bunch of right wing, stiff-necked, reactionary stuffed shirts stifle free expression...There must be something wrong with me. When I read the Collegian's comic section I may laugh, I may not, but I don't take offense...The characterization of Scrod himself is hilarious and would amuse me no matter what situation you put him in...Although just a comic, the 'UMass Zone' goes too far in justifying the Zoo Mass image of this campus...Several times I have felt that certain comic strips were tasteless, but so long as they are put forth in the interest of humor, I feel we must be big enough to laugh at ourselves...I think Opus is the sexiest, cutest, most intelligent, lovable penguin I've had the pleasure of getting to know through 'Bloom County'...comics are very important to the morale of the school. To cancel them will cause widespread depression and quite possibly mass suicide...These comics do not deserve to be called art...What about Polish and Italians who have humorously taken jokes about their nationality and laughed together? I should know, I'm Italian...Since so many people have complained, maybe instead we should be asking ourselves whether we are all losing our sense of humor...People who are offended by something as insignificant as a comic strip obviously have a problem...The Collegian should get rid of the editorial page and put in another page of comics...As a comedian myself, I too have encountered the problem of easily offended persons. The sheer term 'comic' (as in performer or printed serial) implies that the subject matter is not being presented in a serious tone. If one insists on taking everything she or he reads so seriously and as a personal attack, that is their problem..."

Editor's note: The following letter, received in response to our comics survey, examines the issue so well, we have decided to print major portions of it.

Satire is a delicate art, a balancing act and an exercise in community trust. In an environment where racial or ethnic tensions are high, where conflicting economic or political interests are perceived, or where the members of varied interest groups suspect each other's motives, the most innocent fun-poke can become magnified into an affront or an assault on one's dignity and character. Unfortunately, these perceived conflicts and tensions exist at UMass.

There is no easy answer for this problem — except that the cartoonist should strive to place him/herself in the shoes, if only for a moment, of the "victim," and should decide realistically how he or she would feel if on the receiving end of a perceived insult. Then act — or draw — accordingly.

Some targets are fair game for everyone, of course. Those who are in a position of imposed power and authority over us can expect to be harpooned. It's part of the psychological redress, the impulse to freedom which chafes at imposed, external controls and laws which one has never been consulted about prior to their imposition by force.

The problem with the cartoons does not lie in this direction. It arises where people who are in a position of perceived powerlessness or social disadvantage in the social order (whether or not their perception is justified) find themselves victimized by the perceived "haves," or at least by individuals who are "not of their own kind," and who are therefore felt to be unauthorized to make fun of the social condition of a group in which the cartoonist is not a peer.

The extreme examples are obvious: nobody in this day and age (I hope, but sometimes I wonder) would dare to draw a black-faced, gap-toothed, banjo-strumming, striped-suited minstrel, and label him "Dean of Black Culture." The immediate horror, revulsion and outrage from the community as a whole would simply not bear it, and the cartoonist would be quickly sacked.

What about the "shadow areas"? The categories, and assignments of "peer privilege" to poke fun, can be subjective.

Gays and lesbians, ideologically-feminist-separatist women, and anti-nuclear activists, are all politically-partisan minorities to some degree. It would seem to me that the ideologies they represent are fair game in the marketplace of debate (which includes the privilege of peer satire), while some care should be taken by the cartoonist not to create cruel or derogatory ("black-faced minstrel") stereotypes of the people involved in the ideological debate. Clearly, there are gay, feminist and anti-nuclear cartoonists as well, with firm claims to peer privilege in criticizing their own.

What should be off-limits is the mockery or criticism of [illegible] or religious groups, by cartoonist "outsiders" who do not have peer standing to make fun of a minority culture. That sort of intervention is rightly perceived as arrogant, insulting, and meddling — and I believe it leads to most of the ill-feeling engendered by the Collegian's cartoons. The stink from one bad mis-fire casts a pall over the legitimate role of satirical cartooning, and makes the whole community less likely or less able to laugh at things which could use a little laughter. Cartoonists should be self-policing and self-vigilant in this matter. Empathy and reflection should be at the tip of the pen — but the mischievous twinkle in the eye does not need to be dimmed because of that!

On the issue of political satire, we need to be thicker-skinned — and that includes ALL of us! People who take entrenched political positions, whether against nukes, against nuclear families, or against the myriad other perceived political ills of the society — need to be reminded that not everyone believes the salvation of the world turns upon their particular cause! We all have a right to lob satirical vollies at each other in the purely political arena, so long as this does not degenerate into vicious character assassination or brutal personal attack.

I hope this goes some distance toward ventilating the issue of collegiate cartooning and I expect that I'll continue to find the Collegian's cartoons to be the most consistently enjoyable part of the paper!

EDITORIAL/OPINION

El Salvador is not Vietnam

Editor's note: This is the second in a 3 part series which will examine U.S. foreign policy in Central America with a particular emphasis on America's role in El Salvador.

Of all the buzz words swirling around the current protests against U.S. intervention in El Salvador, none is more prevalent than the rallying cry, "No More Vietnams!". Now this phrase is part of a much bigger entity known collectively as: THE LESSONS OF VIETNAM. Or perhaps, more precisely: WHAT THE LIBERALS HAVE DECIDED ARE THE LESSONS OF VIETNAM. Now I'd be the last person to say there is nothing to be learned from Vietnam. However, since everybody has come up with some example of the lessons of Vietnam, one should be more careful in using this ambiguous phrase. Be the reasons economic, strategic, cultural or historical, trying to lump the two countries together is simply not possible. Each is unique in its own right.

Katherine Curda

Now right about now I suspect a lot of people out there are saying to themselves, "Aha! She's one of those right-wing paranoids who hasn't gotten over her inordinate fear of communism like we have and who hasn't yet realized that not all Marxist-Leninists are totalitarian stooges of the Soviets." Au contraire people. I am simply someone who has kept up with world affairs and who is quite aware of what has happened to other countries in which groups, similar to the rebels in El Salvador, have taken over. During the Vietnam war similar protesters stated adamantly that the U.S. supported Saigon government was brutal and corrupt, while the Vietcong and their North Vietnamese allies really represented the people of Vietnam. Since the El Salvador protesters are so intent on linking El Salvador to America's war in Vietnam, let us look at Vietnam eight years after "liberation."

In 1975 when North Vietnamese tanks rolled into Saigon and America left with its tail kicked in, most progressives cheered. Some may have had reservations, but more probably agreed with Tom Hayden who said, "We knew what the Vietnamese contribution to humane socialism would be. Here we began to understand the possibilities for a socialism of the heart." Well contrary to Tom Hayden, George McGovern and the rest of the anti-war crowd, Vietnam today is not an example of socialism of the heart, but of the gun. As of today it is almost completely dependent on the Soviet Union for economic and military support as well as for emergency food, all totalling roughly three million dollars a day. More than one million people have risked their lives fleeing Vietnam in small boats rather than live under the Hanoi regime. As one elderly woman stated, "It is better to die at sea than live under the communists in Vietnam. There is no life for anyone anymore in Vietnam."

Of those who remained, 50,000 skilled workers, labeled as "unreliables", have been sent to "re-education camps". Many others have been sent to so-called "New Economic Zones", which are better known as harsh lands that the workers are suppose to make livable, often without proper tools or supplies. Recently it was revealed that Hanoi sent 30,000 political prisoners to the Soviet Union as "guest workers" to labor under harsh conditions on the natural gas pipeline. Also let us not forget that over 200,000 Vietnamese troops are fighting in Cambodia, while 50,000 now occupy Laos.

Now given these examples of the abuses of human rights, one would assume that the progressives would be up in arms. Some are. For example Joan Baez in 1979 wrote "An Open Letter to the Socialist Republic of Vietnam", protesting these and other abuses. In response she received a rebuttal by a number of former war critics who, most likely, are now active in the El Salvador protest movement. In their letter these progressive intellectuals attacked Joan Baez for her public criticisms of the new regime in Vietnam and insisted that, "Vietnam now enjoys human rights as it has never known in history." Statements such as this may salve the consciences of guilt ridden intellectuals, but a lie is still a lie, even in defense of socialism.

In disagreeing with the El Salvador protesters, I do not doubt their sincerity. Rather, it is their track record I find inexcusable. Idealists and armchair revolutionaries such as these have existed forever, I suspect. The first generation bowed to Stalin, the second to Mao, Castro and Ho Chi Mihn, and now the newest generation pays homage to the Sandinistas of Nicaragua and the rebels of El Salvador. One of these days they may get it right, but luckily for them they do not have to live under the "socialism of the heart" they feel is so wonderful for others. Perhaps the rebels in El Salvador are different, but somehow I doubt it. Let us hope that El Salvador does not become another Vietnam, one is bad enough.

The end result of co-ed living

Sleeping around is not a new phenomenon to UMass, it is timeless tradition that deserves more recognition than it is currently getting. At one time or another, we have all explained to mom and dad that co-ed living is similar to a family environment. We explain that we feel more comfortable in a more realistic setting. Maybe we've developed a warped idea of just how realistic our environment is. Or are families doing stranger things these days?

Lise Zeiger

Take a look at this campus at six in the morning: Bleary eyed sophomores are groping their way up Orchard Hill to their rooms in Webster. Simultaneously, half the third floor of Leach is wondering when they can return to their own beds. A freshman is stranded in JQA wondering why the escort service doesn't run a shift at dawn. A high school kid from Natick is trying to figure out where is older sister went in the middle of the night. No son, McNamara doesn't have a library.

These students are not out consuming knowledge in Goodell. They are not strolling around the pond discussing The Ascent of Man. The library closes at twelve, the Pub locks up at one, and the computer rooms aren't big enough to handle all the people who claim to be there. No mom, they're hard-core students now, the product of their innovative co-ed living. They're sleeping around.

Some dormitory floors are more incestuous than others. Everyone is with someone, and no one can keep track of the current pairings. Intricate systems have been developed so that roommates do not appear at the wrong time. Suddenly ties appear on the doorknobs. Masking tape covers the key holes, and the memo boards warn "Do not even think of entering this room."

Other masters of the trade are more subtle. Did you ever notice that some women go out to study with their boyfriends just in time to catch the last bus to Southwood? The same type of person knows when the first bus leaves from Sunderland on Friday morning even though he lives in Gorman. Some residents of Southwest have two local addresses, one in Kennedy and one in Crampton. Hopefully this is helping to explain why your RA isn't around much.

No, your RA didn't take the job because he looks forward to 36 hour marathon workshops on time-management. He's not the socially-aware kid on the block for nothing. He's got a single, or in local lingo, the RA's best friend. Singles are useful for all types of functions. You can have privacy, solitude, and no one will question your taste when your perfume collection contains both Tatiana and Brut. We know what's going on in there — must be that community atmosphere they talked about at Freshman Orientation. Remember that three day festival of knowledge one summer where they told you each dorm had a personality of its own. Rubbish. Every dorm sleeps around.

And so do many of the more refined looking women we see on campus. They live in Brett because they feel safer in a quiet dorm with men around. They go to sleep religiously at ten each night. They still believe in ironing, and when guys come in the room, the door stays open. Sounds innocent enough. The picture on the dresser is a 210 pound linebacker for BC. She might even be there this weekend. But if her mother calls, Miss Innocence is out studying. And mom, don't worry, its just like being at home.

Skiiers in Florida get burned

To the Editor;

As a member of the UMass Ski Club I feel that it should be brought to their attention the dissatisfaction that I and other members feel about the poor bus service used to take us to and from Ft. Lauderdale.

On our way back from Florida, we ran out of gas twice, suffered a broken fuel pump, flat tire, and were forced to put up with an eight hour delay. During this ordeal, our drivers gave us very little information, making it seem that it wasn't important to tell us what was wrong.

I feel that those of us who put up with this for thirty eight hours should be given some form of compensation by getting some of the money back that we gave the Ski Club expecting a proper bus service to be used.

"On The Other Hand"...Hands off

To the Editor;

Those of you that have found it necessary to take a C.A.T.E. poster for your very own, I can understand your actions. We are proud of our work as well and think this year's Course and Teacher Evaluation poster is one of the finest an amateur collector can find on campus. However, we would appreciate it if they were left up for at least a few more weeks. This way everyone can benefit from the art work of our staff. Please, if you can't wait that long, call us at the SGA and we'll give you one personally.

We hope that everyone will "take the time" to return their forms. The Course and Teacher Evaluation Guide, "On the Other Hand", is a totally student-run and supported project, and if we all cooperate with it, we all benefit from it.

I don't know about the rest of you, but I'm glad we had that vacation. It was a much needed break from the schooling, but, by gum, we're back and gosh are we all ready to roll. I'm proud to say I passed all my midterms so I'll be here till at least the end of the semester, heh, heh, heh.

Hopefully you went out a lot and spent all your money during vacation because when it comes to going out this weekend, there aren't too many exciting acts to choose from. I guess that's okay 'cuz if you were like me, you probably didn't get to work on all those papers you promised yourself you'd do last week. Tonight you'll find those classic swingers, Roomful of Blues, at the Rusty Nail, and the Museum Direktors, who have just released their first 45, with the Chills at the Hangar One.

Friday, April Fool's night is Northampton night with the New England Jazz Quartet at the Iron Horse. The members of this group are four of the best players in the area and perform both original and cover jazz. If you like to dance, the Pleasure Dots will be at Sheehan's Cafe. Their covers draw from the world of Motown and Rockabilly and their original material reflects these roots.

You are an Australian journalist on your first overseas assignment. You are just off of the South East coast of Asia, in Djakara. There is poverty and starvation all around you, and a threat of communism in the air. Now ask yourself the question asked initially by Billy Kwan and repeated periodically throughout this film, "What then, must we do?". The answer: You are a journalist, so you remain detached and barbarously "headline hungry".

This is both Guy Hamilton's story and the story Guy, Hamilton, as a journalist, tries to get. Our narrator is the reporter's adopted native photographer, Billy Kwan. Kwan's idealistic honesty makes available to him the major political contacts of which reporters dream. It is Billy's perceived faith in Guy as a righteous man before reporter that leads him to use his influence to make Guy's expedition extremely successful.

In order to understand the people of Djakara, Billy tells us, we must understand the story of their puppets. Here, symbolically, the characters and their roles for the duration of the film are spelled out for us—"the left and right in constant conflict." Billy is certain that Guy will choose the proper side. It is this identification with the prospective do-gooder that induces Billy to subtly arrange for the meeting and re-meetings of Guy with the woman Billy himself loves but cannot have: Jilly Bryant.

Jilly, a British diplomat, is equally as beautiful as Guy is and, subordinate to the political theme, the two fall in love. Jilly tells Guy of the civil war that is about to break loose in an a t to save his life. Unfortunately, once again woman sacrifices for man, and man uses woman to further himself.

In a mad rush to broadcast this top-secret information, Hamilton uses all his resources in the hope that someone else will expose it to him, an underhanded, indirect way of exposing the woman he "loves".

Billy is more crushed by this betrayal than is Jilly. For the first time, he sees his light of hope as a mutinous flame. "All is clouded by desire," he told us earlier. This is clearly the case of our disappointing romantic lead. "I gave you my trust, I made you see things, I created you," the frantically bewildered Billy shouts. What then must we do?

After his faith in Guy is destroyed, Billy decides he must take it upon himself, with the powerlessness of singularity (as opposed to the powerfullness of the media) to make a radical plea for justice.

The story ends as the war breaks out and the assembly line killing begins. Our anti-hero, with one usable eye and a soon to be dead employee at his service, finds his way out of the war and into his lover's arms again. What then must we do? Stand up, drained of emotion from a powerful plot, but dissatisfied with the lead who selflessly errs, and leave the theater.

If you love theater or just like inexpensive entertainment then you're in luck. There will be at least 15 productions in the Hampshire Valley before school closes, so stay tuned.

This week's rundown:

The Amherst College Department of Theater will present Harold Pinter's The Birthday Party, an avante-garde classic, that demonstrates Pinter's sense of control and his use of elusive and subliminal language. Performances begin at 8 p.m. on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, in Fayerweather Theater at Amherst College. Tickets are $1.00 general admission. For reservations, call 542-2277.

Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing will be performed in the Mount Holyoke Lab Theater at 8 p.m. this Saturday and Sunday, as well as April 6-10. Tickets are $4 for the general public and $2 for students.

This is your last chance to see the Stage West production of A Streetcar Named Desire by Tennessee Williams. The show closes Saturday night. For ticket information, call 781-2340.

American Buffalo plays at 8:00 p.m. every Friday and Saturday night throughout April at the Present Stage, 19 Hawley Street Northampton. Tickets are $5.00. For more info: 586-5886.

Next week's picks:

Reserve your tickets now for Buried Child, an intriguing drama about a man who returns home to alienation because of some tragic, horrid acts that took place years earlier. The play is full of underlining meanings and has a great cast. Buried Child will be presented at Hampden Theater April 7-10 with evening performances at 8 p.m., and Sunday matinees beginning at 2 p.m. Tickets are $1.50 for students and $2.50 for the general public. Reservations: 545-2803.

Another promising show is the UMass Department of Theater's Comedy of Errors, Shakespeare's story of twin brothers who are separated at birth and who meet many years later. The Rand Theater show runs April 7-9 and 13-16. Performances begin at 8 p.m. Tickets are $3.50 for the general public and $2.50 for students. Call for reservations: 545-3511.

The Third World Theater Series will close its 1983 Spring Season with Yellow Fever, a PanAsian satire on Humphry Bogart's character Sam Spade. The play will be presented at 8 p.m. on April 16, at Bowker Auditorium. For further information call 545-2511.

It didn't take a genius to tell your mind wasn't on your studies. But it did take a couple of smart roomies to do something about it.

So out came the calculators. And the doughnuts. And they started drilling you until you knew physics as well as you know yourself.

When it was all over, you showed them that there was one more thing you knew something about – gratitude. Tonight, let it be Löwenbräu.

Löwenbräu. Here's to good friends.

UM softball team in home opener

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Mother Nature has no respect for opening day.

The University of Massachusetts softball team opens their home slate this afternoon at 2:30 p.m. with a doubleheader against Brown University. And it looks to be as cold as the past few days.

That does not make coach Elaine Sortino very happy.

"It will be critical that our pitchers use some change-ups to keep Brown off stride. Brown is a free-swinging club that can hit the ball," said Sortino.

If there is a lot of wind, which has been the case the past few days, it could give UMass' two freshman pitchers a problem.

Jackie Gaw takes a rip in action last year. The Minutewomen take on Brown in a doubleheader starting at 2:30 p.m. at Lower NOPE field.

Cathy Reed will start the first game and Lynn Stockley is slated to start the second game. Both pitchers saw extensive action during the trip to South Carolina where both turned in solid performances.

Stockley threw well in wins over Seton Hall (by a 9-1 score) and East Strousbourg (4-1, exhibition win).

"They still have a lot to learn," said Sortino after the trip. But you would never know that they were freshmen by the way they played in some tough situations."

Reed tossed a two hitter in the 1-0 win over Rutgers and came close to throwing a perfect game against Ohio University, but had to settle for a no-hitter in a 8-0 win. Against Ohio, Reed retired 22 batters in a row.

The Minutewomen came away from their southern trip with an impressive 7-2 record and now everyone will be trying to knock them off.

"Brown will be up, up, up for us," explained Sortino. "We're a major challenge for them.

"We have been a little spotty since coming back. It has been hard to concentrate. The last two practices have been held in the freezing cold. But we have to play in weather like that."

Massachusetts will send out a tough defensive line-up anchored by Jackie Gaw behind the plate. Allyson Rioux will be at shortstop, Chris Coughlin at third, Debbie Pickett at second and Sally Mahar at first.

Injurywise, Patty Masury (pitcher) is still out and second baseman Missy Oman is questionable with a sprained left wrist. Oman, who rotates at second with Pickett, may be saved for this weekend's big matchup with Rutgers on Saturday. UMass' Atlantic 10 rivals are anxiously awaiting a chance to avenge the 1-0 loss inflicted upon them in South Carolina.

But, the game at hand is Brown.

The Minutewomen proved themselves down in South Carolina and now "we have to prove ourselves up here (north)," said Sortino.

Gametime is 2:30 p.m. at NOPE, where the Minutewomen have redone their infield and recently installed a new fence in the outfield.

And hopefully, Mother Nature will find it in her heart to make it a playable opening day.

Gorilla warfare returns to UMass

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

"This is going to be an exiting team to watch."

When he made the statement, a smile splashed across Richard Garber's face and you knew there was no reason to doubt him.

"There won't be as much dash or flash as before but this group here is going to get the job done," Garber predicted. "We've scrimmaged a couple of times now and these guys were making some great plays," said Garber in his voice of enthusiasm. "Great to watch."

Gorilla Warfare begins Saturday in Amherst, 1 p.m. at Boyden Field and those who don't head home for Easter are advised not to miss this one.

Hobart is the defending Division III champion and also handed defending Division I champ North Carolina Tar Heels their first loss in three years earlier this month.

No doubt about it, General Garber's troops will have to be armed and dangerous when they step into battle Saturday at Boyden Hill and a mob of Gorilla worshipers would help the war effort.

"If we can't get up for this one then I don't know when we will," said Garber. "But we have to be up every game because every team on our schedule is good."

Indeed, when you scan the Gorilla's schedule, there is no cease fire in sight.

After Hobart Saturday, the Minutemen face Cornell Wednesday, and Rutgers next Saturday at home, both with top notch lacrosse programs. Syracuse and Maryland, both nationally ranked, will come to Boyden Hill later this season and the Gorillas must go to Army territory when they take on the Cadets later this year.

But the main concern now is Hobart.

"We have to take games one at a time and stay on an even keel," said Garber.

The Gorillas defeated Hobart 12-9 last year but the main UMass scoring threat, Weller, who netted six goals in the win last year, can only watch from the sideline as an assistant coach under Garber.

The Gorillas will look to put the squeeze on Hobart, Saturday, at 1 p.m., at Boyden Field in the season opener.

Defensively, Garber feels the Gorillas are solid. The Gorillas gave up a total of 52 goals in the final four game nosedive last year after surrendering 37 goals in their first six games in which they were 6-0, but Garber doesn't fault the defense for tailspin.

"We were banged up a bit in the Syracuse game and then we stayed there and it rained a couple days and we played Cornell and lost a tough game. We had four games in one week because of makeup games late in the year and we were hurt."

Ray Cozzi is gone as is Steve Martino but Garber has junior tri-captain John Mincone back for his third year on defense, along with returnees Bradly Broadwell and Barry Cain.

Freshmen Tom Aldrich and Mark Stratton will see plenty of action at defense, but Garber plans to bring the freshmen along at a slower pace.

"We're playing more freshmen this year than in the past," said Garber. "But I like to play them 15 or 20 minutes at first to get them used to Division I college lacrosse."

The goaltending situation, which was a revolving door last year, is still up for grabs but it looks like junior Jerry Moreau will get the start in the nets against Hobart.

"Moreau has been playing well lately," said Garber, "but Bennie (senior Chris Bennedetto) and Dan Altschuler, who rotated last year depending on who was hot, are excellent players."

Regardless of who is in goal, Gorilla watchers shouldn't miss the initial assault on the home front Saturday.

Pam Moryl should be the main offensive threat for UMass, when the Minutewomen take on Yale at 3 p.m. at NOPE field.

UM women's lacrosse face the Fightin' Elis

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

As the defending national champion University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team prepare for the third game of the season, head coach Pam Hixon said her team will face tougher competition this year, but still anticipates a successful season for her squad.

"A coach never likes to speculate that they're going to be first place champions," Hixon said. "But, there's not going to be a team that's going to blow us out. The schedule on the whole is beefed up. The games will become a little more difficult but I think we'll do well."

The Minutewomen, who will take a 1-1 record to Nope field today at 3:00 to play Yale, have been ranked in the top 10 in the country for the past five years. In 1982 UMass was the national champion with a 10-0 record and came in second in 1979. The Minutewomen have been the New England Champions for three years.

Leading the attack on offense against Yale this afternoon will be sophomore Pam Moryl and juniors Linda Haytayan and Tish Stevens. Moryl was the Minutewomen's leading scorer last season with 38 goals and 12 assists for 50 points. Already this year Moryl has scored two hat tricks to give her six points on the season.

"I anticipate her to do well in the scoring department again this year," Hixon said of Moryl.

Stevens had 18 goals and 12 assists and Haytayan scored 17 goals with five assists last season as the third and fourth leading goal scorers.

"With those three coming back, I think we have the potential to score a lot of goals," Hixon said.

"Attack-wise we definitely have made some changes." Hixon said that due to injuries some position switching has been going on.

"It takes a while for you to have a sense for each other," she said. "The more we play, the more consistent we'll develop in our attack."

According to Hixon the defensive picture is "secure". Returning goaltenders senior Rita Hubner and sophomore Debbie DeJesus will share the net duties for the season. Last year the two combined had an average of less than one goal per game scored on them during the season.

Returning defensemen are senior Ro Tudryn, juniors Carol Progulske and Yvette Rheault and sophomore Linda Bevelandwr.

"With the exception of Kathy Hourihan (senior) the rest of the defense are back in the same positions they were in last year," Hixon said. "Kathy is the only new defensive player in that unit and she does a good job."

Hixon said she feels the match against Yale will be a close one. Yale's top scorer Nichole Piasecki had 18 goals and 12 assists last season and has three goals scored in two games this season. Carolyn Thorson was the second leading scorer for Yale last year with 22 goals and four assists.

The two teams have equal records of 1-1. Yale beat Trenton 11-7 and lost to AIW champions Temple 18-1. Last year, UMass defeated Yale on the road, 10-2, but Hixon said she expects the game to be closer this year.

Oscar '83: competition's pretty stiff

By ANDREW GORDON

I might as well admit right off that I'm not going into these Oscar predictions with the greatest track record. Last year I got only one category correct (John Gielgud for Best Supporting Actor in Arthur) and said something to the effect of "One thing's for sure, Chariots of Fire definitely won't win (best picture)." My Collegian predictions the year before were no better; again, only one right (Robert DeNiro for Raging Bull). I'd like to say that this year picking the winners will be easier; but that's not the case. The competition for the 55th Annual Academy Awards is the stiffest it's been in years.

I'll start with Best Supporting Actor, because that's the award they usually begin with. This year the category exemplifies the commercialism that has always been a part of the academy. Dozens of great performances in smaller films (everyone in Diner) were passed over for some pat, stock peformances by Hollywood veterans. Charles Durning was nominated for his comedic role as the mayor in The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas while truly funny men Eddie Murphy and Michael Keaton went unnoticed for their parts in 48 Hours and Night Shift, respectively. This year only one nominee, John Lithgow in a brilliant performance as the transexual Roberta Muldoon in The World According to Garp, truly deserves the award, but I don't think he'll get it. Neither will Durning or Robert Preston for Victor/Victoria. James Mason has a shot, The Verdict, but I think the award will go to Louis Gossett for his sappy, overrated drill sergeant role in An Officer and a Gentleman.

There are some good performers vying for Best Supporting Actress. Lesley Ann Warren won't win for her bombshell in Victoria/Victoria and although I love Teri Garr I don't think she will either. Garr's Tootsie co-star Jessica Lange has a better shot. Kim Stanley, who plays Lange's mother in Frances, is an acclaimed legit actress and she, too, has a shot. Glenn Close should win for Garp — she was tremendous — but I'm guessing they'll give it to Hollywood's newest darling: Jessica Lange.

The Best Actress category has really only two potential winners: Jessica Lange for Frances and Meryl Streep for Sophie's Choice. Performances by Julie Andrews (Victor/Victoria) and Debra Winger (An Officer and a Gentleman) can't hold a candle to them. Sissy Spacek, for Missing, also won't win. Her role is too small and she won the award two years ago. It's a toss-up between Lange and Streep. Although she won the award only three years ago, I think Meryl Streep will win — and deservedly — for her incredible and powerful performance.

Best Actor; here things really start getting tricky. The nominees are Ben Kingsley (Gandhi), Dustin Hoffman (Tootsie), Jack Lemmon (Missing), Paul Newman (The Verdict), and Peter O'Toole (My Favorite Year). Right off Lemmon and O'Toole have no chance. Lemmon has already won the award Oscar twice and Missing is a too controversial a film for the academy's taste. O'Toole's performance just wasn't good enough. Every year there are usually two front runner films who vie for top honors in almost every category. This year the two are Tootsie and Gandhi and this category will probably be a race between Hoffman and Kingsley, although Newman can't be discounted. Politics come into play. Newman has been making films for years and he is widely liked and respected in Hollywood; yet he has never won the Oscar. His performance in The Verdict is also his best in years. Newman has a shot. In any other year he'd be a ringer, but against Hoffman and Kingsley is another story. Both men deserve it, but several external factors may tip the scale towards Kingsley. Hoffman has already won the award (three years ago for Kramer vs. Kramer) and has a reputation for being difficult. Kingsley will undoubtedly be aided by his powerful performance in the recently released film Betrayal. I'm guessing Kingsley.

Meryl Streep's Sophie: an incredible and powerful performance and an assured Best Actress take.

The nominees for Best Picture are Gandhi, E.T., Missing, Tootsie and The Verdict. Now, Film Comment magazine thinks it will be a race between E.T. and Gandhi, but again I think it's Tootsie and Gandhi. Althoug last year's winner (Chariots of Fire) was a British production, as is Gandhi, the academy may not want to give them another award so soon. Further, I think the seriousness of the film is an asset. Comedies just about never win (Annie Hall and You Can't Take It With You being the expections). Gandhi is my pick. The Best Director almost always parallels Best Picture. Thus I'm predicting Richard Attenborough. Other nominees are Steven Spielberg, (E.T.), Sydney Pollack (Tootsie), Wolfgang Petersen (Das Boot), and Sidney Lumet (The Verdict). Incidentally, Attenborough has already received this honor from the Directors Guild.

My predictions in the minor categories are as follows: Sophie's Choice for cinematography, screenplay (adaptation), and costumes; E.T. for original score and visual effects; Gandhi for editing, art direction and make-up; Tootsie for original screenplay; Das Boot for sound; and "Eye of the Tiger" for best song.

The award cermony will be broadcaston Monday, April 11 at 10:00 p.m. The show will be hosted this year by Walter Matthau, Liza Minelli, Dudley Moore and Richard Pryor, who replace former M.C., John Carson.

The women in themselves

By NELLIE SCIUTTO

There is a sudden emphasis on "the woman in every man" in our most popular movies. As woman's rights progress, similarities in man and woman are unmasked. The World According to Garp and Tootsie are two cinematic examples of men recognizing the woman in themselves.

Roberta Muldoon (John Lithgow), the hulking transvestite and ex-Philadelphia Eagle in Garp, is much happier as a woman than as a man. His/her monstrous figure dances across the screen and manages to be feminine — yet never pretty. Muldoon faces difficulites as a woman (and as a transvestite since her appearance is somewhat revealing of her true identity), yet she never regrets the change she has made.

Lithgow as Roberta has a sensitivity and even an empathy for women that fools the audience. You begin to forget that he is a man, despite his massiveness.

Dustin Hoffman, perhaps because of his size, is a visually more convincing woman in Tootsie. The make-up routine that Michael Dorsey goes through to become Dorothy Michaels begin at 5☆00 a.m. and includes silicon pieces to creat a woman's figure.

Upon hearing Dustin Hoffman speak of his character on 20/20, his emphasis was on the fact that Dorothy Michaels is really just an emphasized part of Michael Dorsey's inner self. He claims that he wishes to be more like Dorothy in his everday life. Yet, when all is revealed in the climax of Tootsie, the topic at hand is dropped. Michael Dorsey passes off his masquerade as an act of desperation for a job. Although Dorsey's original reason for creating Dorothy is financial, the disguise is more than skin deep. Why is the issue dropped as the movie ends?

The dress and curled hair are hardly any help to a man of Lithgow's size, his technique is what carries him through. Muldoon never betrays his womanhood. Even with the diffculties Roberta faces, he doesn't deny it. Lithgow's Muldoon is a woman in the body of a man. It is for this reason that Muldoon becomes a transvestite. However humorously it's carried through, the issue at hand is never dropped by Muldoon.

Although Tootsie received rave reviews, and I still see lines around the corners near New York City theaters where it's showing, and although I loved the film there is an abruptness to the end of Dorothy Michaels. Robert Muldoon, on the other hand, is still expressing himself through Roberta Muldoon in the closing of Garp. The entire crusade that Michael claimed to his agent in defense of himself seems to become only a pecuniary matter.

The most moving characteristic about each movie is that they are not female chauvinistic. The present an important issue with a sense of humor. Both accept women as equals with differences.

Dustin Hoffman's Tootsie: the woman in every man?

The Rockabilly Revival

Don Narey traces rockabilly's roots

By DON NAREY

It was early 1954 and black radio stations, mostly segregated at the time, were quickly warming-up to the sounds of Laverne Baker and Fats Domino as rhythm and blues was coming of age. Throughout the South, country music was (as it still is) the dominant force. Miss Kitty Wells, Ernest Tubb, and the legendary Carters reigned supreme and showed no sign of dropping their crowns. The sound of popular music was still the sound of the Big Band, but the contagious drive of R&B and growing interest in electric guitars had planted the seeds of change.

Those seeds bore fruit that same year in Memphis, Tennessee where a young trucker laid down a vocal track as a birthday gift for his mother. The song was a lively R&B number called "That's Allright," and the silver-throated singer was the young Elvis Presley. Presley's early sound was fueled by the energy of the region's black soul music, but with a solid country sound. When Sun records released "That's Allright" and the follow-up "Mystery Train," it was clear that hillbilly blues had meant rhythm and blues. Rockabilly was born. The music that Alan Freed christened 1955 when Bill Hailey's "Crazy Man Crazy" became the first of such songs to hit the pop charts. Also inspired by R&B, straight rock and roll was a more diverse sound not as true to southern hillbilly and soul as was rockabilly.

Rockabilly is marked by a big country-curred voice wailing over a backbeat that you just can't shake, a twanging lead guitar and a frantic acoustic bassline. It was spawned from a time and place where racial lines were drawn all too clearly, but where blacks and whites still had to live together resulting in great cross-cultural influences. Though closely akin to R&B, rockabilly was distinctly white, Southern, working class, and male. It was the release of years of pent up frustration of a society bound and at times stiffled by its own manners. The Southern working class had had a hard day, was out to have a good time, and didn't give a damn what the neighbors thought.

The sound of Elvis Presley had spread quickly and was embraced by Lubbock High School student, Buddy Holly. Holly, like the Southern rockabilly singers, used a four-piece band, then a new concept. His early recordings, "Changing All Those Changes," the Presley-like, "Baby Won't You Come Out Tonight," and the R&B standard, "Bo Didley" were true to the rockabilly sound, but producer Norman Petty set him on a more commercially successful track. Sun, the home of Elvis, soon signed Roy Orbison ("Ooby Dooby") Johnny Cash ("Cry, Cry, Cry"), and Jerry Lee Lewis ("Whole Lotta Shakin' Going On"). Not to be outdone, Capital Records signed Eddie Cochran whose "Summertime Blues" remains a rock classic and Gene Vincent, whose success was impaired by a lack of live performances. For the crippled Vincent, performances meant great difficulty, but occasionally he'd take the stage: there he'd stand, eyes closed leaning into the mike. He stood immobile from the waist down, but his torso thrusting to every beat of "Be-Bob-a-Lula." His soaring voice was unassailable, his pained expression authentic. Carl Perkins seemed well on his way when Capital released "Blue Suede Shoes," but an auto accident soon thereafter detained his success and sent him into oblivion. It looked as though Johnny Burnnett would carry the sound into the next decade with "You're Sixteen" and "Dreaming," but that was not the case. A series of strange and often tragic twists of fate brought the rockabilly era to a premature end.

Johnny Burnnett's life ended in a 1964 boating accident, but 15 years later his son, Rocky, would carry on the rockabilly legacy. On February 3, 1959 a twin engine plane chartered by Buddy Holly crashed to a frozen Iowa field leaving no survivors. One year later Eddie Cochran was killed in the London car wreck that left Gene Vincent in a worsened physical state.

Uncle Sam temporarily drew a legend into the rank and file when Elvis Presley was drafted in 1958. Jerry Lee Lewis' marriage to his 14-year-old cousin exploded into controversey forcing him to take his talents to Europe where rock 'n roll was being discovered a decade after its birth. As Jerry Lee did a "whole lotta shakin"on the other side of the Atlantic, the Beatles left Liverpool heading in the opposite direction and American music was due for a change.

There was little room for the few remaining good 'ole boys of rock in the politically oriented sixties. A generation challenging a system that it couldn't make sense of could hardly appreciate the confident tales of the good times and bad of a way of life they no longer recognized. "Mod" music competed with hard rock; acid rock and psychedelic rock meant to challenge the values of an older America. Youth of the time grew disillusioned with the government's actions and the rejection of the status quo was reflected in the music and the styles of the time. Daringly short skirts and new sexual mores rebuked the "establishment" to the beat of the British invasion. Janis Joplin's carefree lifestyle as well as her firey voice demanded attention and The Doors' Jim Morrison gave many fathers reason to think about raising their daughters curfews. It was a time of social consciousness. Glen Frey wrote, "we thought we could change this world with words like 'love' and 'freedom'," but it changed at it's own pace.

Alvin Lee of LA's Blasters

The deaths of Morrison, Joplin, and Jimi Hendrix proved life in the fast lane was not all it was cracked up to be. The 1969 tragedy at Kent stands as a symbolic end to the age of the flower children. The killing of four students by National Guardsmen caused all Americans to consider what we had, what we wanted, and what we were willing to sacrifice. Four years later, the bulk of American forces returned from Vietnam and there could be peace at home as well as abroad.

San Francisco, home of psychedelic rock, bowed to Los Angeles, the new music captial, and "laid back" was the music on the horizon. The Eagles "Take It Easy" hit the charts in the early Seventies and was quickly accepted as the style of the day. We read How To Be Your Own Best Friend while Jackson Browne sang of life as a rambling man, and Linda Ronstadt sold her heartbreak songs to the tune of 70 million albums. Gloria Gaynor's hit, "I Will Survive," testified that broken hearts didn't mean broken lives, and the "me generation" had loving, losing and leaving on its mind. By the end of the 1970's, musical narcissism had run its course. Filling the void was a radical, long awaited change.

The self-defeating concept of punk was an export of British youth. It didn't storm the States as predicted, but it's watered-down cousin, new wave, seemed to be the shape of things to come. Punk was akin to rock 'n roll of the fifties. It was different, loud and obnoxious. But punk was confrontations, marked by instability and recognized no home base. In Great Britain, a stoic industrial nation marred by economic difficulties, much of the youth was looking for stability and an undercurrent to punk began to gain momentum.

The British rockabilly revival erupted from the club scene as the word spread that the "cats" were back. The Polecats, The [illegible] and the Straycats (formerly the Tomcats) were doing all right. Ducktail haircuts, black shoes with pink socks, the stand-up bass and singers who belted 'em from the heart provided something that was missing in the animated fury of punk: the satisfaction derived from the art of being cool.

Artists like the Stray Cats have helped put rockabilly back on the pop charts.

In the U.S., Rocky Burnnett, Johnny's son, scored a hit in '79; his own rockabilly number, "Tired of Towing The Line," and album appropriately titled, Son of Rock 'N Roll. That year Queen offered a more sophisticated version of the sound with 'Crazy Little Thing Called Love."

The Straycats, originally from New York, returned to the U.S. rejuvenated by three hits on the British charts and signed with EMI America. Last June they released Built For Speed, which went platinum (over 1 million copies sold) and broke the top ten with two singles "Rock This Town" and Stray Cat Strut." Last year New York's Peppermint Lounge held a series of successful "rockabilly riots" and it appears that rockabilly is currently a formidable undercurrent to the new-wavish, pop-dance music that dominates the American music scene. And it's not limited to its Southern birthplace or trendy New York nightspots. The L.A. based Blasters recently released a modern rockabilly disc, American Music, on Warner Bros. Houston's Teddy Boys are holding their own and Boston's Memphis Rockabilly Band sounds like, well, a Memphis rockabilly band.

The generation of the 1980's may be searching for something that might have been accessable in another time and place. After moving from the synthetic glamour of disco to the aimless frustration of punk, it may be time to search out a more secure base from which to release the angst of these uncertain times. Like their counterparts of the 1950's the eighties generation cautiously watches the heating of a cold war. We live in a time of great economic uncertainty and may be tryng to relive a past in which things seemed a little easier and winning was more than a mere possibility. Like those rockabilly rebels before us though, we'll try our best, do our jobs, go home and maybe go a little crazy. And that's allright, because the cats are

The Price is Right

Vincent Price speaks out on villainy, theater, and the state of the arts

By ELAINE SENAY

Vincent Price is perhaps one of the most accomplished individuals of the twentieth century. His career spanning five decades, he has made his mark on Broadway, on the London stage, in Hollywood, American and British radio and television, the art world, the lecture circuit, literature and haute cuisine. His acting ability has only recently been acknowledged, but he has always endured with audiences, young and old.

Price is a native of St. Louis, Missouri and he graduated from Yale with a degree in English and Art History. His first major role was on the London stage in "Victor Regina" which brought him to Broadway playing opposite Helen Hayes. He began his film career playing romantic leading men until he turned to his more famous villainous roles. He is perhaps best known for the series of films based on the stories of Edgar Allen Poe. Price has drawn praise for his oneman portrayal of Oscar Wilde in "Diversions and Delights." The show ran on Broadway and enjoyed a national tour.

This interview was conducted in the office of the chairman of the UMass Theater Department. The interview was part of Price's three-day visit to the University of Massachusetts and his appearance in his presentation of "The Villains Still Pursue Me."

* * * *

Other Voice: Tell me about your most recent book, "The Man and the Monster." Is it about villainy? Or is it just a comic piece?

Vincent Price: No, it isn't about either, really. It is a very serious book that my son and I did together about the things in life, and in mythology, and in all of history that are larger than life. "The monster," chaos, the Leviathan, you know — the things that were there right from the beginning of folklore and mythology and had to be overcome. The book deals with the kind of subliminal fears that people have of things larger than life. But it was really a much deeper book than that and I think the publisher — who finally went out of business — was really very sloppy in the handling of it. He wanted it to be a kind of facetious books and to be about movie monsters — and well, there have been dozens of those and we didn't want to do that. It got very good notices, actually. But it was the the kind of book, that they (the publishers) wanted, therefore they didn't push it.

O.V.: It seems from your lecture last night that you've made really an in-depth study of villainy, and of the villainous roles that you've done. Do you find that these basic fears that you covered in the book have reflected in a lot of the movies, and in a lot of the literature that's been published in the 20th century.?

Price: Oh, yes. I mean, very much. It all stems out of the Gothic novel of the 19th century, and a lot of it out of Edgar Allen Poe. He was one of the very first people to deal in this area and out of it came the romantic novel — the Gothic novel, as they call it. And then, you know, the other people like the French short story writers — who were really following Poe and his initiative of the basic fears and passions of man — took it from there.

O.V.: Last night you stated your feelings on today's horror films. I was hoping you could first re-iterate that point, and secondly, I'd like to know if this is why you've made so few films since the early '70's, in terms of the pure horror genre?

Price: Really, the last films that I made were the ones that I really enjoyed, like Theater of Blood which was a marvelous send-up. They never really sent me any scripts after that. When I did get some, they'd be exactly the same story (as Theater of Blood) in a different way, you know, in a different plot maybe, but I mean basically the same story. Or they were overly violent. Since I am active in other areas, I really didn't need to take them.

O.V.: But do you believe that today's films are no longer suspenseful?

Price: I think they've lost a sense of humor, and I really think that humor — and I don't mean funny or send-ups — I mean that they have a basic sense of humor. But some of them are really terrible. You know, I mean they're violent and they have no writing in them at all. They're just a series of technical acts of violence. And I know how they're done and consequently, they don't take me in!

O.V.: Do you have any thoughts on the idea that the violence in horror films carries over into the violence that's in society?

Price: Well, I think there is some of that; I don't think there is any question about it. But my definition of a horror picture was Taxi Driver, which I think was one of the most terrifying pictures I ever saw. Or Marathon Man, you know, they were really frightening pictures for me. Taxi Driver was the inspiration for that little fellow who took a pot-shot at the president, you know. Yes, I do think they have some influence, but no more than the front-page of the newspaper. I just think there is too much violence even though they're valid films to make. I think we are at a point in America where we have no humor at all. Everything is so serious, you know, and so boring. Because there is fun in life, I mean, there is the fun of Charlie Brown, isn't there. Oh, thank God for the car toonists. The political cartoonists, I think, are the mos fun in the world; I'd rather read a good political cartoon than all of Reagan's speeches combined.

O.V.: What do you think of film and theater critics i: general?

Price: I think there are some of them who are marvelous. When I started to do the Oscar Wilde thing, I started out in San Francisco, and San Francisco's a wonderful theater town, a very educated audience because of ACT: American Contemporary Theater. I read the notices, and they were very, very good notices — they made it a hit. But they were critical about a certain area in the second act. We looked at it very carefully and I said: "Well, you know, I agree with them. I think we're really getting a message here that's something to follow." And so did the director, and so did the author, and we sat down and re-wrote the whole second act, right from the critics suggestions. I mean, they didn't tell us line by line, I don't mean that, but a certain mood and a kind of indulgence that was going on in the second act that shouldn't have been there. They were dead right. But there are the ones like Simon in New York. I can't tell you, he makes me so angry. And even if it's not about somebody I know, you know, I get so angry with him I want to kill him. I want to go and tear the paper up, burn it down, arson, murder! A real critic like George Bernard Shaw could be constructive. They can be destructive, murderous, but they should also be constructive. Vincent Canby I think is very good, a very good critic. Simon, I think, is writing for his own amusement. He's writing because everyone thinks he's witty. There's always been someone like that in New York. But we have dreadful critics out on the West Coast. We have one woman who's very good, the rest of them don't know what they are talking about. I mean, you go to see a play and you read the notice the next day and you think, "that ain't the play I saw!"

O.V.: You spoke about a short, animate piece you narrated. Don't you get a lot of submissions like this?

Price: Oh yea, and I do a lot of them too. A bunch of kids came up from San Diego one time. There was a young boy, a Japanese boy who was a brillvant photographer and he showed me some stills they had done in a thing called "Annabelle Lee." It was very simple, really, very simple. But it was so beautiful and they asked me if I would do the narration for it because then they felt with a "name" attached to it, they'd be able to get some attention. And they did, they got right up to the Academy Awards! It was just fun to do, because that's what I think the person who's been in it a long time should do — that's what he's there for, to be used.

O.V.: Are there any projects that you have been considering lately — say a play or something — where you'd like to have control over, or better, a real say in what's going on and how it's going to be done?

Price: Well I try now, you know, I've been at it for nearly fifty years now and I really try not to accept things that are not a challenge. And, I mean, another mystery show or horror show is something I wouldn't do unless it really was witty and fun and scary, and everything was right about it. Otherwise, I wouldn't do it; I wouldn't want any part of it.

O.V.: You're the host of "Mystery" and when I watch the show, right before it, they fill time with some quick cartoons by Gorey. Do you find his kind of Victorian, low-key sensibility appealing? Would you like to do a film or something with that kind of element to it, that kind of low-key dryness?

Price: Yes, I think I would. I think that kind of Charles Adams humor is terribly funny. I don't think they've every really caught it on the screen. But I really want to do what I want to do. Today, being with that class is such an excitement, it's a challenge! How much can you get out of the, how much can you give them. It's a tremendous challenge!

O.V.: I know in your lecture last night you commented how Clark Gable and Humphrey Bogart have a certain "unsettling quality" about them — Is he really good or bad? That sort of thing. I find, to go back to Gorey, that when you start reading "Amphi-gorey" and some of the other books that there's a certain unsettling quality to these cartoons as well. Just like, "What is he talking about?"

Price: I love it. I love Gorey. There's something funny in the reasoning for those introductions to the Mystery thing. The British don't make television to fit our time pattern. When they get through making it, that's the end of it. In London, a show will go of the air at 16 minutes before nine o'clock and the next will go on at five after nine. You know, they just don't think anything about that at all because the BBC isn't commercial. So it's a funny thing; you have to pad, there's no question about it. So they got Gorey to come in and do some of the animation which I love.

O.V.: About radio, E. G. Marshall still hosts "Mystery Theater" (on the radio) and do you find that the medium request more imagination and skill than theater or film?

Price: Yes, but it depends an awful lot on the writing. The only thing I have against the E. G. Marshall productions, is that they are a little "old-fashioned." I mean, they sort of are consciously old-fashioned as though "here we are kiddies, listening to an old medium." Radio is not an old medium. It's a very present medium. I do a series in London for World Service on BBC called The Price of Fear, and the listening audience is a hundred-million people — which ain't bad! The stories are written by the very best writers in England and the actors are unbelievable.

> "I think that's one of the things we're going to have to get used to. The world is not going to be as affluent as it was ever again."

O.V.: Do you see the Price family becoming another acting family like the Carradines?

Price: Oh my God, I don't believe I have that many kids! (heavy laughter) No, but my daughter loves theater and I don't know if she's going to do it or not. My son is a writer, yes. But they're all doing the things that they like to do. My son is a poet and a very good one. He's been published all over the world and the money you make from poetry, let me tell you, you'd starve to death in the first three weeks. I asked him one time: "Doesn't it bother you?" He said: "I'm the richest man I know." And he is! He lives his life the way he wants to live it and he'll do anything to be able to keep at that poetry thing. He's the editor of a small magazine as well, and it's constant work — he works harder than any man I know and less pay. But he's happy! I think that's one of the things we're all going to have to get used to. You see, the world is not going to be as affluent as it was ever again; I don't see how it can be.

O.V.: You spoke about how in London they have a theater that's strictly experimental. Would you be interested in trying to get something like that going over here?

Price: Oh gosh, I've joined everything. I'm a joiner, don't you know. It's a tough country to work in that way, it really is. There's 15 groups out in California who've tried it, and none of them have made it yet.

O.V.: Do you find that the British are more receptive to new ideas in theater?

Price: Yes. And yet, our theater has been tremendously influential over there. But you see, the thing is it's a country with almost a 1000 years of audience education. And it's incredible. The English go to the theater the way they drink tea. It's part of the necessity of life and with us it's a luxury. Unfortunately, it's becoming a luxury in England too. It's almost like New York now, monetarily.

O.V.: Are you pleased with the adaptation for television of some of the stage dramas, "Nicholas Nickelby," for instance?

Price: Gosh, I found it difficult. I know you're not meant to; you should be very high-browed and say: "I adored it!" I was sound asleep! It looked to me like a photographed stage play. I wish I had seen it in the theater because it must have been terribly exciting.

O.V.: Once Alistair Cooke on "Masterpiece Theater" talked about British actors and how the British support their actors. He made a comment to the effect that in England, they have so many regional companies all over the place, that if you want say, 20 extras, boom, they're there in an hour.

Price: Yes, you can get them there. I mean, when I did "Theater of Blood" we had Michael Horten who's just been made a knight, you know; he's one of the great Shakespearean actors. We had Harry Andrews who was considered the greatest supporting Shakespearean actor in the business. Every single person in the company was a huge star. And they came out from plays that they were doing in the West End, only about an hour's drive to the movie studios. And they did their day's work and the movie was worked around them. I mean, I was the star of the picture and I would have to stay late to do all of the fill-in scenes so that so-and-so could go back and do his play at the National Theater. Which is bloody well right! More important I should have him working with me and doing a little work to have the privilege of having him.

O.V.: Of all the horror stars you've worked with, who was your favorite?

Price: Boris, I would think. (Boris Karloff) He had a marvelous sense of humor and he always struck me as very funny. Because of that sort of lisp that he had and that strange complexion — which was green, you know — he was a funny man. He was always sinister, but at the same time hysterically funny so I adored working with him. I loved him as a person too. Wonderful!

O.V.: Are there any parts or roles that you've never played that you'd like to have played, but never got the chance?

Price: Oh, I suppose so, I mean King Lear or something like that. You know, as I've said we've always got Shakespeare! (much laughter) Thank God. Well, you know, I think the English do it so much better than we do. Let them do it. We are not good at it. We're self-conscious at Shakespeare and with the English — ah — it just happens.

Price lectures on theater and art

By ELAINE SENAY

During Vincent Price's visit to UMass, he spoke to a packed audience of Theater majors and faculty at the Curtain Theater in the Fine Arts Center. Price was introduced by Theater Department Chairman, Harry Mahnken, as "an institution."

Price began the seminar by making a few remarks about the theater and his career. But the time was mostly devoted to Price answering the eager questions of the audience. Price had no trouble responding to the questions about the theater, his life, and his role in advancing the cause of the arts.

Price said that he looked in the dictionary to find the best definition of the arts. He quoted, " 'art is all of the works of man as differentiated from the works of nature.' " He seemed to be pointing out that the idea of the arts is broad-based. When we speak of the arts, we should think of all of them, not just the most familiar ¶ all the works of humanity.

Price went on to say that he felt the theater "...is the most exciting life in the whole world." He would not discourage any student from entering the theater. But he said, "theater is the mother of the arts...I really love it."

Although Price has performed in only a small number of productions, he justifies this by saying that he "...was always active, working all the time." He recalled the first time he met Cary Grant. The suave leading man said to him, "You're the working actor aren't you?"

Price chuckled when he admitted that he couldn't tell his left foot from his right foot. He said that in the theater "...you learn how to move, how to dance..." He said that James Cagney learned how to move in the theater. Leo G. Carroll, a revered character of the stage and screen once said to Price "...acting is nine-tenths movement." If the timing is wrong, the entire performance on stage or screen can be ruined.

Price continued by making some comments on the established theater especially about the London and Broadway stage. He said that the British love American theater and do not snub Americans. Playwrights like Tennessee Williams and Edward Albee are major contributors to England's interest in American theater.

Price pointed out that the British theater "...is having terrible problems...British junk is tackier than ours." But he again stressed that the theater training in England is exciting.

American theater did not escape Prices' comments. New York is second-rate," he said. Price feels that theater is alive in the colleges and universities; the real audience is there. Also he criticized the American theater for not having any theaters for the development of experimental plays. The can be found in London but there are none in New York.

Vincent Prices's seminar on theater was both entertaining and informative. He and the audience exchanged ideas and questions for an hour. Everyone enjoyed themselves despite the cramped quarters, and the time seemed to pass all too quickly.

* * * *

Vincent Price concluded his visit by holding a seminar for members of the Art History Department in a Bartlett classroom. He began as in the theater seminar with some opening remarks and then fielded quiestions from the audience.

The reason that Price gives these lectures is "...to awaken the American people to the extraordinary riches of art." He urged the public to appreciate and support art. Since the government has "...little interest in art, " it is our responsibility to "realize how important art is."

Again, Price quoted the dictionary's definition of art meaning "...all the works of mankind..." He said that there is "...a wealth of art and experiences that we can share in." He feels the promotion of art has jeopardized it making it vulnerable to theft and vandalism. Price said that we should stop talking about art in terms of money. Art is part of our heritage, our personal background.

Price pointed out that "Americans shun their artists after their success." He said that great writers like Tennessee Williams were forced into obscurity. And yet such a figure greatly influenced British theater said Price.

But American art has a great appeal to Americans said Price. The reason is that "the appeal is our freedom to do what we want to do." He said that the Russians are very dictated. "very politicized."

Commenting on the newer forms of art, Price said that computer art "...will not advance." But he said that "...photography is the most exciting thing today." Price admires the early photographers and said that today the medium is constantly different and changing.

Price said that the future of art seems secure in terms of creativity: "art changes so quickly that it is unlikely that it will be entrapped."

> "I think we are at that point in America where we have no humor at all. Everything is so serious, and so boring."

Area students dance the night away

Julie Procopiow on the Five-College Dance Department

By JULIE PROCOPIOW

A Five-College dancer in flight.

Among the numerous academic departments found in the neighboring five colleges lies a very special program that is virtually unique to the Pioneer Valley: the Five-College Dance Department. What makes this program so exciting is the great opportunity it offers to students who feel the need for diversity in their study of the fine art of dance. In speaking with representatives of the department from the varying colleges, I gained firsthand knowledge of the program's excellence. This increased my great respect for not only the program's overall success, but also for the talented dancers that support the program.

The variety of dance classes offered at the five colleges is so tempting as to persuade even the least surefooted and graceless of people to sign-up for a dance class. For example, at UMass courses are offered to dance majors as well as non-dance majors from beginning to advanced levels in ballet, jazz and modern dance. Related theory courses are taught as well.

At Amherst College, "dance is taught in the department of dramatic arts," according to Irene Rothberg of that department. "We have no separate dance department." While most of the dance taught at Amherst is modern, such interesting classes as West African Dance are also included in the curriculum. "We're not a large department," says Ms. Rothberg, "and we depend on the membership of the (other four) colleges."

Gemze deLappe of Smith College teaches in their department of Musical Theater where they "have beginning, modern, intermediate modern, and advanced modern, (as well as) all kinds of composition classes," explained deLappe. Most of the students are from Smith, however they still do get students from UMass and Hampshire as well as a few from Mount Holyoke.

Basic technique classes in modern as well as occasional ballet courses are also taught at Hampshire College. "Hampshire is unique in that we offer classes in Laban Movement Analysis," said Becky Nordstrom of Hampshire's dance department, "which is a method of analyzing movement." Dance classes at Hampshire are "interdisciplinary," which means students can combine the study of dance with other concentrations such as anthropology.

At Mount Holyoke College, classes are taught in ballet, point, composition, as well as scientific aspects or simple anatomy. Hanna Wiley, the chairperson of the Five-College Dance Department as well as a dance instructor at Mount Holyoke feels that in the Five-College Dance Department, "there are academic courses" and "there is a big body of academic knowledge in dance" that is important to the dancer.

In addition to the diversity of courses offered at the five colleges, the degrees granted to the dancers of the program also vary. Students at UMass receive a Bachelor of Fine Arts with a major in dance.

However, students at Smith receive a degree in theater with an emphasis on dance. This is comparable to a dance minor. Amherst students receive a Bachelor of Arts degree with a concentration in dance and must major in something else. Hampshire students must work with a totally different system from any previously mentioned. The students "don't have a dance major," said Ms. Nordstrom. "Instead, students do concentrated work in particular fields of study as a project of their division exams.

"The next step for us is instituting at the five colleges a Bachelor of Arts major," claims Ms. Wiley. "That's probably the last big tackle and we hope to have it (put into effect) by not this fall but the following fall."

As far as career goals are concerned for the dance students of the program, the faculty finds the overwhelming majority aspiring to go on to professional dance careers. Andrea Watkins of UMass seems quite aware of this movement and has helped students to plan accordingly. She feels that, "in order to get employment as a professional dancer, you need to be familiar with all three dance idioms: ballet, jazz and modern."

"The majority of our students go on to perform and we have had graduates perform in such well known productions as Dancin', Barnum, and A Chorus Line," adds Ms. Wiley, "and we have dancers who are also dancing in ballet companies."

At Hampshire, Ms. Nordstrom finds that "some students lean towards work in dance therapy (and also) performing." She adds that, "we have three recent alumni who are starting a group in New York with Trisha Brown, and a student (Mark Ramsey) who graduated in 1974 has a company in New York."

Consequently, deLappe, who has spent a lot of her career off Broadway, anticipates some students pursuing a professional career. "I teach a class on some repertoire and all the technique; it's on all the things you may need to get into a Broadway show."

While student-teaching does go on at UMass and as it is quite a beneficial learning experience for the students, Ms. Wiley feels that, "the students who (obtain) a Bachelor of Fine Arts at the University are looking for a performing career."

The Five-College Dance Department recently "celebrated" the fine accomplishments of two of its faculty members who are now quite a source of pride to the program. At the New England-New York College Dance Festival held in New York a little while back, two of its faculty members brought acclaim to the program. There were over seventy dances that were adjudicated at the festival. There were 43 colleges represented, and nine dances were selected for the gala concert in New York. Of those nine, two of them were from UMass which is a most admirable feat. As a matter of fact, UMass was the only school from the Five-College Dance Department that sent choreography to the festival. The choreographers of these two winning pieces were UMass Andrea Watkins and Richard Jones.

Concerning the overall feelings towards the Five-College Dance Department, the faculty members and representatives I spoke with all possessed positive feelings about the program. Ms. Watkins feels that, "the program is quite young and it's just now becoming really known or recognized at all."

Ms. Nordstrom of Hampshire College also feels quite positive towards the department. "I think we're getting better known in the field; we're developing programs and guest residencies that are quite exciting."

"What makes (the program) very attractive to prospective students is that they have so much to choose from," she adds.

"The Five-College Dance Department was first adopted approximately twelve years ago," claims Ms. Wiley. "The program was initiated because the dance faculty felt the need to find and seek out people with similar interests (who needed to) perform with each other."

In response to my question of how she thought about the program now, Ms. Wiley exclaimed, "I'd say that during the past decade, a lot of groundwork (has been) set. Student exchange and faculty rotation is really going like wildfire now!"

So, for any of you who have an interest in dance, either as a major or just for fun, hopefully you now have a better understanding of one of the country's finer dance departments. I hope you will seriously consider taking advantage of such a goldmine of creative instruction. And for those of you who simply enjoy watching the dancing talent of the five colleges, keep your eyes open for the upcoming Five-

I come from the land down under

Smolam and Park capture the essence of Australia

By ROGER ATWOOD

It is rare enough for even a dozen top-name photographers to gather for a common project. But when 100 gather for a single day and all photograph the same subject — that is a photographic event.

The day was March 6, 1981. And the subject was Australia.

100 of the world's top photojournalists were flown to every part of the country to take photos for a splashy book aptly called A Day in the Life of Australia. Financed by several corporations and photographers, the project was the brainchild of American photographer Rick Smolan and Australian Andy Park. The book has been in the stores since the fall and contains 288 pages of exhilirating photos of the land and life down under.

The book is hardly a tourist rag. Subjects range from sheep ranches to prison convicts to truck-stop prostitutes. There is not a single koala bear in the entire book, and only one kangaroo.

The terms were generous. Each photographer spent eight days in Australia, all expense paid, and all were given 35 rolls of film for the one day of shooting — an average of about one picture for every 65 seconds.

One of the photographers was New York native Jane Evelyn Atwood, who has worked extensively with "marginal" people in Paris since the mid-1970s

"The whole project was such a big, complicated thing to arrange," she said. "Even when we (the photographers) got there, it seemed like the project was still getting off the ground."

Funding was a problem from the start. Smoland and Park invested their total, meager fortunes and set up loans where they could. Slowly, corporations began pledging support. The participation of Australia's then-Prime Minister, Maicolm Fraser, assured government backing.

But even more important than dollars was the very spirit of the photographers themselves.

"Everyone was in the spirit of the thing," said Atwood, "We all wanted it to work."

"There has been no bitching or whining," said Canadian photographer Douglas Kirkland in the book's afterword, "and there is a feeling of brotherhood that I've never experienced before."

Editing the 96,000 photos proved a herculean task — "mindboggling" one organizer termed it. Since selection was based strictly on merit, about a quarter of the photographers found not one of their photos in the book.

"It must have been very sad and disappointing for them" said Atwood, whose photographs of Meblourne blind children fill seven, black and white pages.

The final product, which lists at $35.00, is a remarkable portrait of a people and a nation. Shaky at the outset, the Day in the Life project proved a stunning success.

"The printing looks good, most of the layout looks good," said Atwood. "All around, it's quite a nice book."

Modern jazz: searching for new innovations

Innovative jazz artists Oliver Lake and Jump Up.

By DAVID CHEVAN

Jazz music is dying. Jazz music is alive and well. Jazz music is this. Jazz music is that. Jazz music just took out an IRA account at the Heritage Savings bank. Seems like everyone and his uncle can tell you exactly what jazz music is doing these days. Well that's good, but what does it sound like? It has been ages since anyone talked about any players the way folks spoke about that hot young sax player John Coltrane, but does that mean there is no new music available?

The question, obviously, is a rhetorical one. There are many new jazz artists. In the past several years there has been an increasing level of output from the jazz labels, of both recently recorded music and much undiscovered or previously unreleased recordings from the so called "heyday" of jazz.

Amongst these older reissues and rediscoveries is a new album reissues series on the Fantasy label. The Original Jazz Classics series focuses on the old Riverside and Prestige jazz albums of the Fifties and Sixties. Many of the albums available in this series have been out of print for twenty or thirty years, yet are letter perfect facsimiles of the originals. Even the misprints are the same. Among the albums reissued are works by John Coltrane with Thelonius Monk, a much younger nonelectric Miles David, The Modern Jazz Quartet, and Wes Montgomery.

One album, the Cannonball Adderly Group recorded live, reveals just how much jazz music has changed and yet remained the same over the years. The album was recorded in 1959, but the music sounds like something you could catch any evening at a New York jazz club. Cannonball Adderly, with his brother Nat, blow bluesy riffs over odd time signatures and fast moving tempos. In fact, it's reminiscent of the music today's young musicians are labeling as new.

Another album in the reissue series, Brilliant Corners, features the late Thelonius Monk leading one of the more star-studded casts of musicians ever brought together for a recording session. Players like Max Roach, Oscar Pettiford, and Sonny Rollins are placed before some of the oddest and toughest charts they've ever performed. The production quality of this alubm surpasses most works of its time, and the music, is total "Monky" business. The album contains the now classic "Bemsha Swing," and one piece worthy of rediscovery, "Ba-lues-are Bo-livar."

But all the music coming out these days is not old. On the flip side of the coin, there are some fine debut albums currently available by artists who sound a lot older than their years, and display enormous potential for growing even further. One player is young guitarist Kevin Eubanks, whose debut album, Guitarist, has just been released on the Elektra/Musician label. Despite some occasional excesses of guitar pyrotechnics, Eubanks' playing reveals a studied, tasteful style which is often reminiscent of players like Wes Montgomery. The stand-out cuts on the album are two in which Eubanks plays alone, The Novice "Bounce," and "Blue in Green" an old Miles Davis piece.

Elektra/Musician has also re-released John Klemmer's 1980 direct-to-disc Nautilus LP, Finesse. Call him pop schlock, a throwaway artist, or whatever you will, Klemmer's style is commercial and catchy, but it is good. He's got some fine chops and his playing is very tasteful on this album. Sure, the music is commercially mellow but Klemmer does not lose any points for integrity in his playing. He knows how to use a sax well.

But some of us are not as mellow as Klemmer and demand a more brash and brassy style. Fortunately big band swing is not dead. Two recent releases, the latest from Widespread Jazz Orchestra, Swing is the Thing, on Adelphi Records, and Lightning Strikes, by the local Valley Big Band both catch the big band feel and use it tastefully to their own ends. The Valley Big Band features original Duke Ellington charts, and several hot items by local composer/arranger Jeff Holmes. The Widespread Jazz chose a broader swing style, treating their material like boogie-woogie. They do some fine renditions of old Count Basie tunes, and a hot rendition of the Lionel Hampton/Benny Goodman classic, "Flying Home".

In the midst of all these releases, one thing becomes increasingly clearer: jazz music has diversified itself into as many forms and fields as rock music, but with some obvious differences. One of the unfortunate differences is the current lack of any recent breakthrough in the music. If anything, jazz seems to be entrenching itself further and further into its already established grooves without much in the way of forward motion. It could be argued that Blood Ulmer's harmolodics is "new," but Ornette Coleman was doing that stuff in the Fifties. One of the few exceptions to this lack of exploratory growth is Oliver Lake's new group, Jump Up. Lake is exploring a new groove first begun on his recent Gramavision release, also entitled, Jump Up. Lake uses reggae grooves in much the same way Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie used the latin grooves in the forties. However to its current status as a more commercial outfit, Jump Up has not caught on with the jazz community. The entire phenomenon could become simply isolated to a single artist.

Jazz music obviously is not dead, but it remains to be seen how and where it will grow. With the increasing number of smaller labels and independent releases, new artists otherwise undiscovered, may spring up. Whether they will have anything new of importance to add to the music, though, is a question available for speculation.

Allen Ginsberg finally comes out

Charles F. Carroll reviews First Blues

By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL

Allen Ginsberg's album First Blues is finally available. To many the album comes as as surprise or novelty, but to Ginsberg's following, it has meant a long wait for this serious, significant work. These are the songs that Ginsberg has been singing down through the Seventies, with a number of recent numbers for the Eighties. Unless you saw him at Passim's Coffeehouse in Cambridge in late March on his annual spring fling, First Blues may provide the only opportunity to hear Ginsberg for some time (his upcoming Iron Horse appearance having been cancelled).

The enthusiasm of a prior article of mine on "The Ode in Plutonium Ode" was somewhat confirmed thereafter. Plutonium Ode won the L.A. Times Book Award for 1982. I also reported on the long overdue release of First Blues, but I must admit that I did so without really knowing for certain whether or not the album would ever be released. If it wasn't for John Hammond, Sr., the tapes never would have made it onto vinyl. Hammond eventually produced the record independently of Columbia Records on his own label. He explains, "I recorded Allen in 1976, but CBS refused to issue the results, considering the songs obscene. . ."

In a generation as sexually frank as our own, doesn't it seem slightly ridiculous that Ginsberg's music was censured. First Blues is only sordid if the very nature of life itself is sordid. And that is why one sings the blues. Ginsberg contends that "old blues songs were allowed to be dirty like. . .take off your pants, sit down on the bed, and sing me the blues."

The session, which was to be for the album as first conceived, occured in 1976. It is mostly blues-singing for over five years. His previous experience was relegated to singing "ragged ditties. . .with Jack Kerouac under Brooklyn Bridge." Ginsberg attributes his first blues listening experience to Rabbit Brown, but also mentions Ma Rainey, Bessie Smith, Billie Holliday, and, furthermore, the Leadbelly programs on WNYC while in high school. But there is no doubt that Ginsberg's main influence is Bob Dylan, an influence which might well be felt in two ways.

Knowing the profound effects of Dylan meeting Woodie Guthrie early on, one wonders just how much influence Ginsberg has had upon Dylan. I would say it is considerable, and that one could then see evidence of it in Dylan's song-writing, his movie Renaldo & Clara, and his tour with the Rolling Thunder Revue.

What was originally planned to be the First Blues album is sandwiched like melted cheese in the middle of a two-record set of additional material from recording dates in 1971 and 1981. The tracks are arranged chronologically, and the first three songs were recorded within weeks of Ginsberg getting together with Dylan. Other than buddhist chants and mantras, this really is the beginning of Ginsberg's singing.

Dylan was in the audience of poetry reading at NYU in Greenwich Village in 1971 when Ginsberg began improvising poetry on the theme of "Why write poetry down on paper when you have to cut down trees to make poetry books." Dylan was so impressed by Ginsberg's spontaneous composition that he contacted Ginsberg and soon afterward recorded several songs with him.

Ginsberg's voice is unrefined, sometimes off key, but the driving rhythm section — especially Happy Traum on banjo and Jon Scholle and Dylan on guitars — more than compensate, and, at times, carry the tunes. For instance, the songs that I think hold together best are "Vomit Express" or "I'm going down to Puerto Rico." David Amram's piano solos counter Ginsberg's vocals to the polished latin sound that has played so prominent a role in Dylan's music. The lyrics are interesting in that they are straight-forward, easily understood, and often extemporaneous. Because of this last fact alone, one might say that they are important in that they represent Ginsberg's response to a challenge by Jack Kerouac, and, later, Chogyam Trungpa, to compose poetry with "spontaneous mind-mouth tongue." But these songs also represent Dylan's response to Ginsberg. Unlike their work together on Leonard Cohen's Death of a Lady's Man, Ginsberg and Dylan stand out distinctively and yet compliment each other in the spirit of comradery on the songs.

The second recording session is far more sophisticated; both Ginsberg's voice and music has matured. Dylan is replaced by his Rolling Thunder Revue side-kick, David Mansfield, but John Scholle, a jazz guitarist who played behind Ester Phillips, is on lead (more on Scholle later). Aside from "C.I.A. Dope Calypso," a latin riff exposing a CIA heroin smuggling in Southeast Asia — what might be called calypso manifesto — the rest of the songs are blues. This blues session could have easily stood on its own six years ago as the album was intended.

Ginsberg takes blues a little further by incorporating Buddhist themes into traditional black blues forms. One could make a case that all blues bear out the First Noble Truth of Buddhism: life is suffering. Most notable of several songs with direct buddhist references is, "Gospel Noble Truths." Ginsberg explains: "Gospel Noble Truths features the celebrated Three Marks (or characteristics) of Existence: Suffering, Change, & Egolessness; The Four Noble Truths: 1) Existence is suffering; 2) Cause of Suffering is Ignorance, Desire & Grasping; 3) End of Suffering is Wisdom, Detachment & Compassion; 4) The Eightfold path: Right Views, Right Aspirations, Right Speech, Right Action, Right Labor, Right Energy, Right Mindfulness, Right Meditation. What follows is instruction for mediation practice while Sitting, Reclining & Walking; then an accounting of sex senses, Sight, Sound, Taste, Touch, Smell & Mind." To cover so much material in a song seems impossible, yet Ginsberg succeeds in translating it into American vernacular. He slows down the beat with breath concentration, and offers a rendition which elaborates the traditional themes of blues, love and death. Yet Ginsberg bravely accepts fate, and faces it in the moment rather like Sonny Terry singing "The Sun's Gonna Shine in My Back Boor Someday." "Gospel Noble Truths" is a tranformative piece which could be very influential for its rhyme and reason.

Not all the songs are as innovative as "Gospel Noble Truth," however. Yet many are ambitious, even if they only refer to old blues songs in style and manner. Ginsberg's sense of humour is bawdy without becoming banal. The songs are very entertaining, but if one is put off by blunt wit, there is more than enough humility to counteract this. Ginsberg's critical views, as expressed in his lyrics, are much less cruel than they may sound; I would argue that he is actually very kind.

In particular, "Guru Blues" is refreshingly frank. Ginsberg candidly admits the remote emptiness he feels toward Chogyam Trungpa, his guru. The honesty is liberating as he moves from the alienation of losing touch with particular problems to engage in an overwhelming chaos. Until defeated, he regains himself through the re-identification with his Guru. Trungpa is still Trungpa. Allen is still Allen. Except Ginsberg is re-affirmed by his self-realization, and the song ends on a triumphant note.

The last cut on the album is comprised of eleven songs, some of which are blues, although the last side shifts away from the blues. This transition is achieved, for better or worse, by the fast-paced, 50's styled "Dope Fiend Blues." It features an invigorated Jon Scholle on guitar along with Stephen Taylor, a new talent under Ginsberg's wing with five years experience on the road with him. His first song features a solo reflecting a strong voice and sure hand. I say for better or worse because, unlike the other sides, the fourth side is eclectic and not consistent. And yet, in many ways, this is the best side.

We are treated to some new Blake material on the record as well. Ginsberg first recorded William Blake's Songs of Innocence and Experience in 1970 for MGM, and then recorded another album of Blake in 1971 with Fantasy-Galaxy Records which was never released. Ginsberg is the first person to understand that Blake's songs are actually meant to be sung and are not simply poems to be recited. This may not be of interest to non-poets, but Ginsberg cants Blake's trochaic rhythm to "a heartbeat," as described by Robert Duncan, to perform a moving version of "Tyger." This is followed by a bluegrass take-off of the great haiku by Basho as "arranged" by Ginsberg:

Certainly the album's most sacreligious piece.

In between these songs is a wild and wooly "You Are My Dildo" by Peter Orlovsky, which sticks out a bit awkwardly (no pun please). Not to belittle the song — which is rather nice — only to question its occurrence here. It should be said that Orlovsky sings background vocals in most of the songs.

The double-album ends with a most extraordinary song, "the international new wave hit lyric," "Capital Air." It is hard to believe it's Jon Scholle on overdub guitars. Ginsberg is more in his poetic mileau when he speaks out against the military on both sides; you will soon be hearing it somewhere else. It recites too many names, places, and events to be ignored and not receive air play. The word has made a slight comeback in rock and we may see a return to meaning in the eighties.

But is it poetry? When Ferlinghetti spoke at Hampden Theatre in 1979, he said. "Once you have music with poetry, its not poetry anymore." Ginsberg himself warns of a "doggerel element in the poetry" which he attempts to overcome with a Campian series of images, but in the American grain, 'a la Bob Dylan "flashing" images through the line. But Ginsberg also raps academia for disregarding the blues which he claims are as legitimate a poetics as Scottish ballads and Elizabethan songs.

It is not an unreasonable charge since Ginsberg's poetry is as disliked and ignored by academics as it is liked. Ginsberg's songs are not as simple they might appear to the unitiated, and yet simple enough to inform via a common language. I think First Blues has something for everybody, even the academics.

Housing policy to close dorms on weekends

By IMA HOMELESS
Ex-Collegian Staff

Following the successful closing of the dormitories over spring break last week, the University of Massachusetts Housing Services announced today that dorms will close every weekend for the remainder of the semester.

Director of Housing Services Joe Nazzizi said closing the dorms on the weekends will eliminate "virtually all the vandalism and partying that go on in the dorms."

Nazzizi said the policy will go into effect tonight. All dorms will close at 6 p.m. and will reopen at noon on Sunday.

Twelve hours is certainly enough time for students to find a place to stay over the weekend, he said.

"Of course it's not short notice," he said. "Hell, we only gave the students two weeks notice about closing the dorms over Spring Break. Surely they know they can expect this type of cheap policy coming from us (Housing Services)," Nazzizi said.

Naturally a few rooms in the Campus Center hotel will be set aside for students who have nowhere to go, Nazzizi said. The price for the room will be twice the usual rate for students, according to the manager of the hotel.

"Hey, this is our big chance to finally make some money off these students," said Lou "Bleed 'em Dry" Lincoln.

Emergency shelters will also be set up in the Coffee Shop and in the music reading room in the Campus Center. These arrangements will only be for this weekend, Nazzizi said.

"By next week we will have our act together and figure out some other places for students to stay," he said.

"There is no doubt in my mind that this policy will be a success. Just think, people will finally have to eat in the Hatch because the dining commons will be closed. Vandalism will decrease and Southwest will finally be quiet. There will be no elevator damage and no noise pollution," he said.

Student randomly polled in the Campus Center Concourse said the idea was really stupid and unfair.

"It was bad enough trying to find a place to stay over Spring Break, but every weekend? That will be impossible," said Mark Jones, a sophomore who lives in John F. Kennedy dormitory in the Southwest area.

"Does the University really expect everyone to eat in the Hatch?" asked Amy Wilson, a junior economics major. "I can handle camping out in the Campus Center, but I can't handle the Hatch food."

Engineering dept. gets $25B from Feds

By E.Z. LEI-ZAR
Collegian Star

The University of Massachusetts engineering department has received $25 billion in federal funds to research and develop President Reagan's "Star Wars" plan.

The plan, which calls for satellites containing laser gun units to orbit the earth ready to "zap" launched nuclear missiles before they leave the launch pad, will be developed in collaboration with the physics and astronomy departments at UMass, said Jon. G. McGowen, professor of mechanical engineering.

"This is a wonderful opportunity for some of our graduate students to try out their skills, develop a rapport with other scholars and really do something for our country and the world," he said. "Strictly speaking as an engineer, I'm thrilled."

President Reagan chose the UMass engineering department because of their national reputation and facilities. "The graduate catalog I received was most impressive," Reagan said, "If I were doing it all again, I would study at UMass."

Muhammad Afdal of the physics and astronomy department declined comment on the issue. "At this point we are still quite unsure of what involvement our departments will take and of our stand politically," he said.

"The issue is no longer political at the engineering department," Thomas J. Lardner, civil engineering professor, said when asked of his stand. "We are accepting this money as engineers. Period."

"I think the whole thing is great, funding will support a lot of grad students," Mark Dominovic, a graduate student who will be working on the project. "I estimate I'll bring home six figures for my work."

"It's a wild space age problem. I'm very, very excited," he said, "Nobody better launch any missiles when we're finished."

When asked what he will do with his new-found wealth, he replied, "I'm going to buy a Camaro and marry the woman next door."

Squeal rule raises contraception age

By LISA CANTWRITE
Collegian Correspondant

WASHINGTON — The Department of Health and Human Services raised the age to twenty-five, on a proposed rule which would require women seeking contraception from any federally-funded clinic to obtain signed consent from their parents.

The new "Squeal Rule" is expected to pass through a Congressional subcommittee later today, before being presented to the full house.

The goal of the proposed rule is to "strengthen the American family, by opening channels of communication between parents and offspring," said Phyllis Blindly, a spokesperson for MLR (Make Life Rosey), a group supporting the proposal.

"We also hope to hinder herpes," Blindly stated.

MLR is seeking to attach a "Grandfather Clause" to the propsed rule. "We feel grandparents should also be informed in order to enhance and help stabilize family relations," Blindly said.

Groups lobbying against the proposal include two major federally funded clinics, Planning Family and Parenthood Planned. "It's unfair. It simply isn't fair. What an unfair rule. We don't like it because that's not fair," said Mimi Starr, representataive for the two groups. "Raspberries to you MLR" Starr, a former Grateful Dead groupie, added.

Escalation of unwanted pregnancies and loss of business, are two problems the opposition groups feel the proposal will create if it is enforced.

"Women will be afraid to ask their mothers and fathers and grandparents," said Myra Steinburgh, a clinician at the University of Massachusetts Health Services. "My grandmother is a devout Irish Catholic convert, she would have a mental fit if she knew I used birth control. Ninety-two is just not a safe age to have fits of that nature. I think many young women will be faced with this problem if the proposal is approved," Steinburgh said in a statement made against the "Squeal Rule."

Famous author to teach in JS dept.

By JOHNNY DEADLINE
National Affairs Desk

Dr. Hunter S. Thompson, the acid-crazed author best known for his book Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas, has been named visiting lecturer at the University of Massachusetts.

Dr. Thompson is scheduled to teach two courses in the journalistic studies program next semester, according to journalism studies director James Boylan.

Thompson will teach "Chemical-induced reporting" and a seminar titled "Journalism and Neo-fascist America."

Boylan said that Thompson was invited to teach at UMass because of the "overwhelming interest among journalism students in areas that Dr. Thompson is uniquely qualified to teach."

In a telephone interview yesterday with the Collegian, Thompson refused to comment on his appointment, but snarled "I'll rip your lungs out, you chickenshit wimp," before starting to giggle uncontrollably.

Solomon denies Stir story linking him and Weinberger

WASHINGTON — Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger and Rep. Gerald B.H. Solomon, R-N.Y., author of the so-called Solomon amendment, have been romantically linked, it was reported this morning in the National Stir.

The article was based on anonymous statements of a Cabinet aide and a page in Solomon's office.

The two provided photographs of the two national leaders together.

They also said federal financial aid refused to male students who failed to register with the selective service was being pumped into the defense department budget.

The report has created some stir among congressional leaders and White House officals many of whom had previously believed both Weinberger and Solomon were heterosexual. Weinberger has neither confirmed nor denied the accusation. Solomon has come out strongly against the article and said he intends to file a libel suit.

In a nationally broadcast news conference last night, he said, "It's just another ploy of liberal, Communist pinkofags — it's just another ploy of liberal communists always looking to get some head — oh, dear — to get ahead, by sodomizing — slandering, I mean — others."

Riot at Fac. Senate results in five arrested profs

Angry senators attack General Ed while secretary does nothing to help

By D. CORE
Collegian Despondent

Five University of Massachusetts Faculty Senators were arrested and charged with assault and battery yesterday following a riot which erupted after a controversial speech by General Ed.

The riot erupted after General Ed. proposed a curriculum change calling for the integration of English and animal science courses into a separate curriculum known as Bread of Birds.

Following the announcement of his plan, Gen. Ed. was attacked by senators from both departments.

"It was like incredible. All of a sudden they just got up and started punching and beating the poor guy to a pulp," said one eyewitness who asked not to be identified.

"They started squeezing him till he bled," he said.

Johnetta Hatchinson, associate Provost for Whitmore affairs, was the only person at the meeting who came to Gen. Ed's defense.

"I just had to come to the defense of Gen. Ed. What he was saying was perfectly acceptable," she said.

Some senators blamed Hatchinson for contributing to the riot.

One senator characterized her as an "emotionally charged woman who just couldn't control her actions at the meeting."

"She went too far. There's just no rationale for what she did," said senator Jay Wrath.

Gen. Ed suffered minor injuries but was taken to Coolly your son's a Dick hospital. On the way to the hospital, Gen. Ed suffered a heart attack and was revived with the Breadth of Life.

Senate Secretary Jimmy Laysme could not comment on the fight at the senate because he was busy checking to see if riots were allowable in the senate constitution.

One arrested senator defended his actions of beating upon Gen. Ed, saying, "the guy's a total loser. He should be shot. All he kept talking about was knowledge this and knowledge that. What the hell does knowledge have to do with education?" said senator Jaw Bones.

Other senators who attacked Gen. Ed said they were upset with his plan calling for the elimination of the C, D, and E core requirements and replacing them with a new X, Y, and Z curriculum.

One part of the new curriculum which upset senators the most was the proposed freshmen seminary.

"This is a public institution. We can't require students to enter the seminary if they don't want to," said senator Michiline Tires.

General Ed is shown here addressing the UMass Faculty Senate. The shot, by Collegian photographer, C. Core, was taken moments before Gen. Ed was brutally attacked by senators and hospitalized.

Army ROTC members take over SGA in bloody coup

By KLOWIN BOZO
Collegian Staff

Armed members of the Army ROTC bursted into the homes and offices of student government official lates last night in a successful but bloody coup of the Student Government Association.

The leaders of the coup have promised to hold free elections sometime next fall. The reason for the overthrow, said a military spokesman in a statement read over WMUA after the radio station was seized, is to "return student government back to the students."

The self-proclaimed "liberators of the oppressed majority" named Dean of Students William Field, SGA President and Vice-Chancellor Dennis Madison Speaker of the Senate until new elections are held.

The coup occured during the transition of SGA officers. Military sources said the overthrow was timed to coincide with the transition.

"We wanted to get them while they were coming and going at the same time," the source reported.

Former SGA leaders Vladimir Murpinski and Euphoria David and present leaders Che Ahern and Comrade Allen were last seen being abducted from their rooms by armed masked men in military fatigues late last night.

They have not been heard from since.

The whereabouts of the other SGA officers are still unknown, however sources close to the SGA speculated that they may have fled into the hills and requested asylum with the Hampshire College student government.

"They (the SGA leaders) won't give up," the source said. "There are a lot of hills in the valley. I think they'll wage a guerrilla war against the new fascist regime."

Officials of the Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA) yesterday unveiled two new lines of "custom-comfort" passenger vehicles. The new buses will be "twice as comfortable and efficient as any we've ever used," said Peter Greyhound of the PVTA. UMass Transit officials said the lines would start in the fall of 1983. Officials there said the present buses will be remodeled to serve as extra housing for dormless students during the great influx at the beginning of terms.

Parking policy is revised

IM APIG
Collegian Troth

University of Massachusetts Police will not be giving out any more tickets to students who park illegally on campus.

"We have come to the realization that giving out tickets is nothing more than busy work designed to justify our jobs," said an officer yesterday who asked to remain anonymous.

"We only write tickets because we hate students and we can no longer get away with ignoring the more important aspects of our jobs," he said.

Some of the more important aspects cited included arresting minors who consume alcohol on campus, arresting people who yell out of the windows in the dormitories and holding longer and more involved checker tournaments at police headquarters.

"I mean we have real problems here," the unidentified officer said. "There are people who play their stereos too loud on weekdays. And let's not forget the idiots who hit video games when they don't play well; that's a felony."

The officer said there would not be a cut in staff since all meter maids will be reassigned outside key noisy dormitories and in parking lots on weekends.

"That way we'll catch those law-breaking beer drinkers with the goods," the officer said.

Police said they would don new uniforms to coincide with the new duties their jobs entail.

They will now wear clownsuits.

Dave Donovan, a student, said he was extremely upset with the new regulations.

"First of all, I don't have a car so what do I care about parking? I want to drink. I'm mad. I'm a party animal," Donovan said.

Huffey assumes new position

By KLOWIN BOZO

Citing the need for more effective management of the University of Massachusetts, Chancellor Joseph Huffey has decided to elevate himself to Emperor of UMass.

In a dramatic move, Huffey will hold a coronation on April 30 and will be declared Imperial Emperor of the Cow College and Lord of the Granola Valley.

Plans for Huffey's coronation are already underway. Five million dollars of student Trust Fund money will be used to "enhance" the events.

Heads of state from 50 countries have been invited, including Queen Elizabeth and Pope John Paul II.

"I was going to ask the Pope to crown me, but I decided to do it myself. Why answer to him?" said Huffey, a self-described left-footed Irish Protestant.

Students from the fashion marketing department are designing the Imperial Robe to be worn for the ceremony. Details of the robe remain secret, although inside sources say it is studded with diamonds and gold lace. The robe is said to have a train of more than 50 feet.

It has been rumored that Huffey has granted the requests of David C. Knapp, Michael S.Dukakis, William Bulger and Thomas McGee the opportunity to carry his robe as he is being coronated.

"I've been here for almost six months and I've found every excuse to have a party. Now I have to be more imaginative to find a reason to have a party," Huffey said.

After being crowned, Huffey's first order will be to remove the four vice-chancellors and the Office of Planning because, "I can never figure out who's coming and who's going," Huffey said.

Trustees approve minimum cum policy

By MARK FINKLE and JIM WELCH
Former Collegian Staff

Despite the absence of Student Government Association Co-President and Student Trustee Charlene Allen, the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees yesterday approved a controversial policy which requires students involved in any campus activities to have at least a 2.0 grade point average (GPA).

A 2 p.m. meeting was announced at 12:30 p.m. Allen arrived at the meeting room at 2:20, after the meeting ended.

According to Byron Flak, press secretary for the Trustees, only one vote was taken by the Board at yesterday's meeting.

"They didn't do much," Flak said. "The meeting lasted about 15 minutes. Once they voted on the first item, they adjourned and disappeared."

The new rule requires that any undergraduate student have at least a 2.0 GPA to participate in any extracurricular activities, including student government and the Collegian, effective today.

Undergraduate Student Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan was aghast at the new rules.

"According to the list the Records Office sent, only three people will be left in the Senate," Sullivan said. "There were 89 senators yesterday and three today."

The Records Office refused to turn over lists to the Collegian because no "valid" staff reporters could be found. Every reporter sent to the office was told he or she had been "suspended from extracurricular activities until (his or her) grades improve."

Four UMass profs are suspended after refusal to pay MSP union fee

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

Four University of Massachusetts professors were suspended last week without pay for refusing to pay a $235 agency fee to the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP).

The suspensions coincided with spring break week so as no to interfere with classes. The four are part of a group that calls itself the "Amherst 11."

Professors Edward Harrison of astronomy, Hugh Davis of landscape architecture, Douglas Jensen of physics and Alan Marra of wood science and technology were suspended by UMass President David C. Knapp.

Professors John Palmer of zoology, Vere Chappell of philosophy, William Randall and Robert Kent of landscape architecture, Bruce Jacobson of biochemistry and Michael Kreisler of physics opted to challenge the fee through the Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission and therefore avoided suspension. John Rhodes, a part time employee at Umass, arranged to pay a pro-rated portion of the fee.

Kreisler said, in a telephone interview, that the group is opposed to mandatory unionization on a college campus because it hampers academic freedom.

"You do not have the choice to ignore the union's existence," Kreisler said. "I believe I can do a lot better without the union. The union is a very ineffective union."

Increases in salary bargained for by the union are roughly parallel to those acquired by state workers, he said.

Harrison said in a telephone interview that he wrote a petition yesterday that will be circulated to all faculty and librarians at UMass' Amherst and Boston campuses. The petition will ask for a repeal of the agency fee.

MSP president Bruce Laurie said mandatory fees are part of the union contract to establish a principle of fairness and insure the integrity of the organization.

Those who object to the actions of the union can apply for conscientious objecter status. If they are approved by the union their money would go to a scholarship fund controlled by the union, Laurie said.

Kreisler said the conscientious objector provision is completely arbitrary and subject to the whims of the union. He said one professor was denied conscientious objector status after sending in the identical application used by another professor who had already been approved.

Campus Center proposes funds for WMUA move

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

Assistant Director of the Campus Center, Bernard Wilkes, last night reported at the Campus Center Board of Governor's meeting, that the Campus Center has received an unexpected "windfall" of $63,000.

He said the money is a kickback resulting from paying off the bonds on the Student Union Building on time.

The Campus Center Administration proposed that half that money, amounting to $31,000, be used to fund the moving and accommodation of the student radio station WMUA into the Campus Center.

WMUA is being forced to move out of their current location in Marston Hall because the engineering department needs more space in the building for academic use.

"WMUA is looking for a home and we have offered them space on the first floor by the Collegian office," Wilkes said.

According to Wilkes the idea to place the radio station on the first floor next to the Collegian is to tie in news services and create a "communication complex" within the building.

"They must move out before September 1 so the move into the Campus Center has to happen during the summer," he said.

In other BOG action: A committee will be created to review the possibility of installing Automatic Teller Machines (ATM) in the Campus Center.

Wilkes said the committee will consider the idea of ATMs in the building and will make recommendations to the University so that the issue of ATMs can be brought to the Board of Trustees for their approval.

"We are studying the possibility of having Teller Machines in the Campus Center and we hope to look at them soon in the building," Wilkes said.

Wilkes added that five years ago the idea of banking in the Campus Center received very little support but since then times have changed and now there is a real need for such service in the building.

The University Store reported it is now looking into the idea of selling personal computers to students and faculty which is one of the reasons why they have proposed turning the existing Coffee Shop into an annex of their store.

"In the next five years we will be moving into the computer era and we are going to have to have space for it. You have to look to the future," Wilkes said.

Ron Keefe, BOG chairman, said that for now BOG is remaining neutral on the University Store's proposal of expansion into the Coffee Shop.

The BOG is trying to objectively educate people on the details of the idea and see exactly what kind of a reaction it causes by putting out a questionnaire.

"We want to get an idea of the current use of the Food Service areas before a decision on the proposal on the project is made," Keefe said.

Socialist mayor visits Smith College

By BROOKE STATES

Bernie Sanders spoke about socialism and his experience with it in Vermont to a crowd of about 75 people at Smith College last night. Sanders is the socialist mayor of Burlington, Vermont and the first socialist mayor in the country since the Depression.

"Many of the dreams and visions that we had are not going to be incorporated into Burlington," Sanders said.

"But there are two differences. When you get city workers involved in writing regulations that they will be working on, when you treat people with respect, then they respond," he said.

"Most of the support that we have came from poor and working class people. We got 68 percent of the vote in the two poorest wards. These are people who were never allowed in government before. They are walking taller now," he said.

The Democratic mayor preceding Sanders had been in power for five two-year terms. Sanders defeated him in a three-way race in March of 1981, with 52 percent of the vote. "More people voted in the mayor's race then voted in the last presidential elections," Sanders said.

"I was elected mayor because of the people who put lots of time and energy running up and down Vermont talking radical ideas for the last 12 years. The first time that you say an idea people say its nuts. But you keep on saying it and things change," Sanders said.

Sanders said he has run for governor and senator in Vermont a number of times. "I got one percent one time, six percent another," he said.

Sanders was brought to Smith by the local Democratic Socialists of America chapter. He urged people not to take anything for granted. "One of the things that happens when you are a socialist is that you can not be red-baited. The word implies a change in class relationships," Sanders said.

"The nature of class struggle in capitalism is the inherent conflict between those who own and those who work. If I am an owner you have no say in what type of job you get. If you do not do what I say I will get ten other people to do the job. If you want more money, I can pick up my factory and move it to Malaysia or some other place. That's what capitalism is all about," Sanders said.

"One part of this is that your personality and how you are thinking gets warped. You get men who get drunk and frustrated and beat their wives because they do not have guts or the ability to take on the boss. But you won't see any of this on T.V., he said.

Sanders also urged the audience not to "get down" on people because they might not have as much education or have the time to study everything. "Everybody can't go to Smith," Sanders said.

"Change is possible. The system is a lot shakier than people realize. People are much more disgusted then you think. One of the deep beliefs of capitalism is that human beings are motivated by greed. That it is a dog eat dog world. As socialists we believe that it makes more sense for us to work together," he said.

With gas taxed, attention on Hill turns to butts

BOSTON — With gasoline taxes up 6.1 cents per gallon today — to a total of 20 cents per gallon in state and federal levies — attention in the Legislature now turns to cigarettes.

The House Ways and Means chairman, Rep. Michael C. Creedon, D-Brockton, said the House would be taking up Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' proposal to increase the cigarette tax four cents, to 25 cents per package, in a few weeks.

The governor's office, under the "revenue enforcement and protection program" proposed when Dukakis filed $7.36 billion worth of budget recommendations March 2, explained the cigarette plan in literature distributed to the media thusly:

"The tax upon cigarettes would be modified from its present level of 21 cents to 25 cents per package."

In recent Senate debate, Sen. Edward Burke, D-Framingham, described the state gasoline tax hike as a correction.

State and Hub officials want Navy in Boston

BOSTON — State and city officials joined business and labor leaders yesterday in a bid to bring the Navy back to Boston.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and Mayor Kevin H. White announced that a proposal drafted by a government-business-labor task force was filed with the Navy to make Boston the home port for a Surface Action Group, consisting of five to seven vessels.

The Navy pulled out of the city in 1974, breaking a link between the city and the service that dated to the American Revolution.

According to the announcement at Anthony's Pier 4 restaurant alongside the harbor, the Navy wants to disperse its East Coast fleet, based at Norfolk, Va., and is considering three ports for an SAG group — Boston, Newport, R.I., and New York.

Officials estimated that a homeport operation here would provide 3,000 civilian jobs, with a $75 million annual payroll, plus an estimated $68 million military payroll. The Navy's initial capital investment was estimated at $50 million.

Senate sends scholarship aid bill to Duke

BOSTON — The state Senate enacted and sent to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis a bill yesterday increasing state scholarship aid to higher education by $15 million for the next school year.

Dukakis "looks very favorably" on the $34 million scholarship appropriation, said Richard Gureghian, an aide, although he stopped short of guaranteeing that the governor would sign it.

The bill surfaced earlier this week as part of an agreement between the House and Senate that led to passage of the gasoline tax increase of just over a penny a gallon, which takes effect Friday.

Anti - Klan group to oppose march

By TRACEY ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

"Our task is to generate consciousness within the white community. Before the only people in opposition with the Ku Klux Klan were those of the third world," said Aleta Borrud of the John Brown Anti-Klan Committee.

There was an open meeting last night in the Campus Center of the John Brown Committee. Beginning at 6:30, a discussion of the goals of the Committee, followed by a showing of the film, "The Klan: Legacy Of Hate."

"It is important for whites to become involved with the struggle, there is a real question of genocide that whites don't understand," said Borrud. "The United States Government plays a major role in their organization. So far, the brunt of the crisis has been shoved upon third world people."

The Klan plans to march the 30th of April in Meriden, Connecticut and the first of May in Boston. The John Brown Committee is looking for support to thwart these efforts.

In February of 1983, the Klan marched in Austin, Texas. In an attempt to prevent them from gaining support and approval, 2,000 anti-Klan demonstrators gathered at the scene. Although the conditions under which they marched were severe, the Klan prodeeded as planned.

"The rally in Austin was a significant victory over the Klan," said Borrud. "At Austin Paul Hernandez, the leader of a local Hispanic organization, was beaten over the head by police officers protecting the Klansmen. Also, before the rally began, the police held a briefing with the press and asked them not to be present at the demonstration," Borrud said.

Randy Patterson, a member of the John Brown Committee, disclosed that members of the Brown Committee received death threats from Erroll Banta, a leader of the Committee of Ten Million, a Klan Front Group, as a result of their identification of him previously.

"Our goal is to expose to the public that the Klan is not a rational force of protection. They are a terrorist force. They aim for the mass genocide of all Third World people," Patterson said.

"There has been an incredible rise in white supremacist terrorists. The FBI supports the Klan and the Green Berets train them," said Borrud.

Presently, the committee hopes for support in their anti-Klan demonstration in Meriden this month. "We were suprised at the level of police protection the Klan receives. In Meriden several officers were given awards of merit for protecting the lives of the Klan," said Borrud.

Latin America week salutes women's roles

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Issues on women's struggles highlight the 1983 Latin American Week that start on April 18th and run to the 30th.

"Women have been a great influence in society," AHORA's president Cynthia Estriba explained. "This is a good enough reason for dedicating the celebration to her struggles."

Women in Latin America are in a constant struggle against sexism because the culture is mainly patriarchal. Through time women have slowly acquired recognition, but the battle against sexism is not yet over.

A recent improvement has been made in Nicaragua as a result of the revolution that occured there according to Nicaraguan sources. In addition to holding their concepts of liberty and basic human rights, the notion of "new women" under the New Republic is widespread.

During the Latin American Week celebration there will be two contrasting events featuring women's struggles. The first event will be a panel discussion entitled "Women in Struggle."

Moderated by Sonia Prieto its participants will include members from the Revolutionary Democratic front of El Salvador, emissaries from Casa Nicaragua in New York and a representative from Cuba.

The other event showing an additional example of women's struggles is Ana Maria Garcia's documentary "The Sterilization." The film, based on the forced sterilization of Puerto Rican women is an example of sexism where women have become prey of their own fate.

First celebrated in the Spring of 1973,. the Latin American Week celebration aimed at enlightening people's perspective toward hispanics through numerous activities.

Latin American Week also served as the source that helped cultivate communication between the Amherst community and the hispanic population on campus.

Other major events held through the Latin American Week celebration will be a lecture on the current situation in central America by guest speaker Robert Armstrong, correspondent of The Guardian and NACLA-Report on the Americas.

A folkloric dance performance, and a series of movies on Latin America and AHORA's own "Social Night" will also be held. Performing in the "Social Night" will be LOS PLENEROS DE LA 23 ABAJO directly from Puerto Rico and the group SAOCO from Boston.

"It raises no doubt that the celebration is a good instrument in reflecting ourselves and our culture," Estriba said.

Steaming hot blues

DON'T LOSE YOUR COOL
(Alligator)
Albert Collins

By DAVID CHEVAN
Collegian Staff

The cold chisel and steel ice pick have arrived in town for another session of brutal honesty. The man who bears these weapons uses them tenderly, but always with a true grip. Albert Collins, Texas blues guitarist extraordinaire has made a living out of a unique style that sends cold shivers through your spine. His singles from the early years, Frosty, Defrost, and The Freeze all concentrate on this guitar style, which as the liner notes put it is, "hard, fast, steaming like dry ice."

Don't Lose Your Cool adds new insight to the Collins myth. There are, as always, some new icey blue songs, most notably, Don't Lose Your Cool, Melt Down, and, . . . But I Was Cool. But it is the blues feel, the overall excitement of the album that grabs the listener. Bassist Johnny "Be Goodie" Gaydon, and drummer Casey Jones refuse to let up for even one second and they push Collins to new heights of ecstasy. In addition to Collin's regular saxophone foil, A.C. Reed, there is a new reedman, Abb Locke who is spellbinding during his Meltdown solo.

The album sounds like it was recorded live in the studio. While this increases the room and likelihood of mistakes by the players, (missed cues and the like), it also raises the energy level by 360 degrees. These guys are really putting on the heat. Except for Collins who puts the frost machine up to full blast.

Whether its the fast paced Quicksand or the slower, "my woman's left me and now my minds about to leave me too," Collin's vocal ability is also in top form on this LP. The only weakness appears to be the background vocals on the otherwise humorous, Ego Trip. Considering the quality of the remainder of the album it is a shame Collins did not work harder with the other singers on this track. Still, despite its flaws, its always good to hear some new steaming ice-hot blues these days.

The Third World Theater Series will close its spring season with the presentation of Yellow Fever, as performed by the Pan Asian Rep. Theater, at 8 p.m. on Saturday April 16 in Bowker Auditorium.

Pink Floyd discovers politics

THE FINAL CUT (Warner Bros.)
Pink Floyd

By WILLIAM PYNE
Collegian Correspondent

Thought I oughta bare my naked feelings thought I oughta tear the curtain down
I help the blade in trembling hands prepared to make it but just then the phone rang
I never had the nerve to make the final cut.
(From "Final Cut" by Pink Floyd)

Pink Floyd has just released a new album entitled the Final Cut. If not exactly conforming to today's apparent conservative view, it is certainly an album that tells us where we, the people of this planet, are headed. The Final Cut is definitely a work of unparalleled political foresight. Contained in this album are songs descriptive of Great Britain's current foreign policy, especially centering around the crisis in the Falkland Islands.

As is expected, Pink Floyd has managed to blend in several music variations to make this album seemingly interesting to listen to, especially if one is equipped with a set of headphones. Featured on this album are the National Philharmonic Orchestra conducted and arranged by Michael Kamen. Credit is also in order for Raphael Ravenscroft for his explicit sax solos.

To those of you who might not be familiar with the music of Pink Floyd let me clarify the point that this album is not of the variety to dance to, nor do I believe that it is the type of music to be played at a party. I feel that this album is to be appreciated to its fullest extent by having the listener sit back, relax, and enjoy the music while at the same time pondering the lyrics that accompany the music.

From hard rock to electronic synthesized stupor and then finally to delicate, if not classical music, Pink Floyd has once again finalized another album that is sure to become one of the finest musical pieces of the year.

Women's lacrosse, in comeback, defeats Yale

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

Usually when a team keeps losing key players to injuries it shows up through gaping holes in the team's play. This was not the case yesterday with the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team, which is missing two key starters, as it came back from a 3-1 deficit at half time to overtake Yale, 4-3.

"We've got a lot of injuries and we've got to get a starting lineup that's going to play together a while," coach Pam Hixon said. "We weren't taking good shots when we had them and we were taking poor shots when we didn't have to. I knew they'd (Yale) be good and with the injuries we just have to go one day at a time."

For the second game in a row the Minutewomen lost one of their starting players. Defender Linda Belevander sprained her ankle at the beginning of yesterday's game and Tish Stevens, last year's third leading scorer, is out with a knee injury.

UMass had a rough time in the first half and Yale capitalized on it by scoring three goals. Nicole Piasecki, Yale's leading scorer, got her team on the board first with a goal at 20:05.

Pam Moryl, who recorded her third hat trick in as many games, evened it up ten minutes later with an unassisted goal.

Yale turned on the attack in the remaining minutes of the first half. After getting a pass from in back of the net, Carolyn Thorson wasted no time slamming it into the net for her team's second goal at 3:09.

At the 2:26 mark, Ellie Hirschhorn popped the ball into the net after it trickled out from a save by UMass goaltender Rita Hubner.

In the second half, Hubner held her ground and with the help of the UM defense, stopped Yale's scoring attack. The UMass offense went to work also by scoring three goals in three minutes.

Moryl scored her second goal of the game for UMass at 21:22. From in front of the net, Moryl shot into the left hand corner for the score.

At 19:50, Linda Haytayan received a pass from Michelle Boyer behind the net and tossed it in from the right side of the Yale goalkeeper.

One final goal for the Minutewomen enabled them to walk away with a victory. With a quick now-you-see-it-now-you-don't goal, Moryl swept past the net and shoved the ball in. Her hat trick was completed at 18:23.

Hixon had praise for her defense including Carol Progulske and Yvette Rheault. She also mentioned Beth Guinivan, a junior varsity player who replaced Bevelander in the game.

The women will not play again until Thursday against Springfield as their match with Boston University was postponed until April 18.

Softball team clobbers Brown in doubleheader

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Overcoming a sluggish start in yesterday's doubleheader with Brown University, the University of Massachusetts softball team pounded their way to a 6-0, 11-1 sweep of the Bruins to open their home season.

Pitcher Cathy Reed gave up three hits in the opener and retired 19 batters in a row. With the shutout, she upped her record to 6-1. Southpaw Lynn Stockley won the second game and raised her record to 3-1. Southpaw Lynn Stockley won the second game and raised her record to 3-1. UMass is 9-2 after the sweep.

Offensively, first basemen Sally Mahar sent a shot to centerfield for a two run double in the first game and hit three singles in the second. Leftfielder Beth Talbott outran two bunts, slapped a double to right, stole second and got two RBI on the afternoon. DH Ann Ringrose went 2 for 3 in the first game.

"The rookies came through with big hits, "said Sortino.

Not to take anything away from the veterans, Jackie Gaw hit a triple and four RBI over the course of the afternoon, Chris Coughlin hit 4 RBI in the second game, and Allyson Rioux hit two doubles and showed how a sacrifice bunt should be dropped.

"We looked a little sluggish in the beginning," said Sortino. "But then we started to hit the ball."

In the opener, Reed had trouble in the first inning but from there on she gave up only one hit. UMass didn't get things rolling until Mahar's double scored Talbott and Gaw in the third and UM was on their way.

Coughlin hit in Talbott in the fifth and in the sixth UMass exploded for three more runs highlighted by Gaw's two run single.

In the second game, Umass scored at least two runs every inning except for the sixth. Coughlin, Rioux, Gaw and Mahar highlighted the offense.

Stockley had some problems- walking too many people and giving up too many hits- but she kept the runs off the board.

"The team," Sortino said, "played very solid defense (only one error) and we made things happen."

UMass' next task is a tough one. They face Atlantic 10 rival Rutgers in an afternoon doubleheader tomorrow at 2:00 p.m. at NOPE. Rutgers is itching to avenge their 1-0 South Carolina loss.

Minutemen on offense for big lacrosse clash

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

Yastrzemski replaced Williams at Fenway, Cowens followed Russell at the Garden and Mantle kept the Yankee tradition alive in centerfield after Joe DiMaggio called it quits.

The question UMass lacrosse coach Richard Garber is being asked as the opener of the 1983 season approaches tomorrow at 1 p.m. at Boyden Field, is who will replace Jim Weller, a two-time All-American and the heart of the Gorilla attack the last two years, in the Gorilla offense.

"We're not going to replace a player of the caliber of Jimmy Weller," Garber said of the man who took the stick out of his hand and put a whistle in his mouth this spring as assistant coach under Garber.

"We might not have a Weller now but hopefully there is one in the making," Garber said.

What is apparent is that the Gorilla offense will not have the "flash and dash" Weller provided but will consistently put the ball in the net to give the Gorillas a shot at the national playoff berth that got away last year because of a late season tailspin.

"We don't have great speed at attack and sometimes the guys think I'm putting them down but I'm not. They do a great job. It just means that we have to take advantage of broken plays and also take advantage of three on twos and four on threes," said Garber.

"Our offensive strength this year is at midfield," said Garber. "That's where we have the most experience. The midfielder can get the ball on the defensive end and run it to the offensive end, so we can attack from in front of the net."

Senior midfielder Tim Cutler is the most experienced middie for the Gorillas. The 5'9 160 lb Manhasset, N. Y. native posesses exceptional quickness making him the top playmaker for the Gorillas.

At the opposite end of the experience spectrum, it appears freshmen attackman Greg Fisk, from Longmeadow, will step in and contribute immediately.

Senior Dave McEntee (11 goals) returns on attack from last year as does junior Sean Dolan (4 goals), who has been hampered by the flu during preseason workouts.

Baseball team hopes to rebound against Maine

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

Offense may attract fans but defense wins games, as the University of Massachusetts baseball team learned the hard way when they traveled to Yale yesterday and picked up a tough 6-5 loss.

The Minutemen started strongly behind a three run first inning home run by Todd Comeau.

Mistakes caught up with the Minutemen, however, as errors gave Yale four unearned runs. Pitcher Bruce Emerson was the hard-luck loser. He is now 0-3.

The Minutemen now play their first Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference (North) games tomorrow at noon, hosting the University of Maine Black Bears at the Earl E. Lorden Field.

In Maine, UMass will be facing a national power, a team which finished third in the College World Series last year at Omaha, Nebraska.

With all but five members of that team returning, Maine figures to be just as good this season.

Junior pitcher Bill Swift is the top player on the Maine squad and a bona fide professional prospect. He is scheduled to pitch the first game of tomorrow's doubleheader. Swift was on the United States Collegiate All-Star team this summer that was coached by UMass coach Dick Bergquist.

"Bill Swift is a great pitcher and an exceptional athlete. He could be one of the top picks in this year's pro draft," said Bergquist.

The Minutemen hope to be joining Maine in post-season play this year. To do that they will have to be among the top four finishers in the league.

"It is important for us to win three of our first four league games against Maine, Holy Cross, and the University of Connecticut. We are looking forward to playing a top team like Maine," remarked Bergquist.

To beat the Black Bears, UMass will have to rely on power hitters Chris Waszczuk and Comeau to drive in runs in support of pitchers Tony Presnal and Bob Kostro. That, and they will need better defense than they got against Yale.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Students have serious problems

You students are so apathetic it makes me sick. If I hear one more student say they don't read the "Daily Delusion" because it sucks or the comics aren't good anymore, I think I'm going to puke.

Just because UMass is a haven for academic rejects and pseudo-scholars, there's no excuse for the apathy I've seen in terms of student response. So far this semester on the editorial page, I have lied, cheated, and made up so many things in my columns that I would normally be in jail for libel, character assassination and a lot of other things.

Spew F. Orth

But noooooo, not here. The only thing people use the Collegian for is to clean their dope. Nobody even reads it. People wouldn't realize an important issue if it hit them in the face. And since the literacy rate has declined to the point where only one of three students at UMass even know how to read, we're going to cut the circulation of the paper from 17,000 to 500. And you bimbos probably won't even notice. Actually, you dolts don't notice much of anything. For all three of you that have gotten this far, I'll let you in on some secrets: For one, the real winner of the SGA elections, Ann Anarchist, quit when she found out how many pompous, patronizing assholes there are on the Fourth Floor. For another, Joe Duffey worked in a Burger King in Hadley before he became Chancellor.

Some "scoops" we've had have gone unpublished because, frankly, you students don't deserve to know them. We haven't told you of the massive campus-wide drug and extortion ring led by "student leaders" with SGA appropriated student money, with the tacit approval of the administration. What do you think they do in the offices all day, huh? And how about all those runny noses? And we haven't told you that Jeanne Kirkpatrick is giving the commencement address this year, in the cage. Or that the faculty Senate approved a strike by all professors before finals this year. Or that all records in the University computer system were erased by a deranged, sexually frustrated computer jock, making it impossible to give academic credit to anyone taking courses during the past three years.

Why should we? It's not worth our time or efforts. Go back to your marketing, engineering, or business administration classes and give up trying to figure out what's going on. You haven't got a clue.

UPC continues quality tradition

To the Editor:

Has anyone noticed what a tremendous job UPC has done with Spring Concert since that dull Allman brothers fiasco in 1979. Bonnie Raitt in '81 was great. Where else but UMass could you see Bonnie 10 times in two years? The Pond Series last year was also great. Though many complained no one had ever heard of Toots and the Maytalls or Billy Cobham, I had a great time. And now the mystery concert. Who else but UPC would come up with the tremendous idea of tricking 23,000 students leaving them in the dark about location and talent — wow! It's because they have found anybody yet. Not me. If the caliber of talent matches the last two years a good time should be had by all.

Every little spit helps. . .

To the Editor:

The droolers of America have been ignored by the Collegian long enough—it is time the paper gave adequate coverage to this oppressed minority, a minority which has been ostracized because of a simple physical problem. Our group, "Droolers for Democracy," demand that certain conditions be met by this paper and university.

1. Coverage by the Sports Page—Our National Drool—Off, the World Series of Drooling, and Drooling For Dollars have all recieved inadequate coverage at the hands of this insensitive newspaper.

2. Dear Drool—this section in the paper would be devoted to problems encountered by droolers all over UMass. Questions such as, "Is drooling on the first date appropriate?",and "Is there a test for drooling at Health Services?" would all be included.

3. Finally the Arts page should devote more coverage to movies which specifically cater to the droolers on this campus. Why weren't The World According to Drool, Sophie's Drool and D.T. (Drooling Terrestial) reviewed?

The droolers must be recognized by the Collegian. Our struggle continues spit by spit. Will you help?

Disneyland in New England

To the Editor:

I just want to let you people know that I think that UMass is the best place I've ever been to. So what if I've lived under a rock for the past eighteen years of my life? I think that this place is better than Disneyland. We've got floors with single women mixed right in with men, we've got cafeterias that serve meat, and we've got not one, but two "main" libraries. So what if the buses run late; at least they're free. We get cheap movies on weekends and there are plenty of places on campus to get stoned. All of my professors have office hours that fit inperfectly with my schedule. While I'm just a freshman ComStu major, my advisor in the placement office assures me that unlike the people who are graduating now, there will be plenty for me in the future. Gosh, is life great.

Letters Policy

This section of the page is devoted to those of you who actually think we care what the hell your opinion is. If you are dumb enough to send a letter in, it must be written in a certain way. Letters should be half spaced, between ninety and one-hundred lines, written in Bulgarian, and devoid of all references to the letters "A," "L," and "N." Also, if it's about the comics page, forget it. If you are so sensitive that these harmless attempts at humor actually offend you, don't expect us to take you seriously.

It's the spit for them folks

I have always written with the conviction that it is always better to make a bad joke out of a poor situation, then to make a poor situation out of a bad joke. But I can no longer be bright and cheery about certain people that really make me angry. People that make me see red. Hey, I'm talking about people who really piss me off. These people make me so mad I'd like to see them roasting on a spit.

That's right. A barbeque spit of appropriate size. A spit with a fire that would be a pyromaniacs delight. A spit where I could see all the people who piss me off writhe in agony as their flesh is roasted to an appropriate crispness.

Who, you may ask are the people that are so horrible that they have aroused my wrath to such a degree? I'll tell you.

Milton Bradley

People who work the early evening shifts at the Hatch. This will be the closest thing to a cooking lesson they'll ever see. It will also serve as their introduction to the use of fire or heat to make things hot.

William Putman. In case you don't recognize the name, he's that brilliantly articulate station manager for Channel 22 in Springfield. Let's try melting those horribly tacky polyester outfits to his flesh and then tearing them off.

Customer service people from the phone company. I'd love to put them in the hot seat for once. I can imagine having them beg for mercy while I remember all the times I've had to beg them for a just a few more days to pay my bill.

Anyone who is even remotely connected with the recent Burger King slam campaign against McDonalds. They're absolutely right. Flame broiling is better than frying.

I'd also like to see my second grade teacher skewered and put on a spit. No one puts me in the corner and gets away with it.

Drivers who don't use directionals. Talk about rude, inconsiderate and just plain dangerous. Burn these people before they burn you.

People who wait in line overnight so they get concert tickets. Hey, excuse me for not wanting to risk getting stepped on, possibly developing back problems for the rest of my life or having my money stolen from the guy who sold me bad acid. Put all those overly-avid fans on spits so they won't be in front of me in line.

Everyone who thinks they are too good to be put on a spit. This includes liberals, conservatives, and middle-of-the-roaders. Also, people who take the bus from Hasbrouck to the Fine Arts Center, those who don't flush toilets after using them, and people who bring their own special drinks to parties. (If you don't drink beer, you don't belong in college.)

I must remember to buy Bar-B-Q sauce.

Fascist Live Wire

By Adolph Chevan

Okay you bunch of sniveling louts, blubbering wort hogs, and quivering puddles of putrific protoplasm — ON YOUR FEET! Rise and acknowledge the new emperor of. weekend entertainment. David Chevan, the previous writer of Live Wire, has been replaced; he is, er, well he's temporarily in disposed. Let's just say — between you and me — that I've arranged a little vacation for David. In his stead, I, Adolph Chevan (David Chevan's younger brother from Jersey — Ed.) — Der Fuhrer, to you — will henceforth be compiling the Live Wire column. So you'd better get used to it kiddies! YOU VILL READ DER LIVE WIRE EVERY VEEK, UND YOU VILL FOLLOW MY INSTRUCTIONS TO ZE LETTER! But more importantly, ZOO VILL PARTY UND ZOO VILL HAVE FUN! ZAT DIS UN ORDER! Now sit down, loosen-up your jack boots and relax.

Der Fuhrer's favorite Urban Renewal tribute band, the Pleasure Dots will be performing tonight at Himhan's Cafe in Noho. They are without a doubt the absolute wicked pisser awesomest band in the entire known world. And boy, are they GORGEOUS! Especially the bass player, who's known by all as Darlin' Dave. He's probably the sexiest cat around, and I know quite a few girl-type Dot fans who'd heartily agree. You can make private appointments with Darlin' Dave during intermission tonight, but be sure to have about $35 cash handy. . .

And now for the local music scene as it stands this weekend. Echo and the Bunnymen will bring their special brand of revived psychedelia to the Lyceum in London tonight. If you don't want to trek quite that far, however, Culture Club, featuring that cuddley eunuch Boy George, will be appearing at the Golden Guinna in Birmingham. At 15 pounds, though, it'd probably be worth the haul elsewnere. Tomorrow promises to present difficult choices, with Spandau Ballet's brand of synthetic, new romantic swill storming Liverpool's Dingwall, and Flock of Seagulls bringing their pop-schlock schtock to the Appolo Theater in Oxford. Visage, those impeccably-attired scum-bunnies will be performing at the Birmingham Odeon sometime next week, but I strongly urge you to avoid them if you can; it's just more new romantic sludge.

Well that's about it, you peons. One word of parting advice: Nazi punks are people too.

Mr. Willie stalks in for another kill in I Think I'll Kill You's clever sequel.

Killer on the loose again

I THINK I'LL KILL YOU, PART II
Directed by Lance Slaughter

By ANDY RANSOFARAWAY
Collegian Stiff

When Lance Slaughter's clever I Think I'll Kill You, Part I opened last October (see review Oct. 29), it created a lot of excitement and brought respect to the richly deserving slasher genre.

Our main character is again Mr. Willie and the film opens where the last one left off — at the orphanage. Mr. Willie finds a pocket group of children he missed in the original and quickly dispatches them through a series of very clever and authentic-looking dismemberments.

We follow as Mr. Willie then tracks the nephew/deputy of Detective Faison (again played by Joe Spinell) to an old basement, where he ties him up and hammers nails into his back. It's interesting and clever how Slaughter has his hero/protagonist work his way up through the ages of his victims; beginning with small children and continuing until he hangs an elderly couple. Towards the latter part of the film, however, he chases two young girls into an alley with a pneumatic drill, and puts as many holes in my age theory as he does in their faces.

Mr. Willie slashes his way through the middle part of the film, including a particularly clever hatchet montage in which the victims are introduced moments before they are split in half. Oftentimes slasher films try to establish a character before they kill him, but Slaughter doesn't waste our time with this nonsense. Hence we get twice as much carnage for our admission price.

The film ends in an original and clever manner. It just stops. It doesn't attempt to summarize or answer any questions we might have, because in life itself there are few answers. Lance Slaughter's knowledge of theoretical psychology is strongly prevalent here. He also has many rich and fascinating allusions to such varied sources as androcentrism and gourmet cooking. His screenplay is a bow to his idols: John Steinbeck, William Shakespeare and Abe Vigoda. I can't recommend this clever film enough.

I Think I'll Kill You, Part II will be playing at the mall through Tuesday. It is rated R.

NBA Players Association walks

By I. M. PIG
Collegian Troth

After closed door meetings with negotiations or poker games going round the clock, the National Basketball Player's Association has decided to strike the remainder of their season until an agreement can be worked out.

Currently, NBA players receive an average salary of $246,000 plus $20,000 in benefits. However, the NBA players feel this isn't enough. "Man, I was given more than that when I played in college just my freshman year--and the drugs were cheaper, too," quotes an anonomous player.

The differences between the players and the owners were far too great to be able to reach an agreement. The players started out negotiations in a man for man defense, but the owners tightly packed and unified zone thwarted any efforts to get any proposals off. Later, the players called their last time out, and the owners refused to foul. The negotiations went into overtime, where they remain to this point.

The owners have sought to reach an agreement putting a salary cap on themselves, thereby limiting the amount that a middle aged balding owner can pay a 7-foot cocaine junkie at $5 million dollars a year; for which he will run around in his underwear 82 times a year for 48 minutes each time.

If the walkout goes on for longer than a couple of days, the effect in America could be enormous. Husbands will have more time with their wives, families could be reunited, no longer will Tuesday and Thursday nights be filled with the sound of bouncing balls of the NBA games.

The NBA players took the owners by surprise, forcing their strike action yesterday at a time when everyone's interest in the NBA is at a peak. Non one spends anytime outdoors in this weather, there is no other professional sport for fans to pick up and follow; according to one player, "We have them by the balls!"

NBA owners have talked about hiring scabs to play in the remainder of the NBA games, but have met the resistance of qualified players to play in these games. An alternate plan has been devised by Celtics general manager Red Auerbach, who suggests getting old-time NBA Players who were all-stars (since few of them are dead) to play for their old teams. Since most of these old-timers do not have the stamina to play 48 minutes a game, Auerbach proposes three-minute games. "Hell, that's all you have to see of any NBA game," echoes NBA Commissioner Larry O'Brien.

Meanwhile, the Players have a proposal of their own, should there be an extended strike. Players Association head Larry Fleisher met today with a group of moguls consisting of Ted Turner, Elliott Kalb, and JimFloyd; to talk about presenting a series of fund-raiser games with NBA striking players, to be played at the Curry Hicks Cage, in Amherst, Massachusetts.

Pearson is not drafted

Garry Pearson, who completed his final season for the University of Massachusetts football team this past fall, had better get his resume together.

It was reported yesterday that Pearson, who turned down what was reported to be a lucrative offer from the Boston Breakers of the United States Football League earlier this spring, will not be selected in the NFL draft April 26.

Pearson's agent Dom Doner said the NFL scouts claimed the all-time leading rusher in UMass history lacked the speed necessary to be a star in the NFL. Pearson was last seen heading to Canada.

No more UM basketball program is disbanded

By I.M. HERE
Collegian Boss

The men's basketball program at the University of Massachusetts has been eliminated following the release of head coach Tom McLaughlin.

"If McLaughlin couldn't coach this team nobody can," Frank McInerney he said. "I think everything went his way and he had everything to take."

"One thing is for sure," he said, "we gave Tom the red carpet. The sky was the limit."

The athletic department said they were disappointed that basketball failed at UMass, but "the most important thing is that we keep functioning."

McInerney said he thinks UMass can make it on its own.

"We have a competitive lacrosse team, and a competitive field hockey team," He said.

"We're the best, and it's in those two sports that we excell," he said. "Hell, They don't cost us anything, and we like them."

"Another thing is that we are mediocre in football and we like that," he said. "Nobody likes having the ultimate in sports out here in Amherst."

McLaughlin agreed with McInerney.

"If they can't make it with someone with my training they aren't going to make it with anybody."

"I like UMass, he said, "but they're nowhere in hoop."

"God, they're going to have to bring back Julius," he said. "Although I don't think he'll be back. I think he had the right idea in the first place."

One of the more disturbing points to be brought up at the most recent athletic department meeting was that the women's basketball program would also be cut.

"I'm not happy," said McInerney, "but what's good for the goose is good for the gander."

Mary Ann Ozdarski, former head ocoach of women's basketball said she feels bad for the players she recruited and the program as a whole.

"It's bad," she said I'm not quite sure what to think. I hope they restore the program, but at the same time, if they couldn't make it with me and Tom, they aren't going to make it with anybody."

McInerney said he felt the University was wrong to give both of these coaches "the red carpet treatment",but he said "its time for these people to learn what the real world is like."

"God, this is afterall, a University."

Mc Inerney said he doesn't hold himself responsible for any of the happenings around UMass.

"I like to think of myself as the best."

Sports Notices

AMHERST, Ma. — Softball coach Elaine Sortino is pushing for the renaming of the UMass Minutewomen softball team to the UMass Nutmeggers due to the high influx of quality Connecticut players on the club. The former Yale coach said, "There is no finer place than Connecticut for blue chip athletes. Better yet with Connecticut!" Sortino turned down a ten year pact from UConn because the team had too many New Jersey players and not enough from Connecticut.

Andre the Giant, reputed to be the greatest athlete that ever lived, will be the opposition in jello wrestling against top notch UMass athletes, on the Southwest pyramids, tonight. Andre will face Mark 'UMass Zone' Rollins followed by Jim 'The Crippler' Floyd, Howie 'Pink Belly' Kilpatrick, and John 'The HAMMER' Hempel. John Mincone will be the ringside announcer. Proceeds will go to buy kegs for the always hardworking Collegian sports staff. Ladies welcome.

Hooker wants to straighten some things out here

By B.J. HOOKER
Guest Scum Demolisher

Editor's Note: For some reason my TV receives shows a week in advance. Here's some of next week's Saturday night party hour special filmed at UMass.

I've discovered corruption in the athletic department and I intend to track it down and apprehend it because, if I don't, and it gets away to cause harm again, I don't know how I could live with myself.

I don't know exactly where the problem lies, but when you've been a policeman on these streets for as long I have you get to just have these feelings, these inklings, that tell you that something's wrong.

Romano and I were driving down the streets when all of a sudden Romano says he sees trouble brewing over by the Curry Hicks Cage.

You know how rookies can be sometimes, though. They get impetuous, ready to jump right in on something without knowing what's going on. That's why they're paired with veterans, like me.

I decided we should take a look just the same. A good cop doesn't just jump to conclusions and jump all over someone for nothing though, so we pulled the car around slowly from the back of the place for a quick radio check.

Well, just when we thought we were catching something going on, it was time for us to get back to the Academy for class. I ran through the obstacle course, shooting desperado dummies, twirling, tripping and crawling my way to a score that was way above those "kids" that we're trying to turn into good police officers. I never even lost the part in my hair.

But, I'm on my way back now, maggot. And i m gonna nail you good, and for good. I know you're out there. I'm going to be breathing down your back day in and day out. And when I'm not breathing down your back I'll be breathing in your face. I won't rest until your kind of filth is put away where it doesn't stink up the air anymore. I'm coming for you, scum.

New long-range plan is unveiled

By BILL WALL
Collegian Staff

A new long-range plan, designed to serve as a guide for the University of Massachusetts and focus attention on current issues and problems on the campus, was released last week by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey.

The 214-page document is divided into two parts, one concerning academic affairs and the other addressing the non-academic aspects of the University.

The academic affairs section had been submitted to the campus last fall by former Provost Loren Baritz, while the non-academic section in the document is presented for the first time, according to a letter by Duffey accompanying the plan.

The letter acknowledges that the document is an early version of the first plan and therefore is subject to review. Duffey states in the letter that due to requests from the University Board of Trustees and the Board of Regents the plan is being forwarded with the "caveat" that it is subject to change.

The plan's academic affairs section is divided into four parts. The first pertains to the quality of the University in the areas of faculty, graduate and undergraduate students, and the physical condition of the campus. The second is concerned with the allocation of resources to better manage available space on campus, to replace worn-out equipment, and to redirect resources to departments overburdened by student demand by way of the flexibility afforded by the expected attrition of faculty. The third part of the Academic Affairs section deals with academic issues. It supports the current discussion of revision of the general education curriculum. It also calls for encouragement and expansion of the Honors Program, international programs and contacts, the Division of Continuing Education, the Five College consortium and the advising of undergraduates by the faculty. An examination of foreign language instruction is advocated, as well as the development of a program in the History of Science and Technology, and the creation of a Center for Individualized Instruction composed of the current Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration program, the Honors program, the Internship program and University Without Walls. The fourth part covers the administration of research on campus and calls for the creation of a campus-based research foundation to provide administrative support for campus research and provide advice on policy issues relevant to research.

The non-academic section of the long-range plan is apportioned into three parts: Student Life, University Relations, and Physical Facilities and Space. The Student Life section touches upon admissions, counseling, residential life, safety, student activities and Five College cooperation. The section makes a number of proposals for each area, in particular calling for the "phasing out" of the current residential colleges and the consideration of splitting the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) into smaller components and proposing that the campus administration undertake a "substantive" review of the Student Senate's annual budget recommendations for the SATF. The University Relations section calls for the expansion of the public presence, service and interaction of the University and the promotion of alumni relations and organization. The third section on the physical facilities of the campus advocates a concerted effort to reverse the declining condition of the campus facilities and to locate funding in order to proceed with the accumulated deferred maintenance on campus.

New inspection process underway to test carbon emissions from automobiles

By JOSH MEYER
Collegian Staff

Last Friday was the first day of the state's annual combined safety and emissions testing program for automobiles, and in Amherst, everything went well.

The new plan requires car owners to have their vehicles inspected for high levels of carbon monoxide and hydrocarbon emissions.

"Lots of times the older cars have an easier time passing, because the standards are lower," Stone said. "Most cars that fail need minor adjustments — carburetor adjustments and spark plug replacement usually do the job."

The $10 inspection process uses a computerized inspection system to determine whether a car passes the emission safety test, and adds approximately three minutes onto the normal inspection process.

"The new requirements are designed to reduce emissions of the major pollutants by 20 percent," according to David Stone of the Belchertown Road Sunoco station in Amherst.

"We've had the machine for over a month, and we've inspected about one hundred cars," Stone said. "A lot of people aren't sure that their car will pass, or about when they should get the inspection," Stone said.

The new policy states that license plates whose last number on the right is the number 4 must be inspected in April and those with number 5 must be tested in May. The emissions test is mandatory for post-1967, non-diesel motor vehicles under 10,000 pounds. The hydrocarbon emission standards differ according to the type and year of the car, the number of cylinders and other pertinent information.

So far, according to Stone, approximately 85 percent of the cars inspected have passed.

"Lots of times the older cars have an easier time passing, because the standards are lower," Stone said. "Most cars that fail need minor adjustments — carburetor adjustments and spark plug replacement usually do the job," he said. Estimates for fixing a car with faulty emissions levels range from a $30 tune-up to a $150 new exhaust system, he said.

With the new policy in effect, Massachusetts drivers will need to inspect their cars once a year, instead of bi-annually. The computerized vehicle inspection system, which costs $9,000, must be applied for by gas stations. The station is then inspected by the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Quality Engineering and given a license. So far, five or six gas stations in the Amherst area expect to have the system set up shortly.

"Since a lot less stations will be giving inspections because of the cost of the machine, we'll probably be swamped now," Stone said.

Five college graduates acquire fame and fortune

By DAVID MUNIZ

What do Nancy Reagan, Julia Child, Dr. J., Bill Cosby, Emily Dickinson, and Richard Gere all have in common? The answer is that they all went to school in the five college area.

Nancy Reagan and Julia Child both went to Smith College. Back then, Julia Child was a french major. She graduated from Smith in 1934.

Julius (Dr. J) Erving of the Philadelphia 76ers pro basketball team went to UMass, as did Bill Cosby, who went to graduate school here, and Richard Gere, the star of the movie "An Officer and a Gentleman," and "An American Gigolo," who left UMass his sophomore year.

Emily Dickinson was a poet, and a graduate of Mt. Holyoke College.

The list of famous and successful people does not stop there. From Amherst College comes Ken Howard, star of the now defunct television series "The White Shadow," who graduated in 1963, and Prince Albert Grimaldi, of Monaco, who graduated in 1981.

Hampshire College, whose oldest graduates are only approaching 33 years of age, already has several noted professionals in their fields. Steven Roche, a Hampshire graduate, won the Lumina Award for lighting design, one of the highest awards possible in the lighting industry. Another Hampshire graduate is designing a stamp for the U.S. Postal Service.

Ever since there has been a college in the Pioneer Valley, there have been famous graduates from here, according to Vee Wailgum. Lucy Stone, the first woman to retain her maiden name after marrying, graduated from Mt. Holyoke in 1839. Any woman who retained her maiden name after Lucy Stone was referred to as a "Lucy Stoner." The first president of Wellesley College, Ada L. Howard, was also a graduate of Mt. Holyoke in 1853.

Famous five college graduates can be found in almost every field.

Smaller families on the rise

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — The Latin American tradition of large families is coming to an end as young parents abandon the belief that children are the "richness" of a nation and proof of their father's masculinity.

Population experts cite increased urbanization, the entry of women into the labor force, better education and health services and the widespread availability of contraceptive information and devices as the factors creating the new attitudes.

And economic woes may be accelerating the trend.

One of the most dramatic examples is Colombia, where the birth rate dropped during the last 20 years from 46 live births per 1,000 inhabitants to 30. During that period, the average number of children for each adult Colombian woman fell from 6.5 to 2.9.

Although the rates vary from country to country, all show the same downward trend. In Brazil, the region's most populous nation with 125 million people, the birth rate decreased from 43 to 30 births per 1,000, while Mexico's rate went from 45 to 37 between 1960 and 1980, according to the World Bank.

These figures are still far above the current U.S. rate of 16 births per 1,000 or West Germany's 11. But while North America and European rates stabilized in the last half of the 1970s, Latin America's figures indicate the drop here is continuing.

Despite the dominant Roman Catholic Church's formal opposition to artificial birth control, contraceptives are universally available. In most Latin countries, the pill can be bought even at neighborhood drug stores without a prescription.

Nuke protests span Europe

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — An estimated 200,000 peace protesters blocked U.S. military bases, staged mock atomic holocausts and decorated a nuclear submarine port with daffodils yesterday, climaxing a chilly Easter weekend of European demonstrations.

Police arrested 70 people at a U.S. military radar station atop a Berlin hill, and hundreds were reported detained briefly elsewhere.

Officers dragged a parliamentarian and former army general from the entrance of one army base in West Germany to the cheers of his 250 fellow protesters.

There were no reports of injuries in the demonstrations.

In Faslane, Scotland, more than 2,000 protesters with yellow daffodils descended on the Royal Navy's top-security Polaris nuclear submarine base on the Clyde River, bedecking its barbed-wire fence with peace symbols fashioned from the flowers.

Security squads seized five demonstrators, including two women dressed as Easter bunnies, who clambered over a fence and occupied a sentry post. Other marchers later staged a mock funeral at the main gates, leaving a symbolic coffin filled with flowers.

"This is our last chance to stop the missiles and we want to make the most of it," said Helbig Lothar, 23, a psychology student from Giessen University who marched near Frankfurt.

New law to permit public lashings

MAPUTO, Mozambique (AP) — Mozambique will begin publicly flogging subversives, the official state news agency reported.

Citing a new law by a standing committee of the Peoples' Assembly, the agency AIM reported Saturday that people found guilty of "crimes against the security of the people and people's state" can be publicly lashed three to 30 times.

Dukakis claims tax hikes set minimum rate

BOSTON — The whole kit and caboodle is called a "revenue enforcement and protection program" by the Dukakis administration. It's come to be known as "reap" in the Legislature.

It proposes that the "tax upon cigarettes would be modified from its present level of 21 cents to 25 cents per package," according to literature distributed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' administration March 2.

The same explanatory material called the gasoline tax hike from 9.9 cents per gallon to 11 cents that took effect Friday a proposal establishing "a minimum rate," rather than an increase.

In recent Senate debate, one legislator said this bill was simply "correcting" the 1980 variable gasoline tax law that permitted the levy to float upward with the price of gasoline and, not expected at the time, back down in recent months.

While the Democratic legislative leaders generally support "reap," a term coined by House Tax Chairman Charles F. Flaherty, many also say the tax hikes and nearly two dozen other budget balancing measures the Democratic governor filed are insufficient.

State seeks plan to retain high tech workforce

BOSTON — Massachusetts must retain its high technology edge to avoid the kind of wholesale job loss it suffered earlier this century, according to a congressional panel which has a jobs hearing set for today.

Five members of the state's Washington delegation will hear from government officials, educators, bankers and labor leaders on ways to train and retrain workers in hopes of holding onto as many jobs as possible.

"Every regional economist I'm aware of has stressed the fact that New England's major economic advantage is having a highly educated and highly skilled work force," said Bailey Spencer, executive director of the New England Congressional caucus, which organized the hearing.

Wrong man cremated in corpse mix-up

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Nearly 60 family and friends who gathered at a funeral home to view a body were told the remains had been cremated by mistake, and the services were called off.

Deno M. Hudson, 22, died last week from an accidental gunshot wound. His coffin was placed next to that of another gunshot victim who was to be cremated, the Lawrence A. Jones & Sons funeral home said.

"I have been in the business since 1950 and this is the first time this has happened," said Jones, who added that name tags will now be put on all coffins to avoid such mixups.

Blondell Hudson, mother of the deceased, said "this is unforgivable. It was a hideous mistake."

Marine chokes to death in donut eating contest

NEWPORT, N.C. — A 25-year-old Marine choked to death on a half-dozen glazed doughnuts during a speed-eating contest at a festival here, officials and witnesses say.

Cpl. Richard Drown, of Green Springs, Ohio, died Saturday of "apparent respiratory arrest," according to a statement issued by the U.S. Marine Corps Air Station at Cherry Point.

Drown was among 10 contestants in the doughnut-eating match which followed the Newport Pig Cooking Contest.

He gobbled four doughnuts successfully, ate two more and, while swallowing those, gagged when he put three additional doughnuts in his mouth.

"When they said he had 10 seconds left, he stuffed three more in his mouth at one time," said Greg Pehrsen, another Marine who witnessed the contest. "He walked off the stage, looked like he was starting to collapse and fell to the ground."

Bystanders tried to perform the Heimlich maneuver in an attempt to force the doughnuts out of his airway, but were unsuccessful.

U.S. divorce rate down for first time in 20 years

NEW BRITAIN, Conn. — One year does not a trend make, but one of the so-called backbones of our way of life — marriage — is showing signs of new life after a long dormant period.

The U.S. divorce rate actually dropped in 1982, a healthy sign for this supposedly moribund institution. The last time the divorce rate went down was in the pre-Beatles, pre-Vietnam era, 1962, when 2.2 divorces per 1,000 people were recorded by the National Center for Health Statistics.

In the intervening 20 years divorces increased from 413,000 to 1.18 million last year, or 5.1 divorces per 1,000 people. And that was actually three percent less that in 1981.

Sometimes overlooked while the divorce rate climbed were the millions of happy, successful marriages. Even as the failure rate skyrocketed so too did the number of rate skyrocketed so too did the number of new marriages.

Full funding for third world picnic denied by SWAG

By ROBERT STACK
Collegian Correspondent

Southwest Area Government (SWAG) leaders repeated last year's fiery debate over funding of the Malcolm X Third World Center's annual picnic Thursday night, when the assembly voted to allot $880 to the Center although $1200 was requested by Malcolm X representatives.

Four proposals were made to reduce the event's funding, with a final vote of 18-14 supporting an $880 allocation.

"This is the only thing we come for, and it causes a great fight every year," said Michael Nauls, co-director of the Malcolm X Center. "The picnic cost more this year than last and the potential outside funding sources could not come through with money this year."

Mark Lipof, a SWAG representative said, "I left the meeting in disgust. It was totally discriminaory. The executive body related their views to the body as they always do in cases where their personal opinions are involved. They forced their opinions on the body," Lipof said.

Neil Grant, last year's Malcolm X director said, "This (the picnic) is the only thing black people and third world people can come to. Each year, SWAG brings entertainment and tries to pass it off as a third world event -- some reggae band that appears each month and doesn't attract any third world people."

The picnic, which is open to all University students, is scheduled for Saturday, May 14 at the Southwest horseshoe area.

Professor granted funds to research food poisoning

By BRIAN FITZ MAURICE
Collegian Staff

The United States Army recently granted $60,000 to Dr. Ronald G. Labbe, assistant professor of Food Science and Nutrition at the University of Massachusetts, to study spores responsible for food poisoning.

The spore being studied, "Clostridium Perfringens" (CP), is the third most common cause of food poisoning, Labbe said. The CP spores are normally a highly resistant dormant stage of bacteria, but if conditions are right these CP spores will grow, Labbe said.

This spore is present in half of all fresh meats and in a variety of meat products, Labbe said.

"This is not unusual because CP is found in the intestines of all warm-blooded animals including man. During the slaughter it is not hard to see how these spores might get into the cuts of meat," Labbe said.

"That alone is not a danger," Labbe said. "The problem with CP spores arises when meat products' temperatures are abused," Labbe said.

Calling it the "church picnic effect," Labbe said the contamination of meat products by CP spores is most common when there is a large amount of food being prepared well in advance. Mistakes are made in defrosting and refrigeration when amateurs prepare large amounts of food without breaking them down into portion sizes, Labbe said.

"If a large pot of gravy is put into a refrigerator to cool overnight, the outside will cool, but the inside will stay warm, a perfect temperature for the CP spores to grow," Labbe said.

The hazard of the CP organisms is that once allowed to grow, they have the ability to recover from heat injury, so that food poisoning may occur even after the food is cooked, Labbe said.

The most common forms of food poisoning, "Staphylococcus aureus" (ptomaine food poisoning), "Salmonella" and "Clostridium Perfringens" (CP), cause diarrhea, vomiting, and severe abdominal cramps, generally incapacitating the victim, Labbe said.

The army's interest in further research of CP is sparked by the lack of "basic research" about CP in comparison with "Staphylococcus aureus" and "Salmonella" research, which goes back over 50 years, Labbe said. Although CP has always existed, it wasn't discovered until 20 years ago when there were improvements in scientific methodologies, Labbe said.

The army's hopes, according to Labbe, are that a clearer understanding of CP might better avoid incapacitation of troops in the field caused by food poisoning.

The CP research is expected to last two or three years, and will focus on the discovery of how a certain enzyme is allowing some spores to survive the cooking process, and under what conditions the survivors will continue to grow, Labbe said.

Hard times inspire faith at Easter

By JOHN DiPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

The large crowds that turned out at the Newman Center chapel to hear Easter Mass yesterday were a reflection on "distress in society" according to the center's director.

The Rev. Joseph Quigley said Easter Masses and Holy Week services were "amazingly well-attended."

More than 600 of the faithful jammed the center's chapel to hear Mass at 11 a.m. yesterday, according to Quigley. The other six services held there yesterday enjoyed similar turnouts.

"I think religion is getting big play probably because of the times," Quigley said. "There's a real stress in society."

Quigley said that people usually turn to the church in times of trouble.

"When you're desperate, who do you turn to? What've you got left?" he said. "You can come to me gratis."

"I think people are hurting, and I think they need to be reassured," Quigley said.

People need to be reassured because there are "damn few leaders today," Quigley said.

"You don't find people taking a definite stand," he said. "Very few people stick their necks out to do anything."

Another cause of the anxiety in society that Quigley mentioned was a lack of respect people have for others.

"Do we love our neighbor? No, we don't," Quigley stated. "I ask people 'do we respect one another?' I really don't think we do," he said.

"We haven't got a good spirit in our society," he said.

This disillusionment in society is timely on Easter because "this is the morning that the Lord appeared to men who had begun to lose hope," Quigley said.

Quigley said one of the main points of his sermon yesterday was that "We've got to have a vision."

"I think we've got to start respecting others. We've got to take to heart what we only purport to take to heart," he concluded.

Writing aid available to area workers

By PAULA HOYT
Collegian Staff

Some professors at the University of Massachusetts extend their teaching beyond the students into the business world by helping area professionals with writing skills.

The Writing Center of the UMass Division of Continuing Education offers credit-free, cost-free workshops for area industry workers who have problems with writing, said Mike Munley, coordinator of the Writing Center.

"We want to arouse a little interest in writing. Everyone can write and should write," Munley said.

Munley will be traveling in a UMass van to area shopping centers in the next two weeks with information for local residents who have writing concerns or want to improve their skills.

He said a common service by the Division of Continuing Education is to go off campus to industries and find out the writing problems of workers. Workshops such as "Conquering Writing Blocks", to be offered in April, are also given regularly.

Free writing advice will be available from Munley from 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m., April 11 at Thorne's market in Northampton, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., April 26 at the Springfield City Library, from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., March 19 and from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., March 24, at the Holyoke Mall and from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Bayside West in downtown Springfield.

Munley, former editor of the North Adams Transcript, was a journalist for eight years and worked for businesses in Washington, New York, and Berkshire County.

IDB and TIPS; UMass by phone

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Staff

The Information Data Bank (IDB) and Taped Information Phone Service (TIPS) are sources of information on matters of general interest to the University community.

IDB is a telephone or walk-in referal service maintaining up to date information on University policies and procedure, bus, library and athletic schedules, and current on-campus events.

"It is a referral center for a variety of things about the University," said Associate Dean of Students Robert N. Brooks.

TIPS is a library of over 200 cassettes providing information on specific topics of interest, such as: "Financial Aid at the University," "Pre-registration for Courses," and "Undergraduate Fees." Brooks said the service will tape just about anything that is of interest to students. All the tapes are also available in Spanish and are being made available for the hearing impaired too, Brooks said.

Brooks said the services were an outgrowth from the Blue Ribbon Committee on Red Tape, a committee started by Brooks six years ago to determine how to get information out to students and faculty from one central location.

The service are run through the Dean of Students Office and employ 18 to 20 work study students who respond to inquiries and answer calls. Brooks said IDB and TIPS are run at a minimum cost to the University, the major expense being the cost of the tapes. He said the electronic equipment, which has already been paid for, was worth the investment cost.

"As the University gets larger, the need for IDB and TIPS becomes greater," Brooks said. Students face a greater need for a place to turn to for information and put the services to greater use, he said.

"If a call comes in and we don't have the information, I charge the students to get it," Brooks said.

Since October 31, 1982, Brooks said the total number of calls to IDB were 1806, to TIPS were 2468. He said the greatest number of combined calls in a given week were 594, the first week of the spring semester, and the smallest number of combined calls was 149 during Thanksgiving week.

Brooks said he is presently putting together a loose-leaf notebook on every piece of printed information at the University. "It will be a data control reference point with information on areas such as the library, the University Health Services, and Greek Affairs," Brooks said.

Brooks added he would like to make IDB and TIPS more visible to the students. "What I want is more business," he said. At present a wall in the Whitmore office is being taken down to make the equipment more visible.

Brooks said he hopes to see more electronical changes and hopes in time to have monitors running with course selection information and registration updates located in key spots to keep students informed.

Service fraternity offers an alternative

By ROBERT NOLAN
Collegian Correspondent

Most University of Massachusetts fraternities have a house, but for Alpha Phi Omega, a national fraternity that emphasizes community service, this is not the case.

"We're an in-between fraternity," claims Jim Pisini, president of Alpha Phi Omega and a junior from Franklin, adding that the fraternity is "an alternative to the Greek System."

Termed a "University service fraternity" by the Greek Affairs Office, the fifteen-member fraternity, whose ideals are derived from scouting, is responsible for numerous charity drives.

To become a member, pledges must contribute 15 hours to such events as "Operation I.D.," "Las Vegas Night," blood drives and several other events. There is no hazing.

"It's the whole idea of volunteering," said Pisini, who said Alpha Phi Omega's ideals are "similar to that of the Rotary Club."

"But we're not a club, as you get a real sense of brotherhood," said Pisini, adding that "we're more than just a group, yet not quite a frat."

The main difference between Alpha Phi Omega and other fraternities is that members are not loyal to the frat house but to the ideals of "campus and community service." Most of the members are former Eagle Scouts, although it is not necessary to have been a Boy Scout to join.

Founded in 1925 to carry on the scouting ideals in college, the 600-chapter national fraternity came to UMass in 1952, where it has since held a "good name" on campus. "They do more fund raising for charity" than the average fraternity, claimed Kenneth Abert, the program adviser for the student acitivites in the Greek Affairs Office.

Alpha Phi Omega is now carrying on "Operation I.D." in coordination with the UMass Police Department. The project involves indentifying students' valuables with social security numbers so that stolen articles recovered by the police may be identified, Pisini said.

In the fall semester Alpha Phi Omega holds an anuual "Las Vegas Night" mock gambling casino. Profits go to charity.

Alpha Phi Omega's sister sorority is Gamma Sigma Sigma, which recently held a book exchange.

SGA ex-President Jim Murphy has his say

He's for student power, as radical as ever and remains a force to be contended with

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

Jim Murphy is a comfortable man — whether he is working or simply passing the time talking with members of his entourage. He can usually be found with his feet up on his rickety desk, in the oblong box called the "president's office."

And it's difficult to find Murphy all wound up or tense; he has yet to be seen rushing off to a meeting or running around his office looking for some obscure document on rent control or general education.

negative opinion — at least not on the fourth floor of the Student Union Building where the SGA offices are located.

But Murphy can boast that he has never "burned" another student, and this may be a part of the reason why he is a respected member of the SGA. He also has the benefit of being aligned with Sharon Davies, the former speaker of the senate, Chris Sullivan, the newly elected speaker, and several other powerful senators.

It is no fluke that Murphy was able to generate support for his bid for the presidency. He had participated in senate activities for three years and was originally elected

"The man is mellow" Murphy's peers in the SGA will admit freely, "He has a grip on his role at (UMass)."

Former Student Government Association President Jim Murphy.

Murphy's closest friends all agree that while the job of president of the Student Government Association (SGA), from which Murphy stepped down last week, is demanding and tiring and sometimes monotonous, Jim Murphy is able to stay cool.

"The man is mellow," his peers in the SGA will admit freely. "He has a grip on his role at the University of Massachusetts."

(Murphy's) year as campus president officially came to an end last Wednesday at the senate meeting when Tom Ahern and Charlene Allen were sworn in as his successors. Murphy campaigned for Ahern and Allen and says he is confident they can succeed in working for the interests of the students.

"The transition between Charlene, Tom and myself should go well," as he explains, "we have worked together in the past and have worked well."

Murphy is just reaping his greatest advantage from running as a single candidate.

While he has been relieved of his duties as campus president, his term as a member of the UMass Board of Trustees runs through June.

"I needed someone intelligent and compatible to run with," he says as his justification for running as a sole candidate, "and those people were not interested in running."

as a member of the Progressive Student Alliance (PSA) slate. The PSA was organized to elect a faction of the students who shared the same beliefs and ideals, Murphy explained.

"The last of the PSA people will be gone after this year, which isn't necessarily bad," he reasoned. "The SGA requires change to function correctly. I'd like to believe the PSA was an effective slate during its time."

While Murphy and others will argue that there is not a party system within the SGA, it is easy to prove differently. Murphy, a self-acclaimed anarchist and a long-time member of the Radical Student Union, falls into a category which has been labeled "rads" or "progressive" by various SGA members.

He refers to the candidacy of Fran Hegeler and Siobhan Powers, true opponents of the Murphy line, as the "conservative tram" of the recent presidential elections. He even played a part in a whisper campaign which charged those two with red-baiting after the distribution of a leaflet which had a drawing of the Kremlin on its cover bearing the words "Student Union Building."

(Murphy) refers to the candidacy of Fran Hegeler and Siobhan Powers, true opponents of the Murphy line, as the "conservative tram" of the recent SGA presidential elections.

"They dug their own graves with that one," he said, quite pleased with the outcome of the elections. "You have to give the students more credit than to pull a stunt like that."

On what is labeled the "conservative side" of the SGA, Powers and Hegeler stand virtually powerless, and this is something which Murphy smiles at. He is also pleased with the "fall from grace" which Sen. Dave McCarthy, Powers and Hegeler's campaign manager, recently experienced. McCarthy was verbally castigated by the senate and Kevin Bowe, the Editor-in-Chief of the Collegian.

McCarthy resigned following the Kremlin leaflet distribution and Bowe charged McCarthy with unethically misrepresenting another person's views in a Collegian article written last semester.

"This is not responsible leadership," Murphy says, pointing out the Powers/Hegeler team used the slogan "Wanted: Responsible Student Leaders" throughout their short-lived bid for the presidency.

His relationship with the administrative hierarchy is similar. There are some who admire Murphy's idealism and respect his judgement, and there are those who think his presence on the Board of Trustees was detrimental to the University's image.

"I question the style some administrators use when dealing with students," he says. "I just don't believe they should get away with patronizing students the way they do."

"I question the style some administrators use when dealing with students," (Murphy) says. "I just don't believe they should get away with patronizing students the way they do."

Murphy grins as he talks about his role as a trustee. He has enjoyed his term as one of the University's chief policy makers and admittedly it is the part of his job he enjoyed the most.

"The trustees are the University's policy making board," he says not so modestly. "And there is no question that the students must be represented on the board." He is defensive about this, as if the students' seat with the trustees is constantly in jeopardy.

"Students are in a better position to judge what is good for the students," he says defending the turf which has become sacred tdo him. "There is no way to ensure student input without a seat on the board."

Murphy's performance as a trustee fares well with many of his peers, but there are those who say he has been ineffective. It is difficult, however, to hear a blatantly

William Field, dean of students and Randy Donant, director of student activities, are two names which frequently surface when Murphy speaks of his "patronizing administrators."

His perception of UMass president David C. Knapp, a person he must frequently deal with as a trustee, is unique. Murphy views Knapp as a person who considers the image of UMass before he considers the students and the educational process.

"He is concerned with how I dress," says Murphy who has yet to wear a tie or a dress jacket to a trustee's meeting. "I feel no need to walk up to Knapp in a suit and tie and have to treat him as if he's my father.

"I'm trying to truly represent the students," he says as a member of the Progressive Student Alliance (PSA) slate. The PSA was organized to elect a faction of the students who shared the same beliefs and ideals, Murphy explained.

"The last of the PSA people will be gone after this year, which isn't necessarily bad," he reasoned. "The SGA requires change to function correctly. I'd like to believe the PSA was an effective slate during its time."

While Murphy and others will argue that there is not a party system within the SGA, it is easy to prove differently. Murphy, a self-acclaimed anarchist and a long-time member of the Radical Student Union, falls into a category which has been labeled "rads" or "progressive" by various SGA members.

He refers to the candidacy of Fran Hegeler and Siobhan Powers, true opponents of the Murphy line, as the "conservative tram" of the recent presidential elections. He even played a part in a whisper campaign which charged those two with red-baiting after the distribution of a leaflet which had a drawing of the Kremlin on its cover bearing the words "Student Union Building."

honorably. "I'm not trying to impress anyone by being nice to them but I'm not going out of my way to be mean to them either."

Murphy's current activities include seeking to have rent control implemented in Amherst as well as child care. He would like to see voter registration increase to a level where UMass can dictate a social change in town politics.

"It looks like there will be enough of our people elected to Town Meeting and will probably get rent control this year," he says with the hope that he will be one of those people elected to Town Meeting.

Murphy plans to return to Weymouth, his home town following this year but may return to study part-time. He enjoys spending time with his father, a Weymouth police officer, and his mother, an art teacher in the Weymouth public schools.

"I'm going to go home and hopefully play a few clubs and bars," says Murphy, who is a talented accoustic guitar player.

"But I'll just play the State Street T Station down on the Blue line in Boston, where I can play for people heading out to the race track or the airport,' he says. "It's a quiet station. The trains are spaced far enugh apart so you can get in a few songs before the train comes flying in and drowns everything out."

Jim Murphy seems like a comfortable man. He probably is.

Study reveals woodburning stoves produce carcinogens

By ABBY NEITERMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Wood burning stoves, a popular solution for keeping the home warm, may be doing so at the expense of clean air. Some of the same chemicals that produce carcinogens in cigarette smoke are produced in wood-burning smoke, said Professor Salvatore Dinardi of the School of Public Health at the University of Massachusetts.

Dinardi has recently conducted studies on woodburningstoves and their effects. He attributes the production of carcinogens to two reasons--woodburning stoves burn at a low temperature, and they do not burn with an adequate amount of oxygen.

There are 1000 to 2000 woodburning stoves in the Amherst area which burn approximately three cords of wood annually, Dinardi said. These stoves produce about 100 pounds of carcinogens a year, he said.

"There is a problem, it has the potential to be harmful," Dinardi said. "It takes everyone collectively to put the heat on the State Government. There is a real danger in using woodburning stoves, especially for the very young, the very old and the unhealthy," he said. "But before the health effects can be determined, research must be conducted and woodstoves monitored."

Until then, Dinardi's findings will not effect woodburning stoves as a source of heat.

"Nothing will change, people will still use them," he said. "I believe that people will not take my concerns seriously, but it has the same potential danger as smoking cigarettes."

If people are going to continue to use their woodburning stoves they can decrease the danger if they use them correctly and cautiously. Use woodstoves moderately, and don't burn wet wood, Dinardi suggested.

Before consumers take any precautions they must be educated, and aware of the dangers. Dinardi said "At this time those are the only feasible solutions to the problem."

Perhaps a future solution would be to get the manufacturers to redesign the stove, but to accomplish this all manufacturers would have to be involved, he said.

Although manufacturers have expressed their concerns they probably will not take any action until more evidence can be found and more extensive research is completed, he said.

"Without this research no one will ever know how dangerous woodburning smoke is until perhaps it is too late," he said.

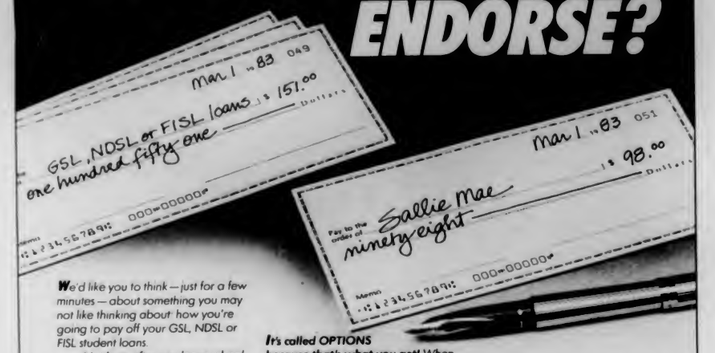
WHICH STUDENT LOAN PAYMENT WILL YOU ENDORSE?



We'd like you to think — just for a few minutes — about something you may not like thinking about: how you're going to pay off your GSL, NDSL or FISL student loans.

Not long after you leave school, you'll have to start making student loan payments. Right now, you may have no idea how much you'll have to pay every month, but it may be more than you will be able to pay. Particularly when you consider that your income will probably be lower at that point than it will ever be again.

Now, for the good news. There's a way for you to reduce those student loan payments dramatically — by up to 50% — in a unique program called OPTIONS.

Loan Category	Typical Old Payment	Typical OPTIONS Payment
$5,001-$7,500	$ 96.00	$ 58.00
$7,501-$11,000	122.00	72.00
$11,001-$15,999	166.00	96.00
$16,000-or more	214.00	123.00

First, figure out how much you'll owe. Do a little mental arithmetic to see how much you're going to owe in GSL, NDSL or FISL loans. Find the closest total on the chart. The next column shows the approximate amount you'll be paying every month. In the last column, you'll see the average OPTIONS payment you could make instead.

It's called OPTIONS because that's what you get! When most lenders set up your payback schedule, they won't ask you how you'd like to do it. They'll just tell you how it's going to be. Period.

OPTIONS is different. With OPTIONS, you decide within broad guidelines what your payments will be, and how long you'll pay.

After you pick your own payment plan, Sallie Mae pays off your existing GSL, NDSL and FISL loans and creates one new, 7%-interest, guaranteed student loan with no prepayment penalty. Working with you, we draw up a payback schedule you can live with, based on one of 3 basic OPTIONS.

OPTION 1 lets you extend the payback period and make lower, unchanging payments.

OPTION 2 also gives you more time, but features payments that start out very low and then gradually rise — like your income. OPTION 3 gives you graduated payments too, but lets you pay the loan off faster.

Learn more about OPTIONS now, so you'll be prepared when the time comes. We urge you to start planning now for that day when you endorse that first student loan payment.

Sallie Mae — a private corporation chartered by act of Congress in 1972 to make it easier for lenders to provide student loans — is now authorized to make student loans easier to pay off.

Ask your school's financial aid office about Sallie Mae and its OPTIONS program. Or, for a free brochure, fill out and return the coupon.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

El Salvador still struggles

(Editor's note — This is the third in a three-part series examining U.S. foreign policy in C. America. The third part was ommitted on Friday because of the Collegian's special April Fool's edition. We regret any inconvenience this may have caused.

On October 15, 1979 an important revolution occurred in El Salvador. Instigated by the middle level of the officer corp its first act was to expell ⅔ of the senior officers from the army. The new revolutionary government was supported by a wide political spectrum including Guilermo Ungo, head of the 600 member Social Democratic Party, as well as several prominent communists, while it totally excluded the now infamous "14 families." By March of 1980 the new revolutionary government had nationalized all banks and export companies and had confiscated 250 large estates and given 160,000 peasant families ownership of the land they had tilled. To most people this would seem a healthy beginning, however, it was around this time that El Salvador's current troubles began.

Katherine Curda

Members of the old ruling class went into exile in Miami, using their wealth to organize death squads to assassinate those supporting the new government. It also tried unsuccessfully to organize military coups against the new government, all three of which failed. At the same time several radical Salvadoran political groups met in Havana and, with Castro's help, agreed to form what was to become the FMLN, in order to fight the new government from the left. Thus, the new revolutionary government found itself buffeted by both the left and the right, with no end in sight. Since January 1980 over 20,000 Salvadorans and others have died in the violence. Some of the deaths were explosive, such as the murder of the four American nuns, while others are quiet; perhaps a villager who would not contribute to the rebel's cause. Blood is blood and death is death, and America is now struggling with itself over how to put an end to the suffering of this tiny nation.

As I look at the situation, there seems to be three possible solutions. The first is the easiest. All we have to do is abandon our support of the government of President Alvaro Magana to the rebels. Many protesters would like to see a rebel victory, for they feel the rebels are supported by the people. Yet, if this is so, why did none of the people respond when the rebels called for general strikes in May, August and September of 1980? It was certainly more dangerous for the people of Poland, yet they, unlike the Salvadorans, felt the need far outweighed the risks. In January of 1981 the FMLN fielded a well-armed force of 5-6,000 troops as they launched their "final offensive" which failed, most notably due to total lack of support from the people. On March 28, 1982, 80% of the electorate braved guerilla threats and bullets to vote in El Salvador's first real election. Many here in the U.S. were upset that the right won more than expected, but nevertheless, El Salvador's election was real and fair, while the world is still waiting for elections in Cuba, Vietnam and Nicaragua.

Another solution would be to negotiate with the guerillas and form a united front. The revolution in Nicaragua was settled by negotiations in 1979 in which the Marxist Sandinistas agreed to share power with the moderates. Yet, from the beginning, it failed. Moderates have either been forced out of office or they quit in frustration. According to Jose Ruiz, a member of the rebel's directorate, "There are parts of Ho Chi Mihn, parts of Mao, and parts of Kim Il Sung that appeal to us." Perhaps a united front with the rebels would work, but none of the leaders the rebels profess to admire ever allowed democracy in their countries.

Thus we come to the third solution for El Salvador's dilemma. The U.S. must simultaneously support the present government as it inchs its way toward democracy, while at the same aiding it in its struggle against the violence from the left and the right. The government is presently continuing land and social reform perhaps at a slower pace, but it continues nontheless. The guerillas, on the other hand, have disrupted power supplies, blown up factories, destroyed power plants, blasted commuter buses, burned crops and commandeered food supplies. How these actions help the people is very difficult to fathom.

Democracy is a fragile flower which needs both time and care to blossom, and it is rarely known to flourish during a war. It cannot be created by proclamation, but rather it must be built into the systen.. Only by helping to create strong, independent institutions in such areas as business, politics and society, will the U.S. create in El Salvador a formula for lasting peace. The struggle toward true political freedom and pluralism in El Salvador will be a tough and at times unpleasant job. Yet this solution is far more realistic than the cries of those who put their trust in the left-wing revolutionaries. Slogans do not build Democracy, patience and hard work does.

Smoke-Out—give your lungs a break

Four years of strict field study has led me to the conclusion that there are several sure-fire methods of escape from the perennial mind-numbing lecture.

Tapping your fingers to the beat of your favorite Genesis tune, writing letters for the sole purpose of relieving social obligations, avoiding eye contact with the professor while soliciting that same contact from the newly noticed classmate you think you love based on an entire seven minutes of careful observation — these are what I call "classic" measures and are as effective as nothing short of staging a rude and deliberately disruptive exit.

These means of eliminating boredom and stamping out the dreaded pie-eye are second to none in their field of endeavor, but will serve no practical purpose here. This is because I am not here to spend my time pumping out stagnant lectures. I'm here to promote a cause, and a devastatingly important cause at that.

Now hold on a minute, don't turn to the sports section yet (they probably lost anyway). I still don't have to tell you a few more things. For example, you don't need to be told that 77 million work days are lost and 88 million days are spent in bed each year due to smoking. If not of yourself, then think of others who don't have to tell you that one day spent in an office with a smoker is equivalent to smoking ten cigarettes.

Finally, I am absolutely positive I don't have to tell you that pregnant women who smoke, and just happen to be carrying around highly impressionable bundles of joy that can only live off what mother supplies, tend to have lower than average birth rates in relation to non-smoking women.

So much for the lecture that never was. You may now remove the toothpicks from your eyes. The point I am trying to put across is that smoking, however socially or physically pleasing it may be to some people, is not worth both the immediate financial costs and the highly potential physical costs. It's disturbing to think how most Americans are "processed" in a society which promotes a "more, more, more...now, now, now" attitude toward life. The problem here is that the more, more, more smoke you filter through your lungs now, now, now, the worse off you're going to be down the road when the returns begin to diminish and there's nothing but uphill battles on all fronts.

On April 20, there will be a campus-wide "Smoke-Out" sponsored by the American Cancer Society, the American Lung Association, and a small group of concerned students. Why not give your lungs a break for the day? If you would like to quit smoking, stop by the table in the Campus Center for some great hints and information. Come on with us... jump on the wagon and hold on for dear life because the road will only get rougher.

U.S. — hands off El Salvador

To the Editor:

In her recent column, Kathering Curda initially grasps a truth when she says thet Salvador protesters want an end to U.S. intervention. Then in the most "balanced" fashion possible, she goes on to argue about what the Salvardorans want, which is an entirely different matter.

I am sure that Salvadorans want an end to war. Whether they would prefer a government by the guerillas, who (by recent eyewitness account) set up clinics and schools and feed their prisoners or by the National Guard leadership, who (also by eyewitness account) skin prisoners alive, massacre villages, and napalm civilians, is perhaps open to debate. I haven't been there and I don't know for sure.

But what Salvadorans want is their own business. I'm a taxpaying U.S. citizen, and I know what I want. I want my government to get the hell out of El Salvador and out of Central America. I want my money spent on the 20-30 percent of people who live below the poverty level in Boston, or Chicago, or Cleveland, not to line the pockets of rich nazi friends of Jean Kirkpatrick. Whether our approach is "balanced" or not, El Salvador and Nicaragua are none of our Yanqui business.

Sleeping around not funny

To the Editor:

This is a letter in response to an editorial written by Lise Zeiger, that appeared in the UMass Collegian 3-31-83.

Whether or not "sleeping around" is a timeless tradition (at UMass) that deserves more attention than it is getting," is true or not, the fact that such an editorial, written on the basis of insinuation that borders on the libelous is printed in the Collegian, is something deserving of more attention than it is getting.

Co-educational living has been a touchy subject at UMass for a long time, culminating in the co-ed bathroom issue in 1981. Zeiger's editorial, without the use of fact or verifiable evidence, only succeeds in making a complex issue more complex. It was irresponsibly written, and more irresponsibly cleared by the Collegian's editors.

Briefly, here are some of the students, as described by Zeiger, accused of "sleeping around.": Bleary eyed sophomores groping their way at six a.m. up Orchard Hill to their rooms in Webster, a half of the third floor of Leach Dormitory who "wonder when they can return to their own beds," a freshman stranded at JQA, women who study with their boyfriends, all RAs, women who live in Brett dormitory, and the assertion that "every dorm sleeps around."

Where did Zeiger accumulate the facts (or lack of them) reported in the editorial? Is the author able to read the minds of those "bleary eyed sophomores," at Orchard Hill? If not, the assertion that they have been "sleeping around" does not hold much weight, nor do any of Zeiger's other assertions.

Sexuality and co-habitation are issues that must be explored rationally and with respect to personal preference and privacy. An editorial such as Zeiger's only promotes ignorance, apprehension and resentment among both students and parents. It hurts a lot of people, but hurts no one as much as the editors of the Collegian who allowed it to appear.

BOG member clarifies quotes

To the Editor:

I would like to clear up a misunderstanding as to what I actually said in an interview which appeared in the Collegian concerning the University Store's takeover of the coffee shop (March 30). I was quoted as saying that I thought the proposal was a good idea because I don't use the coffee shop: this is not true. I admit the proposal has its good points and I admit a closing of the coffee shop wouldn't affect me as it would other students. However this is exactly why we at the Board of Governors have drawn up a questionnaire concerning this issue. The BOG is interested in learning the opinions of the students, staff, and faculty who patronize the coffee shop as they are the ones to be affected. The questionnaire can be found in the coffee shop as well as other areas in the Campus Center starting Monday, April 4. Anyone who wishes to pursue the matter further should contact the BOG. I apologize to the reporter for not being a little clearer on exactly what I was trying to say.

Leaving less to the imagination

By PAM MADNICK

Have you ever listened to Mystery Theater on the radio? How does the experience in which you involve yourself in listening to that program compare to seeing a play, performed live in a theater? Is one more believable? Is one more professional?

Since its debut on public radio, WICN, the Blackbird Portable Theater has to deal with questions like these twice a month for five years. Blackbird is devoted to giving the local writers a chance to have their plays produced. Blackbird has worked with comedy, historical drama, docu-drama, science fiction and other forms of theater. Radio theater "leaves less to the imagination," according to actor, director

To Pettibone this type of theater is the most challenging because actors arrive the night of the performance and are given a practice. Actors are expected to perform live on the air. In some ways, it's like going to audition for a play because oftentimes actors are given cold readings.
actors are given cold readings.

"When we began, we tried to emulate the spooky shows on PB (Public Broadcasting)," producer William Gagnon said.

When Gagnon and company were searching for a radio station to produce radio plays, they were concerned about being censored. WICN, a national radio affiliate, gave the group complete creative control.

There are problems with the status of this radio theater group because it is not recognized by the rest of the theater community in Worcester. As Gagnon puts it, theater critics see it as "a little radio project." Because it is viewed in this light, Blackbird is not critiqued in theater reviews found in area newspapers, making it difficult for people to find out about the show.

"The attitude is, if you don't pay for it, it isn't theater," Gagnon explained.

To Gagnon, not paying for theater is a plus. "You have an audience that doesn't have to pay to see you and you go right into their homes, unlike other theater companies."

Until last year, the program was reaching people between the ages of 35-50 and the very young, under 10 years old. Since last year, there has been a heavy teenage audience, which Gagnon said is "strange seeing that we're on 9-10 p.m. on Saturday." He said teens don't usually call in about plays, but call to comment on the improvisations that Blackbird performs several times a year.

The Blackbird Theater has also worked with video on cable channel 13 in Worcester, before the station went out of business following a federal aid cut. Nine plays and various talk shows interviewing people from the arts community were produced at the Channel 13 studios.

"It was a lot of fun. There was more rehearsal involved. Actors had to memorize scripts," said Gagnon. "We're not quite as dedicated to doing that as radio or video because that's where the real challenge is," Gagnon said. "It's a great release for the people involved. We all get along so well, probably because it is so small, so intimate. We know each other pretty well," Gagnon said.

In the radio situation, actors read with their scripts. And because radio is heard not seen, the only props needed are sound effects.

None of the company members are paid. People perform to have fun or they don't perform. What financial aid the group does receive comes from privaate and public agencies. Blackbird has been underwritten by Wyman-Gordon for $1,000, which will keep the show going for an extra six months. They also receive grants from the Massachusetts Council for the Arts. Blackbird has not been effected by the federal cutbacks that have been wiping out many of the smaller theater groups in the Worcester and Amherst areas.

Much of the aid Blackbird receives is in the form of volunteer labor from their host station, WICN in Worcester. Blackbird has access to the equipment and the station technician's, yet maintains complete creative control.

Blackbird has one major responsibility to the station to remain on the station's public airwaves: to raise enough money to pay for the show. Each year there is at least one pledge drive.

Blackbird airs twice a month on WICN (located in Worcester) during the first and last Saturday of every month from 9 p.m. to 10 p.m. Shows are done live.

THE RAMONES
Thursday, March 31
Student Union Ballroom

By LISA MOSLEY
Collegian Staff

An experiment especially for those who are indifferent to the Ramones:

Pick up any Ramones' album and give it a listen. Then decide if you like it, dislike it. Now listen to another Ramones' album — any one will do. I guarantee that your opinion won't change. In fact, listening to two more, three more, — whatever — won't do the trick, because the Ramones' sound is unchanging. Call it classic, like a Kelly green fair isle sweater, if you will.

Their performances don't change all that much from one club to another, one year to another, either.

How can you possibly, then, review a band whose stage show never changes in format and rarely changes in content? How do you discuss progressions and innovations that just don't exist? The answer is you don't.

The only way to judge the quality of a Ramones' concert is to compare it with past performances. In this respect, the boys from NY City put on a superb show Thursday night at the Student Union Ballroom.

From the moment they took to the stage, on the heels of the strains of "The Good, The Bad, and The Ugly" (how appropriate), the Ramones gave the small but fervered crowd what it had been waiting almost two months for.

A strong Teenage Lobotomy kicked off the better part of an hour's worth of that fast, punchy, rough edged sound that Ramones' fans have come to love. Anthems like "Rockaway Beach", "Creatin Hop", and a very much speeded up "Sheena is a Punk Rocker" were delivered with a higher level of energy than I've seen from this band in the recent past.

They plowed through these numbers the last couple of times I caught their act. This time, each number, though still separated from its predecessor by nothing but a quick "onetwothreefour!!" seemed to exist on its own.

This can be partially explained by the replacement of drummer Marky by a relatively unknown veteran of Velveteen and the Shirts named Ritchie. (Sorry — no surname available. Loss of identity seems a small price to pay for the privilege of becoming a walk-on living legend). Ritchie's by far the best drummer to play with the band (Tommy and Marky were the two previous percussionist extraordinaires), and his hard driving beat never wavered Thursday night.

The band didn't stick only with the tried and true classics, but also played material from their just released Sire album, Subterranean Jungle, including that album's best cut, a cover of "Little Bit of Soul".

It's hard to say how long the Ramones will go on like this. Rumor has it that after the next album is released in the spring of '84 it'll be all over, and the garage band that changed the shape of rock and roll will cease to be.

I find this rather difficult to accept. After all, when I saw Rock and Roll High School at the age of sixteen, it changed my life. But, we shall have to wait and see.

Opening for the Ramones was Shrapnel, Joey Ramones favorite up and coming band. Gosh Joey, I worship the ground you drool on, but I have to differ with you. Sure, they were loud and fast, but they weren't much else. Enough said.

MIDNIGHT RAMBLE (MILESTONE)
Hank Crawford

By DAVID CHEVAN
Collegian Staff

The room is dimly lit, the air is thick with smoke, the rug exudes the distinct smell of too many spilled beers, and on stage the sax player, wearing a pair of sunglasses, and dressed in black, steps up to the microphone, puts the horn to his lips. . . and blows. And blows, and blows. And all you can do is hope the damn shivers running up and down your spine will stop already.

Okay, so the scenario is cliched, you've heard it all before. Yeah, but has it ever really happened? Have you ever heard a sax player so dirty bluesy that the notes hit you that way?

Some of the newer sax players, like David Sanborn, often get that true, but few of today's young players grew up while performing in the given scenario. Hank Crawford is one of those few. Crawford's played with some of the bluesiest of the Memphis players. He's backed B.B. King, Bobby Bland, and for five years worked with Mr. Soul himself, Ray Charles.

Midnight Ramble, an apt title for this kind of music is a return to roots album for Crawford. His recent work has focused more on the jazz side of his playing. But Crawford has realized, as so many players do when they get older, that it is good to look back once in a while, even as you forge ahead. He carefully chose his sidemen for this project, using some of the hottest R&B musicians you could ever hope to find. On guitar is Calvin Newborne, a Memphis blues player with a clean but rocking sound. Newborne is better known around the Memphis area than in the national scene, but hopefully his appearance on the album will give him the notice he deserves. The rhythm section consists of Charles Greene, Crawford's longtime bass man, and studio whiz, Bernard Purdie on drums. To complete the basic unit Crawford enlisted the nimble fingers of Mac Rebennack's favorite alter ego, Dr. John.

The band swings, shuffles, and then cruises through seven songs in tight but bar-band fashion. The G'Jays' "Forever Mine", gets the classic blues ballad treatment in a manner that only Crawford could give it, but the real stand out is the closing cut, an old traditional gospel number, "Deep River". The band seems to have reached right into the gut for this piece as the song slowly and sacredly grabs you. Other songs include a hot Basie rendition, and the title track, "Midnight Ramble", an altered blues arrangement featuring Crawford at his wailingest.

So, if you can't find a bar with the kind of sound you like, put this record on the turntable, turn down the lights, and close your eyes. Can't you picture it, over there at the mike, the horn is blowing and the band is swaying in time to the music . . .

More than any other current popular musical form, jazz is performance oriented art. Unlike rock music, which is often the end result of hundreds of studio overdubs, jazz music is the result of immediate and unrehearsed combinations of sounds occurring when several musicians play together. Therefore, it is not surprising that much of the best jazz music ever recorded comes from live settings. Two such albums have been recently released by Dreamstreet, a small New Jersey based record company.

Lou Stein is a pianist whose performing days go back as far as Charlie Parker. Though he has few albums of his own, the roster of people he's backed is enormous. On Live at the Dome, Stein is accompanied by bassist Bob Haggart and drummer Butch Miles. Most of the material on the album consists of old standards like "My Funny Valentine," and "Take the 'A' Train," but Stein's playing turns these Chestnuts into dynamic, cruising numbers. One song,"Pow!", a Stein original, gets so frenzied the crowd starts cheering the band along. The trio format gives the players extra soloing room, especially since most of the tunes clock in at around five minutes. Especially good are Butch Mile's drum licks on "'A' Train."

Glenn Zottola is one of those musicians who could not stop after he'd learned to play just one instrument. Zottola is not only an accomplished flugelhorn and trumpet player, he is also a critically acclaimed master of the saxophone. Zottola's Live at Eddie Condon's, gives him ample opportunity to show off all his chops, and on "My Little Suede Shoes," an old Charlie Parker number, proves not only that he can play sax well, but that he is no clone. He uses a warmer, cleaner tone than most players use for Parker material, and it works well. Al Klink plays tenor sax with enormous grace on this album; the interplay between Zottola and Klink is very strong. On "Easy to Love," the two players take turns blowing the melody while the other solos in and out and around the lead line.

Zottola's rhythm section is anything but a group of shirkers. Harold Dankio, of the Thad Jones/Mel Lewis Big Band carries the keys while Linc Milliman and Al Harewood play bass and drums respectively. Dreamstreet Records is a very small label and their material is often unavailable in record stores. If you are interested in either of these albums or obtaining their catalogue, your best bet would be to write to them at this address; DREAMSTREET RECORDS, P.O. Box 193, HolloKus, N.J., 07423.

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts softball team and Rutgers University are two similar teams. They are both scrappers, battlers and teams that don't know the meaning of the word quit or defeated.

This was evident as the two Atlantic 10 rivals split a doubleheader at NOPE on Saturday afternoon. UMass came from behind to take the first game, 3-2, while the Scarlet Knights overcame another UMass comeback to take the second game, 5-4.

"They were both great games to watch," said UMass head coach Elaine Sortino. "We were really tight in the first game and I was pleased to see that we came back."

Through the first five innings of the opener, UMass' only offense output were bunts that Jackie Gaw and Tina Coffin beat out. Rutgers on the other hand scrambled for two runs in the second and pitcher Lisa Murray was cruising along, keeping UMass at bay.

The cruise ended for Rutgers in the bottom of the sixth when UMass pounded out five hits, good for three runs. Allyson Rioux led off with a single, moved to second on a Missy Oman bunt Oman beat out and scored on a Gaw single. Beth Talbott singled, beating the throw from third, and Sally Maher doubled to drive in Gaw. Talbott scored moments later on a Rutgers error.

Cathy Reed, a freshman, picked up her seventh win in eight starts. Gaw led the Minutewomen offense with two singles and a RBI.

In the second game, it was more wide open as both sides rapped out hits. Rutgers jumped out ahead right away with a Robin Powell two RBI double off of Lynn Stockley in the first and led 4-1 after three innings.

After Rioux doubled in the third and Coffin sacrificed her over to second, Gaw knocked the junior shortstop in.

In the fourth, the Minutewomen came alive with some clutch hitting. Maher, Chris Coughlin, Mary Ann Lombardi and Gaw all singled and due to some Rutgers errors and some alert baserunning, UMass picked up three runs. A possible fourth run was lost when Lombardi was tagged out in a rundown between home and third to end the inning.

The next inning, Rutgers loaded the bases. Reed had come on in relief and Sue Recher loaded the bases thanks to another UMass error. However, Reed worked her way out of the inning.

Rutgers pounded out three consecutive singles in the sixth and took the one run lead. UMass, who left nine on the basepaths, could not muster up the tying run.

The closest UM came was when Maher reached third base in the bottom of the seventh. Maher went 3 for 4 in the

"They are one of the toughest teams around," said Sortino. "We have to keep hitting to win. We almost did it in the second game, we just ended up a little short."

With the split, UMass moves to 10-3 while Rutgers is now 7-4. Stockley took the loss in the second game to drop to 3-2.

Coughlin went 2 for 4 (2 singles) and Gaw had another great game going 2 for 4 and throwing one runner out.

UMass takes on Keene State tomorrow in another doubleheader at NOPE. Gametime is at 2 p.m.

Gorillas march through Hobart, 11-4

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

The estimated crowd of 5000 Gorilla observers watched on this sundrenched Saturday afternoon, and some couldn't believe what they were witnessing.

In the midst of the second period 6-2 scoring spree by the University of Massachusetts lacrosse team, which gave them a 8-3 halftime lead and iced a 11-4 win over Division III national champ Hobart, a voice seeped through the crowd, offering an opinion to nobody in particular.

"I can't believe this team (Hobart) beat North Carolina," the voice said. "They look like they don't know what they're doing."

Indeed, Hobart handed two-time defending national champ North Carolina their first loss in three years, 12-9 a few short weeks ago, and didn't play like national champs, but scores can be deceiving.

"North Carolina played run and gun with them and got burned," explained Garber. "I didn't think we could run with them for 60 minutes. If we did the score might have been 15-12 either way. We played super well."

What the voice didn't realize was Hobart knew what they were doing, but a hard-hitting defense and a relentless Gorilla attack made it impossible for Hobart to get into any kind of team rhythm.

"I didn't expect that," smiled Garber, after watching his team, ranked 11th in the nation, play the season opener in mid-season form. "You work on things in practice but you never expect them to work so well in the game."

After falling behind early ("We always give up the first goal" Garber) UMass came right back with goals by Tim Cutler and Peter Martino.

In the second period, sophomore attack Mike Fiorini, unveiling several twisting offensive moves, scored twice. Freshman Greg Fisk, Chris Schmitz, Paul Fogarty, and Rich Messina also scored, as UMass dominated second period action and took the game away from Hobart.

Messina struck from directly in front after Karl Hatton made a nice rush, fed Fogarty on the right side, who gave Messina a nice feed in the middle and the senior middle drilled home his first goal of the year.

Fisk, who played the entire game on attack in his first game as a Gorilla scored next, scooping up a loose ball after some tough work by Schmitz in front of the net and hitting right corner, to give UMass a 4-1 lead.

Hobart's Marty Wood brought his team as close as they would come when he scored at 11:44 of the second period to pull Hobart within 4-2.

UMass came right back. Cutler made a few nice moves and hit Schmitz in front of the net and the senior midfielder wheeled and fired past Van Arsdale from about 15 feet away to give UMass a 5-2 lead.

Fogarty pushed the lead to 6-2 when he took a pass from Tom Aldrich on a 2 on 1 and his shot was deflected high by Van Arsdale, but Fogarty went up and swatted the rebound home.

More hard work by Schmitz set up the next Gorilla goal. Schmitz was leveled at midfield after scooping up a loose ball but still got a pass away to Fisk who found Fiorini on the left side and the sophomore knocked home his second goal.

The second half had much less offense, but at times was more entertaining than the first half.

Defenseman Brad Broadwell continually buried Hobart attack Marty Wood in the left corner, much to the delight of the Gorilla faithful, who sat no more than ten feet from the action.

Defensemen John Mincone and Barry Cain delivered a couple of bone crunching hits themselves, with Mincone really putting the sting on Hobart's Tim Grimaldi, who had to leave the game after meeting head to head with Mincone.

One play that exemplifies the benefits of hard hitting was a second period hit by Schmitz on Hobart's John Endie. After Schmitz's hit knocked Endie's helmet completely off, Schmitz picked up the loose ball, scooped to Fiorini, who hit Karl Hatton at the right point but Hobart goalie Van Arsdale caught the Hatton's screamer from twenty feet.

"We're not really a hitting team," insisted Garber, who would have a hard time convincing Endie and Grimaldi of the validity of that statement.

"We don't teach much hitting. For a non-hitting team, that's a hell of a game," Garber admitted.

When late game slashing by Hobart was over, and the whistle blew insuring the 11-4 Gorilla win, coach Garber could only smile, and think about what had just occurred.

"I really didn't expect this."

Maine Black Bears take two from Minutemen

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

Former Chicago Cub great Ernie Banks would have said:

"It's a wonderful day for baseball, let's play two."

That is what the University of Massachusetts and Maine did Saturday at Earl Lorden Field, with the visiting Black Bears winning both games from the Minutemen, 5-0 in seven innings and 8-4 in extra innings.

UMass knew it would be an offensive struggle in the first game, facing Maine ace Bill Swift, one of the top college players in the country.

The Minutemen did nothing to tarnish Swift's reputation, as the Black Bear star zipped through the UMass order, using his sinking fastball, (which numerous scouts at the game timed in the vicinity of 87 miles per hour), and tantalizing slider to retire the majority of UMass batters on ineffectual grounders or strikeouts.

The only serious Minuteman threat occurred in the sixth inning when Andy Connors and Steve Messina both singled to start the inning. However, a fielder's choice and double play ended the threat.

Swift's counterpart, UMass pitcher Tony Presnal, after a rocky start, pitched a commendable game himself.

After escaping a bases loaded jam in the first, Presnal gave up a run in each of the next two innings before settling down.

With the exception of an unearned run in the sixth for the Black Bears, no one scored until Maine's Bill Reynolds reached Presnal for a two-run home run to close out the scoring.

With his three-hit shutout, Swift upped his record to 3-2, while the loss left Presnal at 1-1.

"The main thing is control, and Swift had it today (Swift issued only two walks while striking out six). He pitched his usual steady game," commented Maine coach John Winkin.

"Our hitters spent the game in awe of him (Swift)," lamented UMass coach Dick Bergquist.

Though it took awhile, the Minuteman offense finally started to hit and score runs halfway through the nightcap, to turn what had been a ho hum game into the most exciting contest of the young season.

After Maine second baseman Jeff Paul had driven in two runs to stake the Black Bears to a 3-0 lead after three innings, UMass got one back in the fourth when Connors, after a long single by Messina had loaded the bases, scored on a Dean Bennett grounder.

In the next inning, UMass knotted the score on a towering homer by Chris Waszczuk, which scored Todd Comeau, who had singled off of Maine starter Stu Lacognata.

The tie lasted until the seventh (double-headers are only seven innings long), when Maine's designated hitter, Dick Whitten, singled off of UMass starter, freshman Bob Kostro, to drive in pinch hitter Fred Staples, who had singled and survived a UMass double play attempt.

Down 4-3 with one out remaining, things looked dim for the Minutemen. But catcher Todd Ezold drew a walk and then shortstop triple. Connors left Salustri stranded at third and the game entered extra innings. third and the game entered extra-innings.

In the top of the eighth, Maine's Kevin Bernier reached base on a Bennett error and Paul lined a single. After Bergquist had a conference with Kostro, Maine career home run king Brad Colton added another one to his total. His three-run shot gave Maine a 7-4 lead, the eventual 8-4 victory, and made Colton Maine's career RBI leader with 106.

John Kowalski, in relief of Lacognata, retired the Minutemen without any trouble to pick up the win. He is now 1-1, while Kostro fell to 0-2.

"Give Colton credit. We had been getting him out with curveballs, but he took a good curveball and hit it out of here," explained Bergquist.

"I thought we should have won the second game. I was very pleased with Kostro. Both our pitchers did well. The team is a little down now after this tough loss and the one at Yale. I can talk to them but what we need is a win to pick us up."

Maine is now 9-12 while UMass, which plays at Holy Cross tomorrow afternoon at 3 p.m., is 2-9

Todd Ezold scores the tying run in the seventh inning of the second game against Maine. The Minutemen dropped the game 8-4 in extra innings and lost the first game 5-0.

Winning King Essay

Along with the Martin Luther King, Jr. Planning Committee, Nummo News would like to congratulate Russell Jordan on his poignant, first place essay.

We also would like to congratulate Robert Lynch on winning the Martin Luther King, Jr. poster contest.

By Russell Jordan

The following is an excerpt from the winning entry of the Martin Luther King, Jr. Essay Contest.

I was awed that a single black man could so alter a system of oppression that had been black people's lot in the South for so many tortured generations. I was singularly impressed that a black preacher from the South, with all the social strictures that the position implied, could touch the spirit of a long-suffering people in such a way that they would purposefully endure more directly the torments of institutional racism in the South.

I, like many, saw Martin Luther King as merely a civil rights leader, unknowingly pigeonholing the commitment and concern this noble and righteous man had for all humankind. During my research, I came to recognize the all-encompassing compassion that Dr. King had for all the people of the world who suffered under the yoke of oppression and injustice.

I have come to realize that the best and most effective praise that can be made of Martin Luther King does not lie in chronicling the events of his most extraordinary and short-lived life, but in emphasizing the beliefs he held and the solutions he had for a world where people live in peace and harmony rather than in strife and confrontation.

Above all, I learned that Martin Luther King, though he fought mightily for the uplifting of his own people in the United States, was a man whose concerns were not rooted simply in the advancement of his own people, but in exposing simply and graphically the subtleties of oppression as they exist worldwide.

The parallels between the state of this country and its world context at the time of Martin Luther King's assassination, and now, are striking and for those of us concerned, disheartening too.

Prior to his death Dr. King railed against the white backlash that followed the early gains of the civil rights movement. Racist attacks were on the rise, poignantly and tragically displayed by the murders of black and white civil rights workers in Mississippi.

Today we have a resurgence of the Ku Klux Klan, and the murders of two innocent black men at the hands of the police in Miami. We have a President who attempted to grant tax-exempt status to schools that practice racial discrimination, and who guts the tinuous footholds Blacks and other minorities have established in the workplace by nullifying Affirmative Action programs and rendering those agencies empowered to protect people from discrimination effectively powerless.

Also prior to Martin Luther King's death, he attacked the lackluster attitudes exhibited by Congress in addressing the problems of poverty and unemployment while spending money hand over fist for a war in Vietnam that Dr. King and much of the country saw as immoral.

Dr. King pointed out that in our efforts to "defend" the Vietnamese from communist aggression, this country supported one of the world's most brutal dictators, President Diem of South Vietnam.

Dr. King saw clearly that if the United States interests were as noble as claimed, they would not be siding with puppet dictatorships that exploited people, but rather with the people suffering under this exploitation.

Dr. King saw, where few others saw, that as long as the United States viewed the world through the myopic tunnel vision of East-West confrontation, it would be blinded to the real issues that motivated people to violent action.

Today we have a President who has slashed virtually every socially progressive program, from CETA job training centers to school lunch programs for economically deprived children. We have a President who is hastily divesting the government from direct responsibility for the welfare of its people, and with chilling deja vu instituting one of the most massive arms build-ups in America's peacetime history.

This same President seeks the tripling of the United States' military presence in El Salvador, and the granting of a military aid package for that country in excess of 100 million dollars.

Dr. King, a man passionately commited to non-violent social action, may have decried the methods of the guerilla fighters in that country, but, I feel he would have saved his strongest criticism for this country, which, once again, finds itself supporting another dictatorship; a dictatorship whose armed forces and supporters, even by United States estimates, is responsible for more civilian deaths that the guerilla forces it seeks to destroy.

These words by Martin Luther King ring echoingly true today as they did more than fifteen years ago:

"The United States is substantially challenged to demonstrate that it can abolish not only the evils of racism, but the scourge of poverty of Whites as well as Blacks and the horrors of war that transcend national borders and involve all mankind."

Rep. Louis Stokes: King Week Speaker

By Rahim Imani

As part of Martin Luther King Jr. Week, The Honorable Louis Stokes will be a guest speaker here at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst on Wednesday, April 6, 1983. Louis Stokes is the House Representative from the 21st District of Ohio in Cleveland.

Louis Stokes is one of the most prominent leaders in the Congressional legislative process. He was first elected to Congress on November 5, 1968 and became the first Black member of Congress from the State of Ohio. During his second term of office, he was appointed as the first Black member ever to sit on the Appropriations Committee of the House.

As a member of the Congressional Black Caucus he has been elected chairman twice. He is also the co-chairman of the Black Caucus' Health Brain Trust. In 1980 he was presented with the William L. Dawson Award by his colleagues in the Black Caucus in recognition of his unique leadership in the development of legislation.

In 1976 Stokes was appointed to serve on the Select Committee to conduct an investigation and study of the circumstances surrounding the death of President John F. Kennedy and the death of Martin Luther King, Jr. The next year he was appointed chairman of the committee. In 1978 he filed a 27 volume Final Report and recommendations for administrative and legislative reform with the House of Representatives.

Coming from a political family, Louis Stokes brother, Carl, who is now a journalist and news commentator, made history as the frist Black Mayor of a major American city when he was elected in the Stokes' hometown of Cleveland in 1967. His mother was the recipient of numerous awards, including Cleveland's Woman of the Year and Ohio's Mother of the Year awards.

Louis Stokes practiced law for 14 years before going into office an has participated in several U.S. Supreme Court cases. In 1968 he personally argued the landmark "stop and frisk" case of Terry vs. Ohio.

Rep. Stokes has been named by Ebony magazine as one of the 100 most influential Black Americans. Rep. Stokes has also been the recipient of seven honorary doctorate degrees. He has been awarded the Martin Luther King, Jr. Award in recognition of his significant and enduring achievements in government and dedication to the ideas that characterized the life of Dr. King which makes him the perfect speaker for MLK Week.

The lecture will be Wednesday night at 8:00 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium here at the University. It is free and open to the public. For more information call (413) 545-0341.

Perceptions of a Great Leader

By Donna Davis

As we begin our remembrance of Martin Luther King, Jr. we must ask ourselves, what makes a great leader of the people? What I have heard, read and learned about the greatest leaders tells me that they are untiring, self-less, shrewd and courageous people. Surely Kings' actions indicated that those adjectives, along with many others, described his attitude. He marched endlessly, gave of himself often, and made bold political maneuvers and always placed himself on the front line – with the people, not behind them.

He did many things for people of all races and never seemed to ask, "What am I going to get out of it?" When someone helps others and casts aside all selfish motivation he or she can only be respected. That is how King earned the support and devotion of a multitude of people. They knew that he cared about them so they reciprocated the affection.

But again we must ask, what makes a great leader? What makes a person deny him/herself most of the frivolous pleasures of life? What makes a person say I will only sleep 3-4 hours a day? I will give speeches, march, meet people to help others. I will sometimes neglect my family because I am securing the bread and butter of an even larger family – humanity. I will place myself directly in the line of fire. I will not be tempted by offers to trade my struggle for materialism. What makes a person say I will not give up until I have done all that I can, and I would do it again if given the chance? What makes a person do all these things and not once become embittered if his/her efforts are overlooked?

Do great leaders have illusions of grandeur? Do they imagine themselves to be God? I say no. They were realists looking through windows glazed with idealism. Without a realistic perception they would not have been agitated to bring about profound changes in their environments. The glazed windows show them a picture of what could be if. . .

What makes a great leader is the passionate desire to change the way things are, to the way they can be.

Draft Registration Requirement afflicts all students

Editorial by Angela Brown

It seems rather surprising that many students are not particularly worried about the Solomon Amendment. Much of the silence on the question can be attributed to the widespread confusion about the law, which requires that all draft-age men seeking federal student aid must provide proof of having registered with the Selective Service to receive such aid. This confusion has been caused by the many changes in, and problems of, the specific regulations related to the law. Many issues have been brought out by the Solomon Amendment. The fact that low-income men are targeted to enforce the law, rather than doing so by due process of law, and that colleges and universities are being used to enforce the law – often causing extreme administrative duress for college students and officials alike – are two important issues worth serious thought.

Currently, U.S. interventionist policies appear to be behind the military conflict in Nicaragua, and Reagan is promoting "Star Wars" military efforts, while attacking the peace movement now fighting back against the threat of nuclear annihilation. The Solomon Amendment is part of this political trend, which shows that Reagan's policies, heading to both a deepening economic crisis and an increaed threat of war, are interrelated. Now, students are being forced, directly, to comply with these policies.

But, the impact of the Solomon Amendment will be felt directly by only those students receiving federal financial aid. The most needy students have no recourse or alternative way to attend school, and, since people of color are disproportionately represented in the lowest income bracket in the U.S., students of color are especially targeted to comply with draft registration. A look back through history reveals that this is also part of the American pattern: people of color have been disproportionately used for cannon fodder up through the Vietnam War.

Martin Luther King, Jr. was among those who recognized that increased militarism, through the military build-up, is a primary cause of the economic hardships of America's poor. Funding for human services, such as student aid, is repeatedly cut, while the Pentagon is scheduled to receive over $2 trillion in the duration of Reagan's term in office. The Solomon Amendment is a clear cut case where those whose families are already victims of the economic crisis, (or of the ongoing economic problems built into the fabric of the U.S.) are being forced to comply with the war preparations.

One thing is clear, though: UMass students should all be concerned about such legislation that unduly ties up the administration.

Gandhi: The Man and the Movie

By Donna Davis

Gandhi was the subject of a three hour long movie. The film, starring Ben Kingsley, is up for numerous academy awards, in virtually every category. It has already won the award for best picture in England. The movie is about the spiritual and political career of a man that touched millions.

Mohandas K. Gandhi started out as an attorney. While traveling through South Africa he was thrown off a train because a European official said there were no Indian lawyers allowed in the region.

In the extremely racist, English-ruled regime of India, Gandhi began to defy imperialist oppression. He encouraged other Indians to resist the laws that subordinated them. The first law he assailed was the pass law, which required that non-whites carry identification at all times. As Gandhi set each pass aglow he was struck by a South African policeman until he fell unconscious.

The regime reacted to Gandhi's insolence by attempting to change the law. It required that Indians be fingerprinted. In court Gandhi completely rejected the new regulation.

Soon after, mounted South African police tried to trample Gandhi and his companions. An Indian ordered the entire party to lie down. Surprisingly, not one horse placed a hoof on the Indians. They reared up on their hind legs, nayed loudly and ignored the insistent spurs of their riders. Frustrated South African policemen were forced to retreat.

Upon arrival in Bombay, India in 1915, he resolved to end the tyranny that 100,000 Britains had unleashed upon 350 million Indians. Gandhi was warmly received as news of his triumphs preceded his arrival. The people loved him so much that they renamed him Mahatma - Great Soul. He further developed the principles of nonviolent resistance and discouraged all forms of violence.

He relentlessly sought ways to agitate the British into ineffective responses. Gandhi's actions were deliberate and targeted. In contrast, the British struck out blindly against a small brown man wearing a loincloth.

The frustration of British Authority culminated in the massacre and maiming of over 1,500 peacefully assembled Indians. Troops entered an enclosed arena and opened fire on every man, woman and child. The leader ordered gunmen to fire into "the thickest part of the crowd."

The massacre prompted a crusade of blood and bludgeoning as the Indians retaliated. Gandhi ordered an end to the violence. To him "an eye for an eye makes everyone blind." He fasted until all fighting stopped.

India's ensuing independence from Britain is credited to Mahatma Gandhi. The leader of India was imprisoned many times by officials, but the nonviolent resistance movement did not cease. Upon each release from confinement he immediately reimmersed himself in the struggle. As Britain became more entwined in World War II she could no longer squelch the roar of 350 million people.

Gandhi's miraculous achievements were marred only by the subsequent violence between the Hindu and Moslem sects. Indian pitted himself against Indian in a ghastly civil war. Again Gandhi sought to stop the fighting by beginning a fast that almost cost him his life. The fighting subsided as the people's love for him overcame the divisions amongst themselves. At temples throughout India they vowed to not harm one another.

Richard Attenborough's film of Gandhi's life will leave an indelible mark upon all viewers. The story is poignantly told. Ben Kingsley's performance is warm, sometimes funny and very persuasive.

The film is also important because it gives those with an interest in history a chance to see the birth of non-violent resistance. Students of the Civil Rights Movement will see how principles developed in the early 1900's were reapplied over 50 years later by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Black Musician's Conference dedicated to Thelonious Monk

By Keith W. Johnson

During the week of April 10-17 the 12th Annual Black Musician's Conference will take place here in the Five College area. The conference this year is dedicated to the living memory of Thelonious Sphere Monk and will include numerous events such as concerts, lectures, art exhibits and films. What is also important is that it will attract a number of Black Classical (Jazz) performers to the area.

The conference was founded a decade ago and began a unique tradition of bringing together musicians, educators, students, and the public in a celebration and exchange which moved beyond the conventinal concert setting. The purpose of the conference is to recognize the major contribution that Black Americans have made to American and world music on American life and contemporary thought.

But unlike many other music conferences, this conference deals with the perspective of Black Classical Music. Many people are not aware of the fact that this area is basically a haven for Black Classical Music. A number of some of the finest musicians have lived in this area, attending or teaching in the area schools. Billy Taylor and Max Roach received doctorates from UMass and Prof. Ray Copeland of Hampshire College and Prof. Archie Shepp of UMass are known the world over. Yusef Lateef and Marion Brown are both residents of the Valley.

The number of performers that come through the area annually would leave some jazz lovers speechless. Carmen McRae, Betty Carter, Sonny Rollins, Dizzy Gillespie, Ron Carter, and Miles Davis are but a few performers that have come to UMass in the last few years. Even during the summer there is the Hampshire Jazz Festival and the Bright Moments Series here at UMass. So it is no wonder that a conference such as this would come out of this area.

Highlights of this year's conference include concerts by Billy Taylor and the Springfield Orchestra, The Dexter Gordon Quartet, Marion Brown, Abby Lincoln, Ray Copeland and a gospel presentation by Horace Boyer and Herbert Smith. Visual artists exhibiting this year are Richard Yarde, Adger Cowans, Arturo Lindsay, James Phillips, and Ademola Olugebefola. There will be two panels, one exploring the relationship between music and painting involving the aforementioned artists, and a second, entitled "Perspectives on Black Music," which will bring together musicians Donald Byrd and Archie Shepp, with Jeff Anthony of the National Endowment for the Arts and Jazz educator, Warrick Carter.

Many events, except for the major concerts, are free and open to the public. The conference was organized by a committee of students, faculty and administrators. It should prove to be an educational experience as well as entertaining. I suggest that jazz lovers and those that are not into the music as much, should take advantage of as much of this fine program as possible. For a schedule of events and further information call (413) 545-0190.

Evelyn King Comes to UMass

By Keith W. Johnson

On Thursday, April 21, contemporary rhythm and blues returns to the Fine Arts Center here at the University of Massachusetts with a performance by RCA recording artist Evelyn King. The show will be produced by the Duke Ellington Committee and UPC Productions. It will also feature Soulsonic Force of "Planet Rock" fame.

Discovered while cleaning the recording studios of Philadelphia International, Evelyn King has come a long way since 1977. At that time she was 16, but had just released her first album, Smooth Talk. On that album the single "Shame" left a definite impression on the music world and turned Evelyn into a bonafied star.

Since then Evelyn has traveled around the world visiting such places as Europe, Chile, the Phillippines, Jamaica, and Canada. This included a White House performance in 1979 during President Carter's tribute to Black Music.

In between tours she has found time to cut five albums. Two of them, Smooth Talk and Music Box, became gold albums. Her recent album, Get Loose, has once again sent her to the top of the charts with the single "Love Come Down" making her the first female soloist to top Billboard's Black singles list twice in this decade.

With Evelyn's family background it is no wonder that she has become such a success. Her father, Erick King, was a stand-in performer at Harlem's historic Apollo Theater and was the choreographer who helped Buddy Holly in his unprecedented appearance as the first white rock & roll performer to play at the Apollo. Her uncle, Avon Long, who was the original "Sportin' Life" in Porky & Bess and was also in Broadway's Bubbling Brown Sugar, left a strong impression on Evelyn and the rest of the King children.

At times the family living room would be turned into a stage as the family would participate in the "The King Family Amateur Hour." Today all the members of the family are involved in the business. Evelyn's mother is now managing her five brothers and their own group, while her father is producing acts. Evelyn's sister Wanda, who used to travel with her as a background singer, is now on her own and is about to release her own album.

Evelyn King is one of those rare performers who you have the pleasure of seeing mature through the years. She is no longer a teenager, but a young woman. Although she still likes to do fast, upbeat music, her image and style are changing with her maturity.

Evelyn is right now at one of the highest points in her career and it is a pleasure to have her at the University. The show will begin at 8 p.m. and tickets will be available starting today at Ticketron, Union Records Unlimited, For the Record in Amherst, and the Fine Arts Center Box office.

The DuBois Corner King and the Montgomery Boycott

By Rahim Imani

On Thursday, December 1, 1955 a Montgomery City Lines bus passed by Court Square in Montgomery, Alabama headed for the Empire Theater stop. It was also headed into direct conflict. A conflict that would begin the elevation of a local clergyman named Martin Luther King, Jr. to one of the greatest leaders for peace in American history.

On the bus were 24 Negroes and 12 whites. As the bus received passengers at the next stop, the bus driver went toward the rear to tell the Negroes who were in their usual rear seats to remove themselves so that white people could sit down. A seamstress named Rosa Parks decided that she would not get up because she was tired from shopping and her feet hurt. Ms. Parks was arrested for violating a law that required passengers to follow the drivers seating assignments and was fined $10.

Overnight the news had spread through Montgomery and within two days leaflets were spread calling for an all out boycott of the buses. By the next Monday, Negroes were taking other means of going to work with many just walking. 90 percent of the Negro community supported the strike.

Two dozen ministers from the area came together to plan their demands, and organized the Montgomery Improvement Association (MIA). To avoid past feuds with old rival factions, a minister who was a newcomer to the area was selected as president. He was a 27 year old clergyman from the Dexter Ave. Baptist Church whose name was Martin Luther King, Jr.

With the leadership of King, the boycott would last well into 1956. They would raise, through the church and other meetings, large sums of money that would support the movement including a carpool system. The local courts would try to freeze these assets but King would outsmart them by placing them in numerous banks that were out of reach of the courts.

The police would harass King and other members of the movement. White terrorists would send prank phone calls to the home of King and other leaders. Churches and homes were bombed as Montgomery almost exploded into violent eruption. But it was the non-violent attitude of King that would prevail.

One day in 1956 while King and other MIA members were in court fighting an injunction against the MIA's carpool system, the news came of a U.S. Supreme court decision that declared bus segregation in Montgomery illegal. The boycott had been successful and the Negroes of Montgomery had won.

But what was even more important was that the movement had brought Martin Luther King, Jr. into the picture as a leader in the civil rights movement. In years to come he would go on to win other battles against segregation. He would go on to become one of the greatest Black leaders in history.

George Clinton's Games

By Richard Thorpe

George Clinton is at it again. The man who brought you "Aqua Boogie," "Flashlight," "One Nation Under a Groove," and "Knee Deep" is once again on, or near, postboxes, record stores and radio stations. Despite numerous setbacks, including a departure of several key members and a couple of lawsuits filed against him, George has nonetheless persisted. The entire current p-funk amalgamation is featured, replete with Sir Nose and George's unorthodox introduction to funk: the chorus.

From the beginning to the end of the album Clinton's genius shines through. The opening offering on side one entitled, "Get Dressed," is a parody of backstage life just before a concert: "We're the opening act, can't turn back, ya gits no mo', we git no encore!" This song features William 'Bootsy' Collins on bass and his arrangement of the Horny Horns, Fred Wesley, Maceo Parker, Larry Hatch and Richard Griffith. Next on this arcade concept lp is "Man's Best Friend." Sir Nose once again proves that he can be a nuisance simply by the virtue of his presence.

"Loopzilla" is a parody of New York's top radio stations and "Pot Sharing Tots" is a lyrical voyage of silliness with George taking reign at lead vocals.

If the record has any seriousness, it can be found on the second side. "Atomic Dog" is the album's slow-breaking smash hit and, after a couple of months, four different versions (one not available commercially) and ample air time, this little street ditty about romance is virtually George and company on a tour. What is so unusual about the song is it's heavy percussive hand-claps; they help this groove achieve a scratch sound. The rest of the album is primarily for listening. "Free Alternations" has a social consciousness," "One Fun at a Time" preaches the old adage anything in excess is bad, and "Computer Games," the title song, recreates the video game craze.

This album is about as good, if not better than, "Uncle Jam Wants You" and although there is no "Knee Deep" to speak of, everyone, whether or not they be hardcore Parliament-Funkadelic freaks or newly exposed, should enjoy "Computer Games." Expect a lot more to come from this genius of funk.

Asian Theater to hit UMass with a "Fever"

On Saturday, April 16th at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts/Amherst, the Third World Theater Series will close its 1983 Spring season with a dynamic and innovative presentation by the Pan Asian Repertory Theater entitled "Yellow Fever." "Yellow Fever," a mystery comedy, is written by Canadian playwright, Rick Shiomi.

"Yellow Fever" toys with the slick, suave character of Humphrey Bogart's Sam Spade and creates with a Pan Asian flair, a Canadian nisei (second generation Japanese) detective, Sam Shikaze. From Powell Street, Vancouver's Asian Ghetto, Sam seeks to solve the mystery of the kidnapped Cherry Blossom Queen while balancing his romantic life with reporter, Nancy Wing. Through comedy author Shiomi shows us the viscious attitudes of the Canadian majority towards its Asian minority population.

The Pan Asian Repertory Theater is a New York based Theatrical group which has established the first east coast professional Asian American Theater company. They have previously appeared at UMass in their touring productions of "Flowers of Household Gods" and "The Soul Shall Dance."

Each play is accompanied by a free workshop. On Saturday, April 16 from 1:30 - 3:00 at Smith College in the Green Room, Ernest Abuba of the Pan Asian Repertory Theater will conduct a workshop entitled, "Introduction to Asian-American Theater: Acting Workshop." All workshops are FREE!

Long Range Plan II opens to mixed campus reviews

By BILL WALL
Collegian Staff

The release of the new long-range plan for the University of Massachusetts has elicited varied responses from concerned faculty and student groups regarding the contents of the plan and the time allocated for its review and revision.

The overall plan was circulated to the campus community last week for the first time by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, although the academic affairs component was derived from work done by outgoing provost Loren Baritz and had been previously discussed on campus. The plan is to be considered for approval at the Board of Trustees' next meeting, April 13.

"There won't be adequate time (for campus groups do discuss it) before it goes to the regents," Duffey said.

But Duffey acknowledged that review and revision of the plan will be ongoing.

"I don't think it should be treated as a final draft. It stimulates discussion of the issues," Duffey said.

Bruce Levy, assistant to the president of the Student Government Association (SGA) said he was concerned with the short period of time available to review the plan before the Board of Trustees considers approving it at their upcoming April 13 meeting.

"We didn't even know it was being prepared until we happened to receive a copy on yesterday," Levy said.

Jim Murphy, former president of the SGA, expressed his disappointment with the lack of student involvement in the planning process.

"We had no input into it. It doesn't make any specific mention of student's roles in what this university is and does. You can't have a university operate without students having a role in it. It won't work," Murphy said.

Bryan Harvey, one of the members of Duffey's staff who worked on the plan, objected to the idea that once the plan goes to the regents, it won't be subject to modification.

"Any plans inherently change as circumstances change. As experience mounts, you are going to change your plan. One of the functions that the plan serves is to galvanize thought on pressing issues. It's supposed to focus thinking, not close it," Harvey said.

James Leheny, professor of English and a member of the Faculty Senate, said that the Rules Committee would consider the plan at its meeting Friday.

"The part that is of primary concern to the Faculty Senate is the Academic Affairs sections and that is something that the faculty has reviewed. There are other things we've seen for the first time that we haven't studied," Leheny said.

Jack Delmond, president of the Graduate Student Senate, said that his senate has a committee reviewing the plan and will report back to the Graduate Senate which is to review the plan at its meeting last night.

"In general it seems to be well-thought of and good, especially concerning graduate education. It recognizes the importance of graduate education to the University. The plan seems to be in the right direction," Delmond said.

The Graduate Senate had previously approved the Academic Affairs section in a vote taken last semester.

A copy of the plan is on reserve in the library.

Amherst voters to select town office candidates

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

Amherst voters will head for the polls today to choose candidates for numerous town offices, including The Board of Selectmen, town meeting, moderator, and Housing Authority.

Voters will also choose from approximately 180 candidates for the 98 available Town Meeting seats. (See related story.)

Voters will also select candidates for the Jones Library Trustee and School Committee.

Three candidates are running for the two available seats of the Board of Selectmen. Allen Torrey, and Joanne Levenson are challenging incumbent Frederick Steinbeck in the race.

Levenson, the Director of Off-campus Housing Office at UMass, said if elected she will support funding of child care and the institution of rent control.

Chairing the town's Fair Housing Commission, and membership in the League of Women Voters and the Condominium Conversion Commission are some of the activities that Levenson said will help her represent the Amherst community.

Lifelong Amherst resident Steinbeck said that although he voted against rent control at last year's Town Meeting, he is "not for or against it." Steinbeck first became involved in the town government when he was elected to the board one and a half years ago.

Torrey, Amherst's first town manager, has been a Town Meeting member since 1975. He is treasurer and business manager for Hampshire College.

Torrey said that his experience in municipal government will be helpful to the Board of Selectmen. He also said that he doesn't have "a great philosophical difference" with rent control, but noted that it could be an "administrative nightmare."

In the race for Town Meeting Moderator, sophomore economics major Michael Counter is challenging UMass Dean of Students William Field. Counter said that he is not running against Field, he is running for the Town of Amherst.

Counter said Field is becoming apathetic in the position of moderator. The moderator should encourage groups to be more active in Town Meeting and should go out and talk to the town's people, Counter said.

Rent control emerges as major issue in race

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

Feelings about rent control appear to have inspired large numbers of candidates for town meeting membership, including over 20 Five College students.

Progressive and conservative candidates have organized throughout the precincts, using informational letters andd flyers to promote themselves.

The University of Massachusetts Student Senate is also supporting student candidates. The Senate appropriated $982 to the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, (SCERA) for voter registration and to get students out to vote, according to Mitch Gaslin, chair of the Senate's rents and fees committee.

SCERA and the Commuter Area Government have sent flyers with information on voting and on rent control and are renting vans to transport voters to polling places.

Most student candidates interviewed cited rent control, childcare and water quality as issues that were important to them.

Tom Ahern, Student Government Association co-President, is a candidate for a one-year term in Precinct One who supports rent control.

"Rents go up 15-30 percent a year. Students can't handle this. We should have rent control, the tenants deserve it."

Gaslin, who is running for reelection, said that he is interested in water quality and supports rent control. He is concerned about landlords who are running for town meeting.

"I feel landlords are running on a single issue. The only reason they're running is to stop rent control," Gaslin said.

Over 100 of the candidates are local property owners, according to the list of tax valuations. A number of landlords, including Dennison H. Jones, the owner of D.H. Jones Real Estate Agency and Stephen Puffer Jr., who is associated with Pufton Village, are running.

Warring Iran, Iraq join other Arab states in effort to contain oil slick

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Representatives of eight Persian Gulf nations met yesterday in the first joint effort to contain a big Iranian oil slick which threatens the food, water and power supplies of nations which line the Gulf.

Khaled Fakhro, director of the Bahrain-based Gulf Mutual Aid Emergency Center, described the meeting as "technical." But it was expected to produce recommendations for a ministerial-level meeting planned for tomorrow in Kuwait.

Warring Iran and Iraq sent delegates to the meeting as well as Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates, Oman and Bahrain. The eight nations are members of the Regional Organization for the Protection of Marine Environment.

The 2½-year war between Iran and Iraq has prevented efforts to cap the two offshore wells in Iran's Nowruz oil field, damaged in Iraqi bombing raids on Feb. 8 and spewing oil ever since.

Experts at the University of Petroleum and Minerals in Saudi Arabia estimate that 150,000 barrels of crude oil have spread over an area 240 miles long and 30 miles wide.

Dead fish were sighted on Bahrain's southern beaches yesterday, and dead sea creatures washed up Sunday on the eastern shores of Saudi Arabia. It was not immediately clear whether they were killed by oil pollution.

Drinking water was selling here for $60 a barrel — twice the price of light crude oil. In Qatar, the price of mineral water shot up to $145.

Months of waiting end as second shuttle sends astronauts skyward

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Challenger shrugged off 2½ months of troubles yesterday and rocketed spectacularly from its launch pad, carrying four astronauts to certify it as the second ship in America's space shuttle fleet.

The ship's inaugural flight began with a burst of flame and billow of steam as the three main engines and two solid fuel rockets blazed to life at 1:30 p.m. after a near flawless five-day countdown.

The $1.2 billion spaceship cleared the 347-foot seaside launch tower in seven seconds and twisted northwestward over the Atlantic Ocean, leaving a serpentine trail of white smoke across a brilliantly clear sky.

At about 50 seconds, the spaceship pierced through the most dangerous point in the ascent — an area known as Max Q, where it was subjected to its maximum aerodynamic pressures.

Earlier yesterday, NASA officials had been concerned about a jet stream of 105 mph winds whipping through this area. But at midmorning meteorologists studied weather balloon data, noted the winds had slackened and gave the all-clear for the countdown to proceed.

At 2 minutes, 6 seconds, Challenger shed its two 149-foot boosters, hurling them toward a planned parachute landing in the Atlantic where ships waited to recover them.

Firebomber sentenced to 8 life prison terms

CAMBRIDGE — A man who admitted hurling a firebomb into a Lowell tenement, but later said he tried to help eight people trapped in the flaming building, was sentenced yesterday to eight life prison terms.

Victor Rosario will be eligible for parole in 15 years.

Superior Court Judge Henry Travers rejected a prosecutor's request for tougher terms requiring Rosario to serve at least 30 years before parole.

A Middlesex Superior Court jury last week convicted the 25-year-old Lowell resident of eight counts of second-degree murder and one of arson. He was accused of starting a March 5, 1982, blaze that killed five children and three adults.

Travers sentenced Rosario to concurrent life terms in Walpole State Prison for each murder conviction, and 18 to 20 years for arson.

Patients rally to keep doctor out of prison

SPRINGFIELD — About 30 people marched and carried signs in front of City Hall on Monday in an effort to keep their Spanish-speaking doctor from being sent to jail.

Dr. Milton Kobrosky, 68, of Longmeadow was one of four men sentenced recently for their part in a $1.2 million insurance fraud scheme.

"Don't lock up our only doctor" and "Help us keep our Doctor Milton Kobrosky," read signs in the crowd.

The protesters said that Kobrosky was the only general practitioner in their Memorial Square neighborhood, and he spoke Spanish in the heavily Hispanic section of the city.

Kobrosky was given a six-month prison sentence by U.S. District Court Judge Edward F. Freedman. The doctor is trying to appeal his guilty plea through appeal and has asked that his sentence be delayed.

Jury selection begins in motel brawl case

CAMBRIDGE — More than 40 prospective jurors from the first group of more than 100 were excused yesterday at the start of trial for five police officers on murder and assault charges in a July 1982 Chelsea motel brawl.

"It is contemplated by the court that this case probably will last four weeks," Judge Robert Barton in Middlesex Superior Court told the full group of prospective jurors. "It may go to six weeks."

He added that the jury would be sequestered.

Barton turned down a defense request to ban pictures of the 105 jury prospects during the selection process. One still photographer and one television camera crew were in the courtroom as trial began.

On trial are four Everett police officers — John McLeod, 38, William McClusky, 39, Richard Aiello, 30, and John Macauda, 30, charged with murder, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and violation of civil rights.

State legislation bans N. Ireland investments

BOSTON — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis signed into law yesterday legislation prohibiting public pension fund investments that are in any way related to munitions for Northern Ireland.

Surrounded by legislative leaders with Irish-American backgrounds, the governor said, "Massachusetts is once again making a very strong statement about human rights."

Dukakis said these statements are important when "intolerance or oppression" exists in nations like South Africa, Northern Ireland and Cyprus. Dukakis is of Greek descent.

Three teens charged in Melrose gangrape

MELROSE — Three teenagers were headed to court yesterday for arraignment on charges of gang raping a 17-year-old girl at a party this weekend, police said.

The three were arrested early Saturday at the party, held in a basement recreation room at the home of one of the accused. The girl, a Melrose High School student whose identity was withheld, had attended the party along with two girlfriends, according to Melrose Police Detective George Busby.

Busby said at about 1 a.m. Saturday one of the boys made a pass at the girl.

"The girl went into another room of the basement, and was followed by one boy who began unbuttoning her blouse," Busby said. "A second boy began helping, while a third stood by."

Correction

A story appearing in Thursday's Collegian concerning picketers protesting an informational table in the Campus Center, and a subsequent verbal confrontation, was partly incorrect. Antar Shakir, president of the Islamic Society, said Friday that the table had been staffed by members of the society, although he was quoted in the story as saying that the group had no connection with the table.

Costly fix-up of Chancellor's House finished

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts spent $92,200 to perform improvements, renovations and repairs done this past fall on the 125-year-old Chancellor's House located near the Orchard Hill Residential Area.

"We planned carefully to make the house suitable for public use as well as a home," Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said yesterday. Duffey lives in the 15-room house with his wife Anne Wexler and two sons.

"After looking at the house, it (making the improvements) was a collective decision," Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance John L. DeNyse said last week. "That house was in deplorable condition. There were waterstains on the wallpaper and rips in the carpet."

In addition to making changes necessary to repair physical damages and deterioration of the house, the University converted three previously unused rooms on the second floor into guest bedrooms, DeNyse said.

"It would make a much better setting for (overnight) visitors coming to campus," DeNyse said of the guest rooms. "It's going to save us money over the long haul. We usually pick up their (guests) expenses for their stay here."

Fifty thousand dollars was spent on refurbishing and purchasing furniture for the house. DeNyse said much of this money went toward the purchase of furniture for the guest rooms that had previously been completely unfurnished.

"It was necessary to put in one more bathroom on the second floor," DeNyse said. Installation of that bathroom, wallpapering and carpeting cost approximately $32,000, DeNyse said.

The University spent $7,300 to pay for what DeNyse called "special materials," such as linens for the guestrooms, slate for the fireplace and curtains. The school spent $2,900 for a 48-piece set of dishes, glassware and stainless steel flatware for entertaining, DeNyse said.

Chancellor Duffey said the improvements were made on the house so it could serve as a facility to entertain visitors on campus.

"I think the (entertaining) activity ought to be modest, but we certainly ought to have this kind of activity. The University cannot act as though it's still where it was 15 years ago. It's a major research University."

When Duffey first arrived on campus in September he lived in the Campus Center Hotel for almost three months at a cost of $1,900. Before moving into the Chancellor's House he lived in a rented furnished house in Amherst at a cost of $2,900, according to DeNyse.

Duffey receives an annual salary of $75,000.

Film-maker claims career taught her to cope with self

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

Her films have made her a woman and a film-maker.

At least that is what Canadian film-maker Anne Claire Poirier says.

Poirier, who has directed and produced more than 20 films, said she has learned to deal with herself as a woman, a feminist, a mother and film-maker by researching, writing and directing her films.

"I don't like being taken as a woman film-maker. I was born a woman and I became a film-maker. I don't see why we need to categorize women film-makers," Poirier said in an interview yesterday.

Poirier, who is on campus for two days for the showing of two of her films, said she does not consider herself a "feminist film-maker," although she directed the first feature film made by a woman in Quebec.

However she said, when she was younger, she was not taken seriously by male film-makers in Canada.

"With the subjects I proposed (to film) I was never in accordance with the priorities of the committee, of the producers, all males. I began to question myself and feel guilty that I was not like the others," she said.

However, after having two children, "I came to a deep reality I had to live with. I could not be a man, I had to be a woman or else I would be nothing," she said. "Before that very special reality of my life, of motherhood, I took myself as a man.

"After I had children, I realized my time had to be shared. I started to question myself and I started to bring subjects that were close to me. I realized my priorities were just as strong as theirs (other film-makers).

In Poirier's film Mother-to-be, which was filmed after the birth of Poirier's second child, she described "my anguish and feeling of being only half of the two realities, only half a mother attached to my profession and on the other hand, half a film-maker" because she was a mother, she said.

Poirier said she researches her films for herself. "I hope by going through the research of who I am myself, I invite other women to do the same for themselves," she said.

In A Scream from Silence, Poirier said she did the film on rape "because I couldn't understand how it could be that rape exists. I'm not sure I understand even now."

"In any film that I make, I read everything I can put my hands on and do a lot of interviews with people who are concerned with the film," she said. "I want to film myself with the subject I want to approach and only from there can I communicate."

Poirier, who has made films on abortion, incest and pregnancy, said she is currently writing a script about "the process of a couple, how does a couple go through life when the mystery (of a relationship) is replaced by knowledge."

When not filming, Poirier teaches theater at the National Theatre School of Montreal, a couple of months a year, she said.

Poirier's film about rape, A Scream from Silence, which was shown at the Cannes Film Festival in 1978, will be shown tonight at 8 p.m. in Thompson Hall 104. The film will be in French with English subtitles.

Caucus elections threatened by referendum question

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

A referendum question on the Amherst town election ballot could revoke the so-called "Caucus Act", which governs town elections, if approved by voters today.

The question reads: "Shall the acceptance by the town of an act passed by the General Court in the year 1955, entitled 'An Act Relative to Nominations and Elections for Municipal Offices in the Town of Amherst' (Caucus Act) be revoked?"

The Caucus Act "governs the nominating process of town officers," Town clerk of Amherst Estelle M. Matusko said. Caucus elections are held "whenever there are more than two people who file nomination papers for a single office," she said.

"Its purpose is a primary election," Matusko said, noting that "any town office could be affected by a caucus if there are more than two candidates for the office. If the act is revoked, the town would not hold preliminary elections, and more than two candidates could run for one office, she said.

A preliminary caucus election held in early March eliminated Phyllis Rodin from the race for the single available seat on the Amherst Housing Authority. Voters today will choose either Robert Chisolm or Bernard Moreau to fill that position.

Rodin told the Collegian after her defeat that she would initiate the petition to have the act revoked, saying the act is "calculated to keep everyone out except... the insiders."

A section of the Caucus Act provides for this question to be put on the ballot if a petition signed by two percent of Amherst registered voters is filed 30 days before the election. Matusko said that the petition, which needed 276 signatures to put the question on the ballot, was signed by 329 voters.

Copycards earn stamp of approval from Fac Senate

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Correspondent

Recommendations to reduce the price of coin-operated photocopiers through the use of "copicards," introduced on the UMass campus last semester, have been endorsed by the Faculty Senate.

According to a special report presented by the Service Departments Committee and approved at the March 17 Faculty Senate meeting, the coin cost of self-service photocopying machines increased from five to ten cents in July, 1982. Students and faculty were then given the option of buying copicards, enabling them to operate copiers on campus without the use of coins.

"Substantial savings are realized only with a high volume card," Jeanne Kocsis, chair of the Service Departments Committee, said. "Cost goes down as volume goes up."

Director of Administrative Services Marabeth Clapp suggested that it would be possible to achieve the objective of lowered cost, one of the recommendations, according to the report. At present, a 100-copy card can be purchased for $9.00, reducing the cost per copy to nine cents. Clapp suggested reducing the price of the 100-copy card to $7.00, thereby reducing the per-copy cost to seven cents.

"The financial benefits affect the most frequent users, the students," Kocsis said.

The University, according to the report, contracts with a private vendor, Copy Co. of Boston. Copy Co. owns and services the machines and pays the University a commission based on the volume of sales. The commission goes into the Copy Center Trust Fund, which is used to offset the expenses of administering the operator-assisted Copy Center.

The price reduction, according to the report, would mean less commission revenue for the University, but not significantly less.

Other recommendations included in the report suggest an increased effort to inform students of purchasing copicards and the selling of the cards at more than one location, making their purchase more convenient. At present, copicards can only be purchased at the University Store in the Campus Center.

Wakefield man faces 17 charges after leading police on high speed chase

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

A high speed chase Saturday evening that began at Routes 2 and 63 in Montague, wound through Amherst and the University of Massachusetts and ended at the horseshoe in the Southwest Residential College, resulting in the arrest of a 19-year-old Wakefield man, UMass police said yesterday.

He was arrested and booked on 17 charges. They are: two counts of assault by means of a dangerous weapon (a motor vehicle), being a disorderly person, disturbing the peace, reckless driving, being a minor in possession of alcohol, being in possession of a class D narcotic substance (marijuana), operating an unregistered motor vehicle, two counts of failure to stop for a red light, four counts of failure to stop for a stop sign, speeding, and improper passing (on the right).

Montague police observed the suspect, who is not a UMass student, speeding and proceeded to chase him down North Pleasant Street, UMass police said. He turned west onto Governor's Drive and drove head-on toward a University police cruiser that left the road to avoid accident, and then joined the chase.

Police said he failed to stop for the light at Massachusetts and Commonwealth Aves., turned east on Massachusetts Ave. then south on Sunset Ave. He narrowly missed a group of students there, police said.

He passed the stop sign at Fearing St. and Sunset Ave., police said, turning east on Fearing St. At the intersection of Fearing and Lincoln Streets, police said he again passed the stop sign.

Police said they approximated his speed as being between 65 and 70 mph as he continued on Lincoln, failing to stop at the Amity Street intersection.

He then passed the stop sign at Lincoln Street and Route 9, turning west there, police said. Police said he headed toward another UMass cruiser on Route 9 that was also forced off the road to avoid collision.

Police said he passed six to eight vehicles then turned onto University Drive, failing to recognize the red light there.

UMass cruisers set up a road block on University Drive, but they said the driver left the roadway and drove around the cars.

He continued north on University Drive, going through a green light at the Amity St. intersection. A UMass cruiser caught up to him near the Southwest horseshoe and nudged him to the side of the road using the right fender of the car, police said.

There were no injuries involved, police said, and damage to the cars involved was minimal.

The suspect was arraigned yesterday morning in Hampshire County District court. A pre-trial conference has been scheduled for April 28.

Weekend roundup by Amherst Police nets four UMass students, one other

By DAVID B. MINER

Amherst Police announced yesterday that they arrested five persons over the Easter weekend, four of whom were University of Massachusetts students.

Amherst Police said they arrested a 20 year old UMass student Friday at 9:19 p.m. on charges of malicious destruction of personal property and disorderly conduct after he was reportedly seen by an Amherst Community Service Officer destroying a sign on North Pleasant Street.

Another UMass student faces two charges in Hampshire District Court, one of which is a felony complaint. Amherst Police said that they arrested a 19-year-old at 11:20 p.m. on Saturday after he allegedly purchased a bottle of wine from Triangle Street establishment.

Police say that he is charged with being a person under 20 in possession of alcohol and being in possession of an altered Massachusetts Liquor Identification card, a felony.

The other two arrests involving UMass students were for drinking and driving violations.

In other police news, Amherst Police report a 1:15 a.m. accident on Saturday in which two Amherst residents received extensive personal injuries.

Police report that the 1969 Camaro in which the two were riding was traveling south on West Street when it apparently struck a storm drain and became airborne for about 20 feet, knocking over two road signs.

The driver of the vehicle sustained severe broken bones and internal injuries,and his wife, who was a passenger, suffered extensive contusions and lacerations.

Finally, Amherst Police report that a 21 year old man will face a show cause hearing in District Court after he was reportedly observed by a Community Service Officer taking part of a sign located on the front of the Hampshire Gazette office at 1:40 a.m. on Saturday.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Vote for change

Every time there is an election of any sort that students can participate in, the Collegian prints an editorial urging those students to demonstrate their power by voting.

Today's Amherst town elections have serious implications for students and should not be overlooked. The issue of rent control is on the line and it is important for students to vote for the candidates who support rent control. It is also their right to do so.

Remember that there would be very few apartment complexes in Amherst if there were no students to fill them with. It is only because students need a place to live that landlords are able to make a profit and it is only fair that these same students have their say in the rent control issue.

Another thing students should keep in mind is that many businesses in Amherst would not exist if it were not for the abundance of students who contribute to the town's economy eight months out of the year. Students have a right to participate in the decision making process of a town which is benefiting from their spending money.

There are 6,000 University of Massachusetts students registered to vote, 600 students registered at Amherst College and 300 at Hampshire College. Numbers like these can, and should, control elections.

Students can send a serious message to state legislators that they do care and are not apathetic by helping to elect UMass student Mike Counter as Town Moderator. It's not that UMass Dean of Students William Field has done a bad job, it's just that Counter is running at a time when student power is becoming an increased necessity, and Field has only been challenged twice in his 12 years as moderator. If Counter is elected, national attention could be drawn to Amherst. Very few students have ever held such a position in the history of the country. Counter calls himself a caring resident of Amherst who also happens to be a student and he has already established a bloc of support in the town through his campaigning.

A large student turnout will insure victories for Counter and rent control candidates in the other races. There are also many other pro-rent control students running for the Town Meeting that Counter wants to preside over.

If you care about reasonable costs for housing and are concerned with the affordability of your school, show it by taking a few minutes to go and vote. Especially today, your vote does make a difference.

Get U.S. to note King's birthday

"We know through painful experience that freedom is never voluntarily given by the oppressor. It must be demanded by the oppressed." These words of Martin Luther King, Jr. describe his life and times as a political activist. Fifteen years ago yesterday he was assassinated, and America has lost a great leader.

Reverend King was thrust into a position of national leadership for the Civil Rights Movement, following the Montgomery, Alabama bus boycott of 1955. Until his murder in 1968 he worked for the ending of segregation and racism in all its forms. The Civil Rights movement was important for securing social legislation on a scale matched only by the Great Depression period. Millions of Black Americans said "No more Mr. nice guy" and forced America to listen and act on problems that had been ignored for too long. This did not happen by magic. Hundreds of people were killed or injured by the police and the Klan, as well as in the urban rebellions that swept the country.

Dr. King was often attacked by militants and radicals as too conservative, and by white supporters and some Black leaders as too radical. The truth lies somewhere in between these polarities. While committed to non-violence, King used and supported confrontational tactics. Speaking to supporters in 1967 he stated: "We have learned from hard and bitter experience that our government does not move to correct a problem involving race, until it is confronted directly and dramatically." Dr. King was not just an individual, but needs to be seen as part of the social tapestry and conditions of the time.

One of the best examples of King's principles was his early opposition to the Vietnam War. Many combat units in Vietnam had up to 20 percent black troop strength, and elite units 25 percent. Overall, Blacks in the army at the time made up only 12 percent. Blacks were being sent to protect somebody's freedom thousands of miles away, but could not get it at home.

On April 4, 1967 he called for an immediate cease fire, and called the United States "the greatest purveyor of violence in the world today." Most of the liberal leadership of the country was still hesitant about going this far. This stance cost King money and support from those who supported non-violence as long as it was confined to the domestic scene.

On April 4, 1968, Dr. King went to Memphis to work on an upcoming national mach, and to help a mostly Black local union of sanitation workers, who were on strike. He was assassinated later that day.

Since King's death there has been a movement to get the country to officially honor Dr. King and his ideals in an official capacity. Here at UMass this week is Martin Luther King Week, with a variety of events planned. Stevie Wonder has helped popularize the idea, by putting out this album, Hotter Then July, and organizing national marches in Washington demanding that King's birthday (January 15) be a national holiday.

Much of the opposition to this proposed holiday, including Reagan's, has taken the tack that it would cost the government too much money, and that it would open the door to creating other national holidays. This response has also been voiced in response to attempts to get it declared as a state holiday in many places.

These arguments have validity only if they are looked at in the abstract. Southern states give their employees days off for Jefferson Davis Day, Robert E. Lee Day, and Confederate Memorial Day. Martin Luther King meant much more to the ideals of this country then did any of these other remembered people.

The real question is what Dr. King stood for and accomplished. To institutionalize his birthday as a holiday, you also legitimize what he did and how. This is something that the government, and in particular the right-wing does not want to do.

On March 25, 1965, Dr. King asked as crowd in the capital of the old confederacy; Selma, Alabama, "How long?" How long must this be endured; how long? The reply was "not long." The question is still being asked today, as the gains that were paid for so dearly are being chisled away. But, as in Poland, the government cannot stop people from recognizing something by refusing to officially celebrate it. Remember King and what he stood for.

Amherst voters must be encouraged to support rent control

To the Editor:

College students now living off campus, or those considering moving off at some time in the future, should take great interest in this year's Amherst town meeting elections. Why? Because a rent-control proposal (which narrowly lost by 17 votes last year) is again being considered in this year's town meeting and has therefore become one of the major issues separating the candidates.

Unlike past town meeting elections, where there were no candidates running for several positions, this one is shaping up to become one of the most competitive in recent years. There are 180 candidates competing for the 98 open positions (of a total 240) in the eight districts.

Basically, the candidates are divided into two groups — the realtors or landlords on one side, and the tenants or rent-control supporters on the other. Tenants represent more than 50 percent of Amherst's population. This majority should remember the town's past rent increases (which last summer averaged 15 to 20 percent) and vote in those candidates who are rent-control supporters.

Realtors and landlords argue that rent-control will discourage new building in town, thus taking away competition that would bring rents down. Ultimately, it is argued, the resulting situation would make it more difficult for low-income residents and young families to move to Amherst.

This argument, however, is not true. Rent-control supporters are planning to submit a proposal which will exclude newly built housing and owner-occupied units. They also cite studies which have been conducted around Boston, New Jersey, and Los Angeles, which found that over a long-range period, rent-control laws had no effect on the rate of new housing construction.

The success or failure of the rent-control proposal will be determined at the election on April 5th. If you're a tenant now, or are considering becoming one in the future, get out and vote for a candidate who represents your views. The rent-control proposal cannot succeed without your help.

Linda Lodigiani
Amherst

To the Editor:

Michael J. Fayer's letter in the Collegian last week asserted that those who favored rent control represented "slavery" and those who opposed rent control were the forces of "freedom." Fayer misrepresents or misunderstands that rent control is, at its essence, a democratic demand. The struggle for rent control promotes and upholds democracy in two ways.

First, rent control represents the needs of a great majority of people (tenants, students, low and moderate income peoples) versus the wealthier land-owning elite. It is not designed to affect the small, owner-occupied dwellings. Nor will it prevent rent increases. What rent control will do is to make the major landlords in Amherst accountable for all rent increases to an independent town board. This will ensure that landlords won't be able to continue to abuse the low vacancy rate in the area by charging astronomical rents and accumulating large profits.

Second, the struggle for rent control is one that will give the Town of Amherst greater local control versus the power and authority of the State of Massachusetts. The passing of rent control at Town Meeting will request from the State Legislature that Amherst assert local jurisdiction over the regulation of rents, if its citizens so desire.

Thus, on Tuesday, April 5, voters will have a chance to uphold and promote democracy if they vote for the pro rent control candidates in their precincts. Vote April 5.

Speaker discusses myth concerning "sex differences in math learning"

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Staff

The issue of sex differences in mathematics is one which is unique to this culture, according to Sheila Tobias, a past associate provost at Wesleyan College and co-founder of the National Organization for Women (NOW).

"The female brain is viewed as weaker and different when it comes to the abstraction of mathematics," Tobias said in her lecture, entitled "Sex Differences in Mathematics Learning: An Update."

Tobias said most girls start out performing as well as boys in math class on the elementary level. In later stages boys were found to take more chances in solving problems with which they were unfamiliar, where girls balked at such problems, she said.

Much of the research done in the last few years on math anxiety, has come out of the feminist movement's efforts to dispel the myths concerning sex differences and math ability, she said.

A study done a few years ago which introduced the notion of a "Math gene" was particularly damaging, Tobias said.

"The researchers speculated that there might be a genetically structured answer," Tobias said.

She continued, "What we need is for the culture to change for girls to feel comfortable with mathematics.

The difference between boys and girls, according to Tobias, is that boys will take risks and then suffer the consequences, where girls are always talking themselves into failure.

Tobias said one of the major influences upon the actions of pre-adolescent girls is the opinion of junior high age boys. "Boys view as masculine that which girls don't do," she said.

"There is a reluctance to believe that women can do anything." She added that this reluctance runs very deep in our culture.

Despite changes which have been made, Tobias said she is not satisfied "we have exercised the myth of male domination in mathematics."

She said women have faced the problem in the past that chemistry and math departments at many co-ed colleges didn't care if they dropped out. She said there have been more women geniuses graduating from all women's colleges.

TOKYO STRING QUARTET
Wednesday, March 30
Fine Arts Center

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

The concert experience is so transient that one can only realistically absorb so much at one time. The performance by the Tokyo String Quartet at the FAC Wednesday night was good but not great. Their choice of music was good. Although the Mozart piece they started with ("Hunt" Quartet in B-Flat major) took a while to get started, by the time it reached the second movement, the Adagio, it began to achieve a sense that a simple translation of the notes on the page into pressure changes in the air could never achieve. I can never figure out why an ensemble has to slow down in order to catch the first really breathtaking moment of performance.

The concert shifted into overdrive with the opening of Shostakovich's Quartet No. 8. Their is something about this piece that makes it exude such an extraordinary ambience (one must use this word at least once per review) that gives one just the most amazing feeling. Of course, the presentation must have been exceptional to give me and other people I talked to this feeling. This seems to me to be one of the external questions in reviewing a "Classical" music concert. Is it more important to judge the music or the performance? It seems to me that, as it was with this piece by Shostakovich, the mark of a truly good ensemble is that one forgets that they are there.

Yet this does not seem quite acurate, as the Tokyo String Quartet were very entertaining to watch. Kikuei Ikeda and Sadao Harada, the second violinist and celloist respectively, both had a very personal feel to their playing. In fact my only real complaint about the performance was that the first violinist, Peter Oundjian, lacked any real tone to his playing except in the middle of the Mozart quartet.

This of course brings us around full circle. The ensemble played incredibly well together. They always knew where each other were and their sound was extremely coherent. Watching each member working together captured what was the dominant idea in the first place: to play together, to produce something more.

The program concluded with Beethoven's Quartet No. 9 in C Major. I found this piece to be less grandiose than most of Beethoven's works and even rather pleasing to listen to. The piece was well executed and demonstrated the ensemble's ability to play together. The instruments they played on were made by Nicolo Amati, the man who taught Stratavarius how to make violins. The Quartet came back for an encore, to play a short piece by Mendelson.

The Tokyo String Quartet

The audience seemed to enjoy the string quartet's performance, as did I. What's more, the quartet seemed to enjoy playing. Robert Fripp once said, that in order to have a real performance there has to be a strong interaction between the music, the audience, and the musicians. While this was not the most entertaining concert I have seen, I found that this interaction was there and that the concert was a successful presentation of the composer's work.

What's that you say? You need something to make you laugh, but you've seen those same Three Stooges reruns eighty zillion times already? Well, if you're suffering from a severe lack of stimulating comedy these days, then you're in for a real treat tonight, because for the second year in a row, Catch a Rising Star, one of New York's foremost comedy clubs, will bring its talented comedians to the Blue Wall.

At 8 p.m., some of the Big Apple's finest comics will take to the stage. Scheduled performers include Steve Sweeny, who wowed a packed Blue Wall last month with his side splitting impersonations and anecdotes.

Other stand-up comics who will perform tonight are J.J. Wall and Schmock & Valley.

Also performing this evening will be Dana Gould, the UMass student who won last week's Blue Wall open mike night. As part of his prize, Gould will have the opportunity to bring his routine to Catch a Rising Star, the nightclub that launched such great performers as David Brenner, Chevy Chase, and Richard Belzer.

Tonight's admission will be $2 at the door — a mere pittance for the high caliber entertainment it's going to buy you.

Catch a Rising Star is being presented by the Governor's Program Council in collaboration with UPC. If you have any questions concerning tonight's show or future UMass comedy events, contact GPC at 545 2733.

By the way, let's have a hand for GPC. They've brought us some great acts this semester — let's hope this is only the beginning.

More quality classical music

BYRON PEARSON
ARTHUR VIDRICH
Wednesday, March 30
Bezanson Recital Hall

By FRED STEINWAY
Collegian Correspondent

On Monday, The UMass Department of Music featured a recital of 16th and 17th century music for brass and organ. The guest artists for the evening were Byron Pearson of Oberlin College Conservatory of Music, and Arthur Vidrich, organist. Byron Pearson and Arthur Vidrich perform together regularly, and have produced two classical recordings on Crystal label. Their most recent album was available for purchase in the lobby.

Pearson and Vidrich began the evening with a bright "Prelude to a Te Deum," a fanfare for trumpet and organ in four sections, by Marc-Antoine Charpentier.

Mr. Vidrich followed this with a performance of Tomaso Albinoni's renowned "Celebre Adagio" on the organ. Mr. Vidrich's performance was unusual in that he learns his pieces by means of the Braille Music Code.

As Mr. Vidrich explained to the audience, he requests the assistance of a music student wherever he performs. He introduced Barbara Richardson, who helped to set the organ stops and monitor the performance last night.

Next, UMass music faculty member Walter Chesnut joined Pearson and Vidrich in a lively performance of "Lo Ballo Del' Intorcia," by Antonio Valente, a blind Italian organist and composer of the 16th century. This cheerful piece brought much applause.

Between sections, Professor Chesnut warmed his trumpet under his coat. Temperature changes the resonant properties of the brass. Heat improves the musical quality of the sound.

Following the intermission, we heard "Sonata in F," by Daniel Purcell, the J.S. Bach "Tocatta, Adagio and Fugue in C Major," and a Concerto for two trumpets by Francesco Manfredini.

On April 5th the UMass Department of Music will feature Chamber Winds, conducted by John Jenkins, in the Bezanson Recital Hall, FAC at 8 p.m.

Becket Royce and Andrew Dolan star in the Rand Theater production of William Shakespeare's The Comedy of Errors at the UMass Fine Arts Center, April 7-9 and 13-16 p.m. at 8:00 p.m. For further information call 545-3511.

The UMass softball team (10-3) will host Keene St. in a doubleheader today at 2:00 p.m. at NOPE. Southpaw Lynn Stockley will pitch the first game and righty Cathy Reed the second.

Lorenzo Charles' dunk shot with one second remaining fulfilled North Carolina State's impossible dream Monday night, giving the Wolfpack a 54-52 victory over top-ranked Houston for the NCAA basketball championship.

Minutemen drop 4-1 decision to Holy Cross

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

It has been said that good defense will win games for you. It must follow that bad defense will lose games for you. Yesterday's game between the University of Massachusetts baseball team and the Holy Cross Crusaders was definitely an example of the latter.

Five errors by the UMass defense allowed Holy Cross to push across three unearned runs and give them a 4-1 victory over the Minutemen at Earl Lorden field.

This offset a fine pitching performance for UMass hurler Dave Valdanbrini, who yielded only 6 hits and 1 earned run. But, he was upstaged by Holy Cross ace Jim Irzyk, who gave up only three hits and stymied the UMass bats.

UMass knew they needed a good performance from Valdanbrini as they brought their .227 team average against a pitcher who beat them last year, 4-3. Valdanbrini started out strong, retiring the first 6 batters, although Jack O'Keefe sent Minuteman centerfielder Steve Messina deep with a shot in the second inning.

Irzyk was just as strong in the first two innings, giving up only a leadoff single to second baseman Dean Bennet, who abruptly got picked off first.

There was a little scare in the third for Valdanbrini, as Mike Germano singled and was sacrificed over to second. But a strikeout and a groundout got Valdanbrini out of the jam. UMass also stranded a runner at second in their half of the inning (they would only get a runner as far as second one more time in the game).

Unearned run number one came in the fourth. After O'Keefe sent another shot to the warning track, errors by third baseman Andy Conners and first baseman Bruce Emerson enabled Gary Cox to score from third and give Holy Cross a 1-0 lead.

UMass got that run back in the fifth. Emerson led off with a single to left. After Conners sacrificed him over with a beautiful bunt, Todd Ezold came up and hit a bullet. Unfortunately, it was right at second baseman Dean Casagrande. With two outs, Bruce Kingman hit a gapper between left and center, scoring Emerson and winding up with is first double and RBI of the year to knot it at 1-1.

Another error by UMass put runners at first and third with two outs for the Crusaders at the top of the sixth. Gary Quinlan then delivered a clutch single to right field, giving Holy Cross a 2-1 lead.

Both pitchers retired the side in order in the seventh. Irzyk helped his own cause with a nice fielding play on a hit up the middle by Conners, but UMass was still close going into the eighth.

Gerry Cox led off the eighth with a double. Vin Eruzione (his brother Mike, if you recall, played for the 1980 Olympic hockey team), came in to pinch run, and advanced to third on a groundout. Dean Casagrande then hit a groundball to third which was bobbled by Conners, allowing Eruzione to score the Crusaders third run.

Irzyk, meanwhile was busy retiring 10 Minutemen in a row going into the last inning, but his team would score another run before he would take the mound.

Tony Froio punched a two out single to right, scoring John Quinn, giving Holy Cross their fourth run and their first earned run. Matt Subocz came in relief of Valdanbrini and got the final out.

Irzyk finished off his masterpiece, retiring the side in order in the ninth. UMass' record dips to 2-10 while Holy Cross moves up to 3-5.

"He really kept us off balance," UMass coach Dick Berquist said of Irzyk. "But Valdanbrini pitched well enough to win. I was disappointed with our defense." UMass will go with Emerson on the mound as UMass travels to UConn for a game today at 3.

UMass crew goes 'woof, woof' on Boston's river Charles

BOSTON — Saturday was what the Preppie Handbook would have referred to as a "woof, woof" day for crew in the most "woof, woof" place for the rowing of eight oared shells to occur, the Charles River.

"Woof, woof. Woof, woof," echoed up and down the banks of the Charles as members of the University of Massachusetts, Boston University, the University of New Hampshire, alumni, family and friends, and rowing groupies sunned themselves under ideal warm, calm weather conditions.

But, woof, woof? Just what exactly is a woof, woof? The terminology may confuse you at first but, then again, so will the sport itself.

Crew is a sport that works out here at UMass from the first day of classes in September until late in May when the team travels down to Philadelphia to compete in their division's version of the national championship (Div. II), the Dad Vail.

What the entire concept comes down to is that teams spend a whole year preparing for about 10 different races which last six minutes apiece (approximately, for you nit pickers on accuracy). There is no excuse for error. The effort must be of maximal proportions for six minutes, just six minutes.

Crew is supposedly a preppie sport since only the more expensive prep schools can afford the luxury of owning racing shells (Those big, long boats cost around $8,000). Thus, preppy-type schools, such as Harvard and Yale, possess top notch programs. They are the woof, woof of collegiate rowing.

UMass lies in the category of non-woof, woof schools. They are the working class breed who put in the extra hours without the extra equipment, without the extra budget money.

But, then again, UMass is a very competitive program in its own division and can even stay with some of the big boys. That probably makes the local oarsmen a one-woof squad.

This was to be a two-woof day on the Charles, though. UMass looked good in both the first and second varsity races but lost to BU in both 2000 meter jaunts upstream. UNH, a no-woof team, trailed both races in third.

The women's varsity eight and the respective novice teams of both genders had some trouble but, barring a toll booth stop by the men's novice boat (technical problems hindered the boat), all boats turned in good performances.

The times? They really don't mean that much. Times are deceptive since conditions on the water are always changing. The bottom line was that BU got to woof, woof about the shoreline showing off their new UMass tee-shirts.

UMass tee-shirts? Why? Where did those come from? Crew is so confusing.

Next class, students of the oar, next class.

AL East predictions : The Brewers first in close one

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

Editors Note: The following are Rich Nangle's predictions for the 1983 American League Eastern Division race.

Milwaukee Brewers — This team is loaded with hitting talent and therefore, despite the loss of Pete Vuckovich (18 wins) and the questionable status of savemaster Rollie Fingers, I look for them to repeat. Gorman Thomas, Cecil Cooper and Ben Oglivie are all serious home run hitters and Robin Yount is for real. If any of the other teams in the league looked really outstanding the Brewers could not possible be contenders considering their injuries. But this is a league with some very good teams and no great teams.

Boston Red Sox — Something about this team really excites me. Maybe it's because it's Carl Yastrzemski's last year, but I sense a winning chemistry on this team. The Jim Rice, Tony Armas and Dwight Evans outfield should be good for at least 90 homeruns and 250 RBIs. The infield doesn't look too shabby with Dave Stapleton finding a home at first base, Julio Valdez at second until Jerry Remy returns, defensive-minded Glenn Hoffman at short and Wade Boggs at third. And the starting pitching looks better now that the Sox don't have Mike Torrez to kick around anymore. Although starting pitching is still a problem, the bullpen still looks solid even without Tom Burgmeier. Look for Yaz to have good year. He still has the ability at 43. A pennant is not out of the question by any means, but they can't get blown out in County Stadium.

Baltimore Orioles — This team has the best pitching in the American League - so what else is new? The real question is hitting and the true worth of retired Manager Earl Weaver. It's always been my contention that Weaver was worth five games a year to this team. Don't forget that he took some mediocre clubs in the late seventies and made them contenders. But remember that Jim Palmer hated Weaver's guts. Maybe he will have a big year with that weight off his back. If injuries hit the Red Sox, Yankees and Brewers, the Orioles will win the division easily.

New York Yankees — Many people, (including baseball god Peter Gammons) have picked them higher but I can't see how they can win again with Billy Martin. Let's face it folks, Billy and George Steinbrenner despise each other and the only reason they're back together is because Steinbrenner wants a winner so bad he can taste it. Once again the Yankees purged the free agent market for outfielder Steve Kemp and First base/DH Don Baylor. Overall the lineup is chock full of hitters so much so that dissension could develop. But pitching could be a problem. If the Yankees aren't in the thick of things by mid-June there will be flare ups like you've never seen before. Time will tell.

Detroit Tigers — On paper this team looks good, but I can't forget the way they fell apart last year when they lost an incredible amount of games in July. In the west they'd be certain contenders. But here they will surely flounder despite the talent. This team needs to trade for a proven star who can hit, then they will flourish. But by then, the Sparky Anderson romance may be over. He made this team what it is today.

Toronto Blue Jays — A much improved team with great starting pitching. Unfortunately they do not have a lefthander and their batting lineup is not solid. They're a year or two away from contending, but without a good showing this year pitching talent like Jim Clancy, Dave Stieb and Luis Leal may want out.

Cleveland Indians — Last place, but not a bad team.

Torrey, Steinbeck victors in Amherst selectmen race

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

Allen Torrey and Frederick Steinbeck emerged victorious in the race for the two available seats on the Amherst Board of Selectmen in yesterday's town election.

Torrey, who was the top vote-getter with 2096 votes, and Steinbeck, with 1793, defeated Joanne Levenson, who had 1698 votes.

University of Massachusetts student Michael Counter was defeated by UMass Dean of Students William Field, 2274 to 693.

Voter turnout was over 25 percent, or 3589 of Amherst's 12,389 registered voters. Town Clerk Estelle Matusko said that the turnout was nearly exactly the same as in the 1977 town election, when a comparable number of candidates were running.

After hearing the election results, Steinbeck, who was the incumbent, said that he was "elated", but that he was sorry someone had to lose.

"I'm going to stick in the course of moderation and objectivity," Steinbeck said. "One important issue we will have to face up to (in the next three years) is water quality."

Bernard Moreau was victorious over Robert Chisholm in the contest for the one available seat on the Housing Authority. Moreau had more than 700 votes than Chisholm, 1917 to 1146.

Moreau attributed his victory to name recognition, and noted that he has been involved in town government for 20 years.

"I'm more empathetic to elderly and those who need housing," Moreau said. "I want to help those who need help," he said.

Casey Clark and Peter Murphy were elected to the town available seats on the school committee, defeating Karin Winter. Clark had 1960 votes, Murphy had 1625, and Winter had 1144.

The referendum question, which asked voters if they wanted the caucus act revoked, was defeated 705 to 675.

Herta Paulsen and H. Hills Skillings were both re-elected to Jones Library Trustees. Paulsen had 1791 votes and Skilling received 2292 votes.

Rosemary Sprague was elected as the Elector of the Oliver Smith Will, with 2289 votes.

Graffiti is a common occurrence but a problem for physical plant

By MIRIAM ZOLL
Collegian Correspondent

"Dope is a fascist plot designed to anesthetize the masses."

"Lesbianism is choice."

"Affluence is a state of mind."

Students won't find these quotes in the pages of their textbooks, students will find them splattered on bathroom stalls, hallways and classrooms campus-wide at the University of Massachusetts.

Graffiti is derived from the Italian word graffio meaning an inscription, slogan, drawing...crudely scratched or scribbled on a wall or other public surface.

Graffiti's aesthetic value has always been debated. Is it art or is it destruction of public property?

"If $40,000 worth of metal in the middle of the Fine Arts Center is art, then graffiti is too. And it's free," Greg Gonye, a junior bio-chemical/microbiology major said.

Anthony Fusco, assistant superintendent at the Physical Plant said, "Graffiti is a form of expression, but the taxpeyers have to pay for it."

He said the labor and maintenance costs needed to clean up graffiti and other vandalism is reflected in rent and fee increases.

UMass graffiti is versatile and there are no specific guidelines or graffiti writing rules to follow:

— There is one-word graffiti: "Anarchy."

— Response graffiti: "UMass is quite an experience."..."So is a lobotomy."

— Drug related graffiti: "I stood here tripping writing this on the wall and you are reading this now! Have you hugged your children today?"

— Political graffiti: "Support the revolution! Remove Reagan in the 80's...and elect Nixon you lily-white bleeding heart liberal."

— Philosophical graffiti: "Character is the compass of Life."

Sexual remarks and drawings are the most common graffiti at UMass: "Do people who do it have more fun?"

Many students said they dislike the pornographic and sexual graffiti they see on campus.

Wendy Lorraine, a junior botany major said, "Interesting graffiti is informative and relevant to life but I don't like the pornographic kind."

"A lot of the graffiti is lewd," Dick Friend said from the stairwell of the Tower Library.

At UMass, graffiti is spray painted on walls in numerous colors and shapes; written in pen, pencil, highlighter and lipstick. Or carefully scratched into painted surfaces or cut into wood.

UMass spends hundreds of dollars annually cleaning graffiti in the dormitories and academic buildings. Two years ago the entire stairwell in the Tower Library was repainted white and the "flashcube" area at the top of the Graduate Research Tower was painted twice in the past three years. Today both areas are covered with slogans and pictures.

Preventative measures have been taken to combat graffiti artists on campus. "We put a chain fence up to block the stairs in the flashcube and they broke the lock on the door," Norman Campell, institution maintenance foreman, said.

According to Fusco the Southwest residential area has the most graffiti and vandalism damage at UMass. He also said the total cost of graffiti cleanup is too difficult to pinpoint because individual dorms and buildings are billed for damages.

Most campus examples of graffiti aren't quite as stark as this one in the tower library, but all manage to convey a message.

Motions introduced in Faculty Senate

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Three new motions have been introduced to the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate which could affect tomorrow's scheduled vote on the General Education Curriculum Proposal.

The motions, if approved by the senate, would create a General Education Council to continue discussing both the General Education proposal now before the senate and the issue of general education at UMass, according to a special report of the Academic Matters Council of the senate.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said Monday he believes more discussion is needed on the general education issue regardless of the outcome of the senate vote on the proposal.

"It is possible and now appears likely that the faculty will want more discussion (on the proposal) to consider some parts of the program," Duffey said.

The motions, which will be considered at tomorrow's senate meeting, are designed to promote more discussion, according to the report.

The first motion asks the senate to "receive" the Genreal Education proposal, the Academic Matters Council report and all "other responses elicited by" the proposal.

The second motion calls for the creation and appointment of a General Education Council.

The creation of the council is the "main thrust of the Academic Matters report," said Micheline Dufau, chair of the Academic Matters Council.

"The council will be an advisory body which will submit recommendations to the senate," she said.

The third motion before the senate asks the senate to refer "the reservations and alternatives elicited by the" proposal.

The three new motions are in addition to three old motions which have been before the senate during the past four meetings.

Senate Secretary James Leheny said it is "unlikely" all six motions will be voted on at the meeting. There is a possibility Ad Hoc Committee on General Education will withdraw three previous motions, he said.

Charles Hutchinson, chair of the committee, said he and the committee had not yet decided what their plan of action would be during the meeting.

He said while he did not disagree with the Academic Matters Report, he thinks "ours is better."

Reagan criticized on guerilla stance

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two Democratic senators charged yesterday that the Reagan administration may be violating U.S. law and a 1948 international agreement by supporting anti-Sandinista guerrillas in Nicuragua.

"What we are dealing with here is not a partisan issue of whether the administration's Central America policy is right or wrong," Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., told the Senate. "The question is whether it is within the letter and the spirit of the law."

Leahy and Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, vice chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said the administration may be violating legislation restricting covert activities in Nicaragua.

The Intelligence Committee, of which Leahy is a member, has heard testimony behind closed doors on U.S. involvement in the Central American country. Moynihan said the committee would take the matter up again April 12.

Moynihan said such involvement by the United States also would violate a 1948 agreement establishing the Organization of American States. The signatories agreed not to interfere in each other's internal affairs.

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes refused yesterday to discuss the nature of U.S. involvement in Nicaragua but maintained that "we're complying with the law."

Asked about reports that U.S. military advisers are training anti-government insurgents, Speakes said: "We just don't get into denying or confirming allegations of this type ... We're just not commenting beyond the fact that whatever we're doing is consistent with the law."

Moynihan said the leftist Sandinista government in Nicaragua also is violating the 1948 agreement by supplying arms to rebels in neighboring El Salvador but this "should come as no surprise to any of us who have seen its degeneration into a Marxist-Leninist state."

The Nicaraguan government's action, he added, "does not absolve any other government from its obligations" under the agreement.

Leahy, who visited several Central American countries in January, said he submitted a highly classified report to the Intelligence Committee that "bears materially on the question of whether the executive branch is complying" with the congressional legislation.

Mideast talks still locked in stalemate

KHALDE, Lebanon (AP) — U.S., Lebanese and Israeli negotiators failed to break the deadlock in troop withdrawal talks yesterday, and PLO chief Yasser Arafat and Jordan's King Hussein seemed far apart in their negotiations.

Meanwhile, military sources in Tel Aviv reported two bombings but no casualties in Lebanon's Israeli-occupied port of Sidon. The Lebanese National Resistance Front claimed responsibility for the attacks and claimed an undetermined number of Israeli soldiers were wounded.

Beirut newspapers also reported mounting tension between Syrian and Israeli forces in eastern Lebanon's Bekaa Valley, where thousands of guerrillas fled following the forced evacuation of PLO forces from west Beirut in August.

The Syrians have been in Lebanon since snuffing out the Moslem-Christian civil war in 1976, and the Israelis since invading June 6 to smash the Palestine Liberation Organization. There are several thousand PLO guerrillas still in Lebanon behind Syrian lines.

The latest round of withdrawal talks lasted about three hours in Khalde's Lebanon Beach Hotel. Lebanese spokesman Daoud Sayegh said the deliberations concentrated on future relations between Lebanon and Israel and on security arrangements to shield Israel against renewed Palestinian guerrilla attacks.

He quoted Israeli chief delegate David Kimche as saying in an opening statement, "We want an early agreement with Lebanon and I think we are now close to it." Kimche, director general of Israel's Foreign Ministry, did not speak to reporters.

Sayegh did not say whether any specific agreement had been reached on either issue and none of the negotiating team members was able to report any breakthrough in the three-month-old negotiations. Sayegh said the next round of talks was slated for tomorrow in the Israeli border town of Kiryat Shmona.

Reagan to request Congress to reduce spending next year

WASHINGTON — President Reagan intends to ask Congress to reduce spending by about $900 million next year to offset part of the cost of the $4.6 billion jobs bill he signed last month, officials said yesterday.

Administration and congressional officials said the president would submit the formal request next week when he submits budget revisions for the 1984 fiscal year that begins Oct. 1.

The disclosures came as Reagan arranged an afternoon meeting with Republican members of the Senate Budget Committee to discuss his proposed 1984 tax and spending plan.

Most of the discussion was expected to center around the president's proposed defense budget, which Sen. Pete V. Domenici, the committee chairman, and many other GOP lawmakers believe must be cut.

Sources said Domenici used a 10-day congressional vacation to develop and submit to the White House a revised budget blueprint calling for defense spending increases averaging about 7 percent after inflation for the next five years.

The 7 percent figure is significantly above the 5 percent spending increase Domenici favored earlier in the year, but well below Reagan's original proposal, which called for about a 10 percent increase.

Gas station owner protests tax by cutting price to 13¢ a gallon

WORCESTER — He said it cost him about $1,000, but filling station owner Jerry Kontny did his bit yesterday to keep down the cost of living by selling gasoline for one wild hour for 13 cents a gallon.

That amount used to be equal to the gasoline tax, but that was last month.

Hundreds mobbed Kontny's station, including four men sleeping in two cars, when he opened for business at 7 a.m. But only 65 had time to inch past his pumps during the appointed hour, from 12:30 p.m. to 1:30 p.m. They bought 927 gallons of gasoline.

Radio disc jockeys pumped gas, one radio station gave away Frisbees, and a soda pop company gave waiting motorists free samples.

"It was unbelievable," said Kontny, who has sold gasoline at the location for 30 years. "We didn't have trouble with anybody."

One line of gas-hungry motorists stretched a mile, past patrolling police, he said.

"I lost one dollar a gallon, but with the advertising I got out of this, with people saying thanks, well, I could have gone to the race track, bought a bale of hay for a pony and come back with nothing," said Kontny.

Catholic bishops soften policy for a nuclear weapons freeze

WASHINGTON — Months after a White House outcry, Roman Catholic bishops softened on yesterday their call for a nuclear weapons freeze and added a warning against negotiating "naively" with the Soviet Union. But an administration official still labeled as "wrong-headed" their attempt to set church policy on war and peace.

Two earlier drafts of a ground-breaking pastoral letter — a departure from customary Catholic hawkishness on national defense issues — called for bilateral agreements to "halt" testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons — a nuclear arms freeze.

But the new proposal calls for agreements to "curb" testing, production and deployment — a change that may be hotly debated when the document is laid before the nation's 285 Catholic bishops in Chicago May 2-3. Adoption by a two-thirds vote would make it official policy of the American branch of the church.

"Admittedly this document is more flexible than the previous documents but I submit that the document as a whole has not really lost its prophetic character or its basic moral thrust," Cardinal Joseph Bernardin, archbishop of Chicago, told a news conference.

In a break with administration policy, Bernardin and his colleagues on the committee termed "an unjustifiable moral risk" the American threat to retaliate with nuclear weapons if the Soviets move into Western Europe with conventional forces.

Quarter of Mass area schools are found to contain asbestos

BOSTON — Asbestos has been found in at least 479 public schools — about a quarter of Massachusetts' schools — and cleaning up the cancer-causing insulation will cost more than $47 million, educators said yesterday.

And since the figures were based on an incomplete survey, officials said, the eventual totals could be higher and the cleanup could cost $65 million.

Some $40 million of that is a rough estimate for the cost to solve the problems at about 105 schools in Boston alone, Education Commissioner John Lawson said.

"It is the first time we have in Massachusetts a clear idea of the extent of the asbestos problem in our public schools," said Sen. Chester Atkins, Senate Ways and Means Commmittee chairman.

Atkins is backing a bill to provide $15 million on top of the $1.3 million already available for reimbursing communities for removing or covering their asbestos problems.

"The report demonstrates a Massachusetts commitment to eliminate entirely the asbestos hazards in our public schools and to create an absolutely safe environment for children in the public schools," he added.

John A. Calabro, school building assistance director, said only 107 of the 286 school superintendents around the state have responded to a survey of asbestos problems conducted by the state Department of Education.

Former governor Edward King hired by public relations firm

BOSTON — Former Gov. Edward J. King has joined the upper ranks of Hill and Knowlton Inc., a worldwide public relations and consulting firm, the company announced yesterday.

James A. Baar, the company's senior vice president, said the firm's clients represent one third of the Fortune 500 companies.

"The governor will meet with top executives of corporations around the country on various issues and problems which are confronting business and the nation," Baar said. "The governor will not be knocking out press releases," he added, laughing.

Other senior consultants to the firm include Anthony G. De Lorenzo, former vice president in charge of public relations for General Motors; Douglas MacArthur II, former ambassador to Japan and Iran, and Najeeb E. Halaby, former chairman and chief executive officer of Pan American World Airways.

In a statement released today by the company, King called the job "an exciting opportunity to help build our economy, particulary our growth industries, at a critical period in our history."

Sheila Tobias speaks on "Females as Outsiders" at the Campus Center.

Differences among the sexes result of patriarchy by men

By LISA MOSLEY
Collegian Staff

"There are differences between men and women, but these are the result and not the cause of patriarchy," according to the co-founder of the National Organization of Women (NOW).

Sheila Tobias lectured last night at the University of Massachusetts' Campus Center and read from her unfinished paper entitled "The Female as Outsider: New Perspectives on an Old Subject," to an audience of 15-20 people. Tobias said, "As long as these diffferences between men and women exist, they can be a source of insight and criticism of patriarchy."

Citing the works of Simone De Beauvoir and Kate Millet, Tobias explained that throughout history women have been excluded from the decision making process by men in the power structure who considered them to be "something different and less than human."

"Throughout most of the first decade of the new feminism," Tobias continued, "the theory of 'otherness' provided a useful paradigm both for theory and practice. If (it) was artificially imposed, it could in course be eliminated."

Tobias said, however, that especially after the introduction of women's study courses caused vast amounts of material indicating the existence of a "women's culture" to be unearthed, many feminists began to focus on the "specialness" of their "separatism".

"Now herein lies the danger" cautioned Tobias, "for if there is nothing men need or that a mixed society would benefit from, then how are we going to justify our right to be here?"

According to Tobias, "Suddenly, those of us who had been working to challenge and to erase all the 'natural' and artificial barriers between the sexes that were holding women back, found ourselves challenged on the left as well as on the right."

Tobias said that a possible resolution lies in women applying the theories they have developed from their observations as "outsiders" to social problems.

Tobias said she feels that they have "new, fresher visions of subjects from which they have been outcast for centuries."

Tobias illustrates her thesis with two subjects that she has researched and written about extensively. These are, oddly enough, two seemingly unrelated topics of inability to learn mathematics" which manifests itself in "sexism in mathematics testbooks and prejudicial treatment of girls."

Russian physicist discusses Soviet political suppression

By TURA GUDMUNDSSON
Collegian Staff

Speaking of his open political activism in the Soviet Union, and Soviet society in general, physicist Pavel Litvinov, who was exiled to the west in 1974, spoke Monday to about 150 people in the Campus Center.

Recalling the beginning of his political activism in Russia, Litvinov said "before then, I held on to the convenient philosophy of — there is nothing that I can do. There is nothing that I can change."

It was only following the trial of two Russian authors in 1965, who were sent to labor camps for refusing to recognize their supposed wrongdoing in having published their works abroad, that Litvinov said he decided to "openly protest."

"Our protest was based on the principles of Humas Rights, Soviet law, and the constitution, which does contain statements about freedom of speech and conscience, although only vaguely stated as such," Litvinov said.

"We demanded that the court not violate their own laws," Litvinov said, recalling that while there were about 200 demonstrators there might have been as many as 300 KGB agents at the protest.

Litvanov started to openly meet with western reporters and send signed letters to foreign and Russian newspapers about such issues as the enclosement of political activists in mental institutions.

"Our principle was that we wanted to force them to care, but, while our talk about human rights was serious, everybody laughed," Litvinov said.

The KGB fired me from my job and stopped my dissertation work in physics at Moscow University. It then arrested me on the charges of being a parasite upon society, because I had no job," he said.

Following an additional demonstration about Russia's invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968, Litvinov was sent to internal exile in Siberia to work as an electrician in the mines for four years, after which he was advised by the government to apply for an exit visa.

Describing the Soviet Union as a "dictatorship" with "dangerous political opportunism," Litvinov said that while the country is run by a small privileged group, "most people couldn't care less about the Communist Party, they just want to live their own lives."

Saying he wanted to clear up some misconceptions about the Russians, Litvinov said "not all Russians are communists. There are only 17 million people in the party out of 250 million people."

"There are more Marxists in the United States than in the Soviet Union," Litvinov said. "If a person in Russia seriously starts to speak about communism and socialism in the Soviet Union, he is considered insane," he added.

"The strongest point of the Soviet authorities is their control of communications, and any group that speaks independently is likely to be arrested," Litvinov said.

"The Soviet Union is a consumer society, yet you can not get anything without a bribe. It is a capitalist society without the virtues of capitalism as we know them," Litvinov said.

Litvinov was invited by the University of Massachusetts' Distinguished Visitors Program. He is currently a physics professor in New York state.

Students with fake ID's could face jail sentence

By DAVID B. MINER
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students who use an altered identification card now face up to five years in a federal prison and a $25,000 fine.

Charles J. DiMare, Director of the UMass Legal Services Office (LSO) said that they (LSO) are extremely concerned over the effect which a recently enacted federal law will have on UMass students who are arrested for purchasing or attempting to purchase alcohol with an altered identification card.

DiMare said the "LSO is starting a concerted effort to educate the UMass student population on the dangers of posessing an altered identification card."

"Some of the things we plan to do," he said, "are to publish an educational pamphlet and to conduct workshops."

The federal law, which went into effect December 31, 1982 is titled "the False Identification Crime Control Act of 1982" and the intent, as published in the Congressional Record is to place, "a document made or issued by or under the authority of the United States Government, a State, political subdivision of a State, issued solely for the purpose of identification," under the scope of the law and to make the mere possession of such an altered document a federal crime.

Included under the law would be: driver's licenses, Alcohol Beverage Commission identification cards, and student ID's. The law states that anyone who, "knowingly and without lawful authority produces (the term 'produce' includes alter, authenticate, or assemble) or knowingly posesses with intent to use unlawfully shall suffer a punishment of a fine of not more than $25,000 or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both."

The Act also sets penalties for holding more than five cards (intent to distribute) and makes it an offense for all order look-a-like ID's not to have a disclaimer stating on both the front and back "NOT A GOVERNMENT DOCUMENT". The punishment for each crime is: not more than a $15,000 fine, and/or three years in prison; and not more than a $1,000 fine, and/or one year in prison, respectively.

Although the LSO does not know of any UMass student who has been charged under this law, it is possible that law enforcement officials could decide that the current Massachusetts law which calls for a fine of not more than $500, imprisonment in a state prison for not more than five years or in a jail or House of Correction for not more than two years is not as strong a deterrent as the federal law and could start prosecuting under the federal statutes.

"This is what worries me," DiMare concluded.

Petition could aid strikers

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

A petition to prohibit the availability of employment in the town of Amherst for the purpose of strikebreaking during labor disputes was discussed by former strikers at last night's Board of Selectmen meeting.

The petition, Article 78 of the town warrant, defines a strikebreaker as "one who takes the place of a worker who has left his/her work in an effort to force the employer to agree to demands." It will be voted on at Town Meeting which begins May 2.

"By taking measures towards this end, perhaps resolutions will be reached with more expediency," said petitioner Leslie Horner, noting that two strikes in Amherst in the past three years have been prolonged by strikebreakers.

"People undercutting prolong strikes...(their working) takes away power in the fight for benefits," said Mary Erin Crook, a former employee of Gnomon Copy which had a labor dispute last year.

"(Strikebreaking) sets a precedent where the employer doesn't deal fairly with the employees and (it) prolongs the dispute," said Carl Meyer, an Amherst Nursing Home employee who was involved in a labor dispute at the home last year.

In other business, the Board heard petition for Article 26 of the warrant to appropriate $60,000 for a study of the accumulation of silt over many years at Puffer's Pond. The study, which will include an analysis of pollutants in the pond, will "determine whether there is reason to go for a grant...to improve the pond itself, rather than let it fill in and become stagnant," Leigh Andrews of the Conservation Commission.

The $60,000 sum is the potential estimate for the cost of hiring an engineering firm to perform the study. Of that sum, $42,000 would be appropriated by the state and the town would be responsible for the remaining $18,000. However, the University of Massachusetts Department of Environmental Science may qualify as a bid for the project, having proposed a $16,000 fee of which the town would be expected to provide $5,500.

Petitioner Andrew Blase of the Amherst Committee on El Salvador, which is requesting the town "to direct the Board of Selectmen to advise the Town's Congressional Representatives that the town opposes any form of military or economic aid on behalf of the present government," spoke in favor of his motion.

"(Our aid dollars) are going to support a government that's going to fall," he said. "If it falls we don't want American troops there...especially from our town. We need a statement to bolster this important message to the President and Congress."

Additionally, Sunday, June 12 was declared "Flag Recognition Day" by the Board and will be celebrated by Flag Day ceremonies by the Northampton Lodge of Elks and a Flag Day Parade. Saturday, April 23 was also approved as Town Cleanup Day.

Consulting firm begins study

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Last week a private consulting firm began a study of administration and finance at the University of Massachusetts that is part of a 9-month assessment of the campus' budget and administrative organizations.

The study is being conducted by Klaudis and Associates, a consulting firm based in Nashville that specializes in administrative, financial and executive management, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey said Monday.

"They'll be looking at administrative and financial management," Duffey said. The group will make its study in April and will submit a final report in May, Duffey said.

The 9-month assessment of administration and finance at UMass was announced in February along with the appointment of John L. DeNyse as permanent vice chancellor for that area.

DeNyse said yesterday that he will examine the Klaudis report before continuing with his review of the area.

Last month DeNyse announced that Paul J. Page will serve as acting director of the Office of Planning and Budget while that office's director Marie M. Reid is on special assignment at the UMass School of Education.

While heading the budget office, Page will continue to direct the Office of Financial Affairs as he has since 1980. Financial Affairs includes the departments of procurement, accounting, property and inventory control, and the Bursar's offices at UMass.

"It's going to be a strain," Page said of running both areas. He said he plans to rely heavily on the staff in both areas to assure that functions continue to run smoothly until Reid's return, he said yesterday.

DeNyse also announced the planned retirement of Physical Plant Director George A. Norton.

"I have been associated with George for many years, and have valued his judgement in dealing with the large physical plant here at the University," DeNyse said of the 17-year UMass employee. "He has done a very good job under often trying conditions of inadequate budgets and aging facilities."

Norton plans to take accrued leave before his retirement begins in January. DeNyse said he hopes to appoint a new director within the next few months to assure a smooth transition.

Graduate students request their senate to approve funds for teach-in on issues

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate last night was addressed by Joel Kaye, a graduate history student. Kaye, along with a group of about 20 other students from various departments, are in the process of organizing a "teach-in" on American foreign policy.

According to Kaye, the teach-in will be a day of panel discussions and debates on different facets of U.S. foreign policy including relations with Central America, U.S.-Soviet superpower confrontation and the nuclear freeze arms control issues.

"The teach-in will serve to get students' minds open to the legitimacy of dissent," Kaye said.

The teach-in will present speakers on both sides of the issues, Kaye added.

The teach-in will also include a series of films on the issues.

The organizers hope to get such speakers as Congressman Edward Markey (D-Ma.), and Roberta Manning, a Soviet expert at Boston University.

Kaye's request for funding for the event from the senate was deferred until details of the day's speakers and events were more certain. Senate Treasurer Paul Weiss offered the finance committee's help in organizing the day's event.

Kaye intends to seek funding from other campus sources, including the Distinguished Visitor's Program, to finance the May 7 event.

In other business, the senate passed its budget for fiscal year 1984.

The $197,714 budget's largest allocation is the $70,350 for the UMass Transit Service. This allocation is based on a $21 fee per graduate student that the senate previously agreed to in a contract which raises fees gradually from $15 to $22 by 1985.

The senate will also fund $42,859 to the Legal Services Office. Legal services is funded one quarter from the Graduate Senate and three quarters from the Student Government Association.

The senate also announced it will sponsor "aid to the unemployed" day one week from Friday across from the Credit Union in the Student Union. Proceeds from this fundraiser will go to the Franklin County Council of the Unemployed.

Nudity and vulgarity are seen as form of protest and expression by professor

By ABBY BULKLEY
Collegian Correspondent

Nudity and vulgarity have been used effectively as forms of passive protest and hostile expression in cultures ranging from West Africa to the United States, according to Shirley Ardener, Professor of Social Anthropology and Chair of the Women's Study Program at Oxford University in England.

"Removing clothes is an effective way to make other people uncomfortable and angry," Ardener said during her lecture "Nudity, Vulgarity and Protest" last night at Mount Holyoke College.

"There's no need to fear retaliation in kind because the result would be ludicrous," Ardener said.

Incidents of nudity and vulgarity occurred in societies in which the women usually behaved according to a moral custom, where there was a general passivity and lack of social expression or aggression, Ardener said.

Just as clothes are a form of communication and status, "nudity is a language accessible to those who are powerless or whose identity has been threatened," she said. There are few instances where nude protest must be planned to be effective, and it is applicable to all situations.

In West African societies nudity and vulgar dances were used by women to shame anyone who had insuled a woman's sexuality or private parts, Ardener said. The Doukhobours, a religious Russian sect which emigrated to Canada at the turn of the century used nude parades so effectively that a special "D Force" of the Royal Canadian Mounties was created to control them.

Ardener said the "mooning" incidents of the 1950's and 1960's related to this need for a repressed group or person to express outrage, citing an Iowa college case where the women who were confined in their dorms regularly "mooned" the men who were not. She also said the "burn your bra" movement of the women's liberation movement was a way for women to demonstrate their identity and anger at the repression of their gender.

Psychiatrists and psychologists have tried to explain these occurrences in terms of aberrations and deviations, but in many historical cases it was simply a hostile act, Ardener said. "Streaking occurred during Vietnam when many men felt powerless," she said. The community and media tried to treat it as a joke, psychologists tried to redefine it, but the norm was repudiated by this non-violent statement.

Overseas study program offers variety

By JEAN AMARAL
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's note: Part one of a two part series.

The overseas study program at the University of Massachusetts offers many opportunities for continuing education abroad, in several countries and at any time of the year, fall or spring semester, intersession, or summer. International programs during the summer include those in France, Spain, and Portugal.

To improve fluency in a foreign language, students often travel to France, Spain or Portugal. According to Melanie Jackson, assistant director of the French program at the University of Dijon in France, students are accepted from many colleges in both Europe and America. Jackson said students study the French language and literature at their own level of ability.

"The language courses emphasize oral and written French, and all are taught by native speakers," she stated. Topics of other courses include civilization, history, and culture. Jackson pointed out that students do not just study; they also participate in social events such as receptions, sports events and parties. The cost is approximately $800, which covers tuition and housing, Ms. Jackson explained. Also covered in the fee are excursions to historical and cultural sights. Jackson emphasized that the program is still accepting students for this summer's program. There will be a meeting for all interested students in mid-April.

The director of the summer program at the Colegio de Espana in Salamanca, Spain said that this university was one of the first established in the world, being founded around the year 1320. Prof. F. Fernandez-Turienzo said that this program "offers students the opportunity to come in contact with Spanish and European culture."

There are two programs at Salamanca, according to Professor Fernandez, one is for students interested in the Spanish language and the other for those students interested in literature. Professor Fernandez recommended that students have taken at least two semesters of college Spanish before attending the university, because all classes are conducted in Spanish by native speakers. Students receive six credits for participating in the program.

He also added that Salamanca is especially suited for studying Spanish heritage because many famous Spanish artists and writers have worked there.

The University of Lisbon in Portugal offers students the opportunity to increase their knowledge of the language and the culture of the country. The director of the program, Francisco Fagundes, said the students have been "very, very positive" about their experience at the university. Lisbon is the capital of Portugal and "the cultural and entertainment center of the country...the place to go in Portugal", according to Professor Fagundes.

Fagundes said students enjoyed meeting with other students from all over the world who were also interested in the Portugese language. This program also has three entry levels and Professor Fagundes stated that all students must take an entry exam to ensure placement in the appropriate level.

He also pointed out that there are scholarships available to students "who show a genuine interest for the language and culture of Portugal or Brazil." A student's academic record is also taken into consideration when he or she is applying for these scholarships which are provided by the Portuguese government.

For more information on any of these three programs, students should contact the individual departments and ask for the directors named in this article. The program at Trinity College in Oxford, England and the one at Hokaida university in Sappora, Japan will be presented in an article in tomorrow's Collegian.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Debate on General Education

Academic freedom lost?

Prof. Glen Gordon

A reasonable approach to curriculum reform is, I think, based upon the following presuppositions:

1. The present distribution requirements are too loose and chaotic and have not been adequately justified. So many courses fulfill "C", "D" and "E" requirements that there is no general education "core" at this University.

2. Any major curriculum reform will require major new resources and/or an extensive reallocation of existing resources. We cannot be confident that new resources will be forthcoming. Nor is it prudent to insist on extensive reallocation at a time when many majors are heavily overenrolled, when the University is embarking on a new writing program and when the University has already engaged in substantial reallocations stemming from the Administration's commitments to the high technology sectors of the campus.

3. Any general education curriculum must recognize that there is no consensus on this campus as to what constitutes an "educated" person. The present distribution requirements, anarchic though they may be, live comfortably with this reality. While we want to move towards a more coherent core, we must avoid an overzealous commitment to particular courses or criteria and we must avoid an overzealous commitment to particular courses or criteria and we must build some choice and flexibility into our requirements.

The new curriculum proposed by the Ad Hoc Committee on General Education, runs into severe difficulties by failing to take these presuppositions into account.

The new Breadth of Knowledge categories are even more difficult to apply than the old "C", "D" and "E". How and who distinguishes an "individual" course from "societies" course. The difficulty of making these distinctions will lead to countless petitions for exceptions destined to drive CASIAC counselors mad.

Not only are the Breadth of Knowledge categories exceedingly difficult to apply but the criteria listed under each category are greatly in need of improvement. These criteria are often based upon a philosophically naive and even dangerous sociology of knowledge. To use but one example, the section on Societies and Institutions asserts that "the social arrangements characteristic of one's immediate social milieu often seem 'natural'; and sometimes they are perceived as 'superior' to those of other groups or societies. They are neither. That point must be communicated by every Breadth of Knowledge course in this area."

If I am teaching a comparative politics course on the United States and Germany, I must be free to argue that the Nazi regime was an evil one compared to ours. It will not do to insist that Hitler was no better or worse than FDR; that he was just a product of a culture with a somewhat unusual aversion to Jews. It is one thing to be sensitive to the problem of ethnocentrism. It is quite another matter to insist that all value questions are relative and that it is impossible to make moral distinctions. This is cultural relativism run wild and it deprives us all of one of the fundamental purposes of general education — to strive to understand the good as well as the true.

Finally, there is the question of the content of the breadth of knowledge courses. The Ad Hoc Committee seems to be committed to the magic of interdisciplinary study. The Committee is hostile to any teaching which deals "solely with politics, or with literature, or with economics," or any such discipline. As Professor Mainzer notes in his memorandum to the Faculty Senate:

> The committee seems to believe that not only is the faculty committed to their departments but that "their teaching continued to center on the training of specialists in their own field." But do most arts and sciences faculty really perceive of their undergraduates as apprentice professionals who simply require specialized "training"? I think not. Certainly an undergraduate major in psychology is not a psychologist. One of the great virtues of being at a large university is the opportunity it provides for students in professional disciplines like engineering and business administration to broaden their education by coming in contact with highly qualified faculty in the liberal arts disciplines. It will not do to portray these departments and disciplines as the enemies of general education when in fact they are its greatest resource.

The Ad Hoc Committee has worked hard and diligently but unfortunately they have produced a curriculum which demands an ideological purity which threatens academic freedom; which is imprudent in its use of resources; and which is overly rigid in its requirementss. We can use some of their insights, we can build upon what they have done, but we cannot accept this proposal without extensive reexamination and revision.

Prof. Glen Gordon is Chairperson of the Political Science Department

Issue is one of priorities

Prof. Charles Hutchinson

For the past two years General Education has been a topic of considerable discussion within the UMass community. This discussion and debate is part of a larger one occurring throughout the nation. Curriculum improvement is, and undoubtedly should be, an item for continuous discussion in any academic community such as ours. It is important to view the current debate as simply part of that continuum.

The Faculty Senate appointed an Ad Hoc Committee in the Spring of 1981 with the following charge:

> 1. Study and evaluate the present undergraduate curriculum with special attention to the first two years of the curriculum and to the distribution requirements;
> 2. Identify weaknesses, deficiencies and ambiguities in the present academic regulation, if any;
> 3. Develop a proposal for modifications of the curriculum designed to enhance the quality of general education of undergraduates.

That Ad Hoc Committee presented a preliminary proposal in May 1982 and a Final Report in February 1983.

Disposition of that report with its findings and recommendations has been the topic of the last four Faculty Senate meetings and will again be a major topic at the senate meeting this week.

In the discussions with students and faculty over the past two years the Committee identified three primary issues upon which there was clear consensus.

1. The current distribution requirement lacks a clear rationale and specific criteria for courses that satisfy the requirement. This has led to a proliferation of courses and confusion as to how best to choose courses for a coherent program.

2. The quality of undergraduate education would be significantly enhanced by more faculty/student interaction early in the student's program. Students spoke often of a need for enhanced advising, for example.

3. Faculty are convinced that their reward system is such that emphasis on undergraduate education is not in their best interest. Some even go so far as to say that such an emphasis places them "at peril" for promotion and tenure.

It is these issues that led the Committee to propose the program included in the Final Report.

In addressing the first issue, that of the current distribution requirement, the Committee proposed a Breadth of Knowledge component and a Quantitative Reasoning requirement. The Breadth of Knowledge component contains six areas; Continuity and Change, Expressive Culture, The Individual, Societies and Institutions, The Biological World, and The Physical World. Rationale and initial guidelines for courses in these areas are included in the Committee's report. Further, in addressing this same issue the Committee proposed that the Senate establish a General Education Council and charge it with the responsibility for the ongoing process of improving General Education on the campus.

A Freshman Seminar was proposed as a way of addressing the second issue — faculty/student interaction. If a concern is such interaction, what better way exists to address that issue than to place students and faculty together at a 20:1 ration in a "seminar" environment? A Junior/Senior Seminar was also proposed as a way of further addressing this same issue. The portion of the Committee's report is the most controversial on the grounds of both philosophy and resources. There is a danger that experiences of this type can lack rigor, and that must not happen. If faculty/student interaction is to be increased it has to be at some cost.

The issue then becomes one of priorities. The charge to the Committee from the senate was clear in that regard ". . . enhance the quality of general education of undergraduates."

The remaining issue (the faculty reward system) is more difficult to deal with as it is not always clear what is real and what is perception.

It is clear that the perception as stated above is real and widespread. The Ad Hoc Committee discussed this issue at length. There are no easy answers. However the recommendations made should improve the situation; recognition of faculty activity by the Administration, and recognition of the importance of General Education by the senate.

The report of the Committee is extensive, complex, and comprehensive. It is not perfect as there is no perfect curriculum. It is, however, designed to present and address the primary issues raised by faculty and students on this campus.

We have presented them to the Faculty Senate and and the two student senates for their consideration in that spirit.

Charles Hutchinson is Chair of the Faculty Senate Ad Hoc Committee on General Ed.

TIPS gets info for students

To the Editor:

According to the Information Data Bank article in Monday's Collegian, if we do not have the information a student needs in the IDB/TIPS files, Associate Dean of Students Robert Brooks "charges" students to get it. This is not true.

The IDB staff is "charged" with the responsibility of finding information not readily available, and returning a call to the student who needs it. There is no monetary charge for IDB/TIPS services.

Law student relates experiences at King memorial banquet

By TRACY ROBBINS
Collegian Staff

Last night, the Martin Luther King Week Planning Committee in conjunction with Chancellor Joseph Duffy, sponsored a banquet in memory of the 15th anniversary of the assassination of the famed civil rights leader, Martin Luther King.

The keynote address was made by Muhammad Kenyatta, President of the Harvard Law School Black Student Association.

Kenyatta began his speech by telling of his experiences within the Harvard Law School Association. "The recent situation involving the appointment of Jack Greenberg to instruct a class at the law school was simply a microcosm of many similar situations at schools all over the country," he said.

This was in reference to the 1982 boycott staged by minority students of Harvard in objection to Greenberg's appointment to teach a course that historically has been taught by a black professor.

"We felt that the affirmative action plan had been ignored. The excuse was given that an overly qualified white man was better suited than a mediocre black," Kenyatta said.

"The school (Harvard) shows no interest in either adding minority faculty or giving tenure to those faculty members already holding positions," he said.

"It is important to realize that the agenda and interest of black students does not necessarily concur with that of the agenda and interest of white students," Kenyatta said.

Kenyatta also added that our responsibility is to move ahead with our desires and needs.

"The struggle for the desegregation of our schools is important because it mirrors the wishes of many students," he said.

Believing that the children educated today are not fools is Kenyatta's goal. He holds a long record of public service and plans to return to teaching after graduating from Harvard's Law School.

Citing the low levels of self-esteem of black students, he said, "There is a crisis of confidence among black students, this results from the situation of alienation of being a marginal minority."

"I am inspired that through the practicums of struggle students are learning, and I am proud to contribute to a society in which humanity is in scarce premium but great demand," he said.

Kenyatta was introduced by his longtime friend and colleague, Bill Strickland, University of Massachusetts Professor of Afro-American studies.

"Muhammad embodies every aspect of Martin's legacy in his work," said Strickland in his introductory speech.

The Martin Luther King Week Planning Committee and Professor Stephen Oates of the History Department both received awards from UMass Chancellor Duffy.

"Oates' book, 'Let the Trumpet Sound', is a biography of King that has helped to keep alive the legacy of King," Duffy said.

"No one has a history unless they comprehend and take hold of it, and the work of Martin Luther King has helped us to clear our eyes of the past and open them to the present and future," the Chancellor said.

Fear campaign waged to justify social security cuts

By MANNING MARABLE
Collegian Correspondent

The limited success achieved by the Democratic Party in last year's Congressional elections was in no small measure due to the public's general fears about Social Security cutbacks. In the worst-kept political secret in recent years, virtually everyone in Washington understood that Reaganites were going to target Social Security in the 1983 Congress for massive reductions. Repeatedly, almost monotonously, the White House and GOP leaders denied piously that Social Security was not in jeopardy.

Within twenty-four hours after the mid-term elections, however, Republican leaders made a 180 degree turn. Politicians delcared that the basic old age and survivors benefits (OASI) is now confronted with massive financing problems. Social Security would be bankrupt in a matter of months, we were told. The media joined in the campaign to terrorize the public, and was so effective that by December most American workers under 45 expressed the view that they would not be able to obtain Social Security benefits when they are scheduled to retire. The only hope was to drastically weaken the amount of benefits to the elderly.

Robert Beck, an insurance company executive and an influential member of the National Commission on Social Security Reform, explained to the press: "This country has become far too dependent on Social Security. We must reduce that dependence by encouraging individual saving and the expansion of private pension plans." Typical of the hypocritical hysteria promoted by the Right were the views of columnist William F. Buckley: "Suppose you were to tax everyone in America 44 percent of his salary — this in addition to the taxes he is already paying. What do you say to that proposal? But that is exactly how much tax Americans would need to pay by the year 2035 if current arrangements concerning Social Security prevail. The (Democrats) treat any suggestions about modifying Social Security benefits as if President Reagan, paintbrush in hand, was setting out to touch up the Mona Lisa."

So much for the fiction. What are the facts about Social Security?

The first fact is to admit the obvious: Social Security, for the next decade, is in serious fiscal trouble — but there are simple ways to finance the existing system without restructuring it for at least another 40 years.

Originally, Social Security was established as a self-financing agency. OASI's money comes from employer and employee payroll taxes. Medicare hospitalization insurance and disability insurance are operated from different funds. In recent years OASI's trust fund has been running short of money to pay out retirement benefits for two simple reasons: the ratio of workers to retired persons has dropped, because the elderly are living longer, and because the U.S. economy has been in a "recession state", on-and-off, since 1973. That's the bad news — but the good news is that by 1990 or so,a new generation of workers will flood the labor force, pumping in billions of dollars into the Social Security fund. The real crisis will not occur now, but in about four decades. Meanwhile, for the next seven years or so, Social Security's OASI requires roughly $150 billion. Where is the money going to come from?

Liberal politicians urge that the funds be obtained from the general revenue, or income taxes. Conservative Democrats, including the House Ways and Means chair Dan Rostenkowski, and almost all Republicans, attack the suggestion as dangerous and unsound. Instead of raising new funds, they propose to slash old age benefits. And the only way they can carry out "Reaganomics" within Social Security is to wage an unprincipled scare campaign across the nation.

Duke Ellington Committee welcomes Evelyn King

On Thursday, April 21, the Duke Ellington Committee and UPC Productions proudly presents the captivating sounds of Evelyn King at the Fine Arts Center, UMass-Amherst.

Evelyn first hit the charts and airwaves in 1977 with the smash hit single "Shame" on her debut album, Smooth Talk. After this meteoric success, Evelyn's career continued to grow. She went on tour with the Fabulous O'Jays, and made several guest appearances on such shows as the Dick Clark Show, Don Kirshner's Rock Concert and The Midnight Special.

In 1979, Evelyn was selected to perform at the White House as part of President Carter's Tribute to Black Music in which she wooed the entire audience.

Evelyn has performed throughout the world, including stops in Paris (where she not only captured the hearts of her audience, but also the media whom she completely enthralled with her, as one reporter put it, "joie di vivre"), Venezuela, Jamaica, the Philippines and throughout Canada. At the ripe old age of 22, Evelyn King is far from the end of the road.

Evelyn's latest album, Get Loose, with the hit single, "Love Come Down", is certified gold and still on the charts. Evelyn now has three gold albums and twice as many gold singles to her credit, and the list will continue to grow.

Appearing with Evelyn King will be Soulsonic Force, a serious source of funky R 'n' B.

This will be Evelyn King's first area appearance, and it will prove to be one of the funkiest extravaganzas to appear in the Valley in some years.

Fast-rising singing star Evelyn King is to appear at the Fine Arts Center on Thursday, April 21.

U2's War: an album for a world in conflict

U2
WAR (Island)

By JIM FEIN
Collegian Staff

U2: post-punk optimism

Since their first album Boy was released three years ago, U2 has received rave responses from both critics and audiences alike, establishing them as one of the best post-punk bands of the eighties. This was quite an achievement because their music rarely received airplay. This lack of exposure was probably due to the fact that their music was different and not easily classified; a unique brand of rock and roll, with songs ranging from slow and mellow, to fast, energetic and enthusiastic.

War, U2's third album, has a musical style similar to that of their first two albums. The difference, however, lies in the increased social awareness of the lyrics. War concerns itself not only with war, but with love and peace as well. Some excellent lyrics, combined with infectious music, make this the band's most important work to date, re-establishing their position as the best new band of the eighties.

U2 are Bono (lead vocals), The Edge (guitar), Adam Clayton (bass), and Larry Mullen (drums). The instruments compliment each other well, while leaving plenty of room for Bono to use his excellent singing voice. They are essentially a group of optimists, who view the world and its problems in a positive light. The band showed their special ability to create a specific atmosphere with their music, and then add appropriate, convincing lyrics on Boy and October. This album is no exception.

The opening song, "Sunday Bloody Sunday," starts the album off in fine fashion. Set to the beat of a militaristic drum, the song insists the political and social problems of Northern Ireland must not be ignored, while condemning violence and senseless deaths:

I can't believe the news today,
I can't close my eyes and make it go away.
.....
I won't heed the battle call,
It puts my back up against the wall.
.....
There's many lost but tell me who has won.

"Seconds," a slow paced song set to a bass lead, considers the horrible possibility of nuclear blackmail, while "Like a Song" concerns the essence of the punk rock movement.

The album also contains some good love songs. "Drowning Man" features acoustic guitar and a distinct Irish sound courtesy of electric violin. "40" is a very spiritual song, with slow bass and drums, and pretty, choir-like background vocals, which create a transcendent type of atmosphere. "Two Hearts Beat as One" is an up-beat, catchy song with a dance orientated beat.

An overly optimistic viewpoint on the unfortunate plight of a refugee woman is given in "Refugee." "Surrender," which depicts late night city life, has a certain mood that does wonders in helping the listener imagine the setting.

The best song on the album though, unquestionably, is "New Year's Day," an acknowledgement of the Solidarity movement in Poland. Musically, this song is a gem. Haunting piano and bass, scratchy-staccato guitar (a great guitar solo by The Edge), and superlative singing by Bono, give this song a sad, yet desperate tone.

The negative aspects of this album are few. "Red Light" is a love song that experiments with trumpet and special background vocals (by non-band members) and is the album's only bad song. The lack of a complete lyric sheet, and the mumbled lyrics of "40" are the only other bad points of this album.

Overall, this is an excellent record, similar in sound to U2's previous work, and containing some very relevant social statements. I recommend it highly to everyone.

Lou Reed: singing out of key

Lou's legendary heart

Reed's new album is for fans only

LEGENDARY HEARTS
(RCA Records)
Lou Reed

By WILLIAM PYNE
Collegian Correspondent

Did you ever have to make up your mind? As a result of listening to Lou Reed's latest album Legendary Hearts, I had to. Not being too familiar with the music of this man made it difficult for me to decide whether or not I enjoy this particular LP. At first listen, I wasn't too pleased with the album, but after a while it started to grow on me. Lou Reed has a unique style of singing — singing out of key — but we musn't hold this against him as that is what makes him Lou Reed.

The title song "Legendary Hearts" is fine musical composition whose lyrics describe an idealistic lover that supposedly stands out above the rest. This lover it turns out, is just an ordinary person like you and I. One of my favorite songs on the album, "Martial Law," speaks of a confident person that would rather declare martial law than deal directly with people to help them solve their problems. Another song on this album that appeals to me is "Pow Wow." I get the impression that Lou Reed wants to dance with me. Listen to this song yourself and see if you can decipher its meaning. Finally, try to picture yourself in a seemingly down and out bar in Flagstaff, Arizona way out in the middle of nowhere. The bar is filled with smoke that hangs heavy in the air and you're slowly on your way to becoming inebriated. Next, flip to side B of Legendary Hearts and listen to "Home of the Brave." I think that the last two items I spoke of go together like rum and Coke. Needless to say, "Home of the Brave" is a slow ballad, the kind you dance to with your girlfriend or boyfriend.

Thus, Lou Reed's Legendary Hearts is a mediocre album. I wouldn't rate it excellent nor would I go to the other extent by terming it poor. If you happen to be partial to the music of Lou Reed by all means go out and buy it, but if you haven't associated yourself with the music of Lou Reed, borrow this album and judge for yourself.

Hoop tourney in retrospect

By ELLIOT KALB
Collegian Staff

The 1983 NCAA College Basketball Championship Tournament has been most unusual. After a year of playing with experimental shot clocks and 3-point plays, coaches have been forced to go back to play without shot clocks, or the 3 pointer. The Final Four featured two teams everyone thought would be in Alberquerque (Louisville and Houston) — and two surprise teams — Georgia and North Carolina State. Here are my impressions of the tournament.

BEST GAME — Although I am not a particular fan of either team, Louisville-Arkansas played a great game. Darrell Walker and the Razorbacks really gave Denny Crum's Cardinals all they could handle before a final tip in by Rodney McRae pulled it out for the Cardinals 64-62.

WORST GAME — North Carolina State-Utah. This one was on ESPN at 1:30 on tape delay; one deserves a special medal of hoop addiction if they stayed up to watch this one.

WORST CLICHE — The CBS people persist on calling the Houston fronteourt, "Phi Slamma Jamma". O.K., it was funny the first time I heard it, but enough is enough. CBS's fraternity could be called "Phi Bulla Shitta".

LEAST AMOUNT OF CLASS FROM SOMEONE YOU WOULDN'T EXPECT TO BE CLASSLESS — John Pinone, Villanova after saying that Houston center Akeem Olujiouan was not an intimidating center or the difference in the ballgame.

BEST TEAM NOT TO MAKE THE FINAL FOUR — For some mysterious reason, St. John's. Lou Carnesseca will never have a better team than this year's squad.

BEST BAR IN AMHERST TO CALL IF YOU ABSOLUTELY POSITIVELY HAVE TO HAVE A TOURNAMENT SCORE IMMEDIATELY — The Drake.

BEST NCAA TOURNAMENT BROADCASTER — Billy Packer.

WORST NCAA TOURNAMENT BROADCASTER — ESPN's Dick Vitale.

BEST SHOWING BY A TEAM THAT CAME WITHIN A LAST SECOND SHOT BY JOHN HEMPEL OF LOSING IN THE CURRY HICKS CAGE THIS SEASON — Rutgers strong showing against St. John's in the Eastern Regional.

Some NCAA final thoughts

By RUSS WHINNEM
Collegian Staff

In the end you could take all of Houston's flash, all their rejections, all their dunks, and stuff 'em. North Carolina State truly was a team of destiny.

Here are some lasting impressions of not one of the best played NCAA finals but one of the most exciting:

— Watching the first eight minutes and wondering if I had ever seen a worse shooting display in an NCAA title game.

— Waiting patiently (okay, not so patiently) for Phi Slamma Jamma's first dunk and finally getting it from Akeem, then expecting more any moment and seeing it never happen.

— Watching N.C. State coach Jim Valvano, who has become America's coach, every chance I got. He's just one of those guys that you never get tired of watching.

— Marvelling, along with the rest of the free world, at Mr. (emphasis on the Mr.) Olajuwon. Akeem would finish with 20 points, 18 rebounds, and 8 blocked shots. In the final three tourney games he compiled over 50 points, 50 rebounds, and 20 rejections. He simply made people forget Pat Ewing and ask the question, Ralph who?

— Expecting Wittenburg's desperation bomb to be picked off by some Cougar and the game to go into overtime, only to see Lorenzo Charles become a hero. It's amazing how time seems to stop in that type of situation.

— Taking in perhaps the most telling part of these games, the emotion afterwards. After seeing Valvano leaping atop his players, one realizes why the guy is so easily identified with.

— Then, down the other end, seeing the Houston players walking, sitting, or lying down in shock. Akeem is staring into space. Another Houstan player lies under basket pounding the floor with his fist.

It was supposed to be the ballad of Phi Slamma Jamma. It was supposed to be Clyde's glide and Akeem's dream. It was supposed to be...It is North Carolina State's championship.

Gorillas face Cornell

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

The real season for the men's lacrosse team at the University of Massachusetts begins today, as Cornell University takes the field at 3 p.m. to do battle with the local laxmen. Cornell, currently ranked 5th in the national poll, will be playing Dick Garber's 30th squad for UMass. The Gorillas's have been ranked 7th in the nation after their 11-4 victory over a tough Hobart College squad Saturday at Boyden field.

This will be the first opportunity for all Gorilla fans to attend a home lacrosse game since last weekend when Hobart visited was a holiday weekend and most students were not around.

Even without a full campus the Gorilla's were able to draw over 5500 in the Hobart game and so with ideal weather conditions being predicted, a large turnout is expected for today's game.

Defensively, the Gorilla's will be looking for strong performances from John Mincone, Barry Broadwell, and Barry Kane, a defensive unit which held a surging Hobart offense to just four goals in four periods in the season opener.

Offensively, UMass will once again be looking to assert itself with a balanced scoring attack. Saturday UMass was able to pick up two goals apiece from Greg Fisk, Chris Schmitz, and Mike Fiorini.

Boyden Field, which has throughout the years been known as a haven for the local team, will once again be expected to be filled well in advance of game time.

The Gorilla's, who face one of the most challenging schedules of any Division I lacrosse team in the nation, can only move up in the rankings with a victory over Cornell.

UMass scoring:
Goals: Greg Fisk, Chris Schmitz, Michael Fiorini (2); Tim Cutler, Peter Martino, Rich Messina, Paul Fogarty and Thomas Lukacovic(1).
Assists: Cutler, Martino, Messina, Fogarty, Karl Hatton, James Goodhart(1).

Tennis has high hopes

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

The next time you walk past the Upper Boyden Tennis courts (located behind Goodell Library) look closely. You just might see the outline of a huge smile.

It is there for good reason. For this smile is for the 1983 edition of the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team, undoubtedly one fo the strongest ever assembled on this campus.

Tennis talk around the courts expresses not just plain old-fashioned optimism for the upcoming campaign, but goes deeper into dreams of undefeated seasons, Atlantic 10 Championships, and top five finishes in the New England Championships.

Don't laugh. The squad won eight of ten matches in the fall, including victories over highly-regarded Albany State and Boston University, and according to coach Bob Szlosek, all members returned fit and dandy, both mentally and physically.

"There is a lot more confidence in the key individual players and the team as a unit," says Szlosek. "They're continuing, at this point, to play aggressive tennis. They're hitting the ball, where a year ago, no one was hitting, they were pushing, hoping the other guy was going to make an error."

The top five players will remain the same from the fall. Neal Mackertich, the lone senior, will return at number one singles, followed, in order, by Steve Jordan, Stuart Goodman, Nick Julian, and Rich Lindgren.

But the lineup is not set in stone. "I expect a lot of movement," said Szlosek, adding, "it's going to change, I have a feeling, back to where it was in the fall (which had Mackertich number one, followed by Julian, Goodman, Jordan, and Lindgren). On a day-to-day basis it's going to change."

The number six singles slot is as yet undetermined. Szlosek is hopeful someone will emerge from a large field that includes Dave Salem, Dave Singer, Mark Gelinas, and Mike Duseau.

Here are the key players:

NEAL MACKERTICH: The Big Mac Attack was 9-1 in individual play last fall (his only loss came at the hands of Army's Ted Wilson) and is beginning his third consecutive spring as the Minutemen's number one singles player. Hailing from Westfield, MA Mackertich is considered one of the top players in New England Collegiate tennis, along with being the best netman in the Atlantic 10. He will journey to France this summer to begin a pro career.

"I think Neal can go undefeated. He's hitting the ball real well. I keep looking for the tiger in the guy, he can win by just outlasting people," said Szlosek. "He's hitting his backhand more than slicing it. It's become a weapon, instead of a shot the other guy is going to make an error on. The backhand is going by people and it makes his slice backhand more effective.

"Neal is deceptively quick on his feet and has fast hands at the net. I'll go on record as saying that I think he is going to win the Atlantic 10 Championship," said Szlosek.

STEVE JORDAN: He has risen from number four in the fall to number two. The key? "Steadiness," says Szlosek. "Last fall he started to let people push him around. So far this spring he's not letting people push him around. He's holding his ground and playing his tennis. He's playing a bit smarter."

STUART GOODMAN: From Pittsburgh, PA and only a freshman, Goodman was 8-2 in the fall. He now holds down the third singles spot.

"He's good and he's going to get a helluva lot better. Right now he's a decent number two, a great number three, or a phenomenal number four," said Szlosek of his prize recruit. "He's got a lot of everything you need. Nothing is really outstanding and nothing is weak. He's got good foot speed, good quickness, a good serve, good concentration, plus he's got size and some power. Add it all up, and it's solid. He'll be one of the top players in New England the next three years."

NICK JULIAN: When Mackertich was injured last spring, Julian stepped in and played number one singles for several matches. A steady player with a big forehand, Julian's fall to number four is only considered temporary.

"With a couple of days of good weather, Nick can put his game together and really roll. I'm not worried about Nick. This will make Nick more tenacious. He'll definitely make a run for number two," said Szlosek.

In the doubles, the expected teams are Mackertich-Julian, Jordan-Lindgren, (7-0 in the fall, including a dramatic win at BU after surviving triple match point) and Goodman will be matched with Gelinas, Duseau, or Salem.

Although the schedule has three tough matches in the first week (Thursday vs. Vermont, Saturday vs. Boston College and Monday vs. Rhode Island, all at home) am undefeated season is anticipated. One reason is that seven of the nine dual matches are in Amherst.

"It's going to be great. We're going to stay here and play on our courts and be used to our wind," said Szlosek. "It's just murder when you have to get out of the van two or three times. Everybody is coming here, so it works out real well."

As mentioned, the squad will begin Thursday against the University of Vermont. Last fall the Minutemen edged the Catamounts 5-4 in Burlington, VT.

Szlosek states: "Our goals are these: We want to improve on last spring's record (3-4), we want to win the Atlantic 10, we want to finish top five in the New England's and we want to beat every team that beat us a year ago."

Softball team is a big winner

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

There are various words that could describe yesterday's bone-chilling University of Massachusetts — Keene State softball game. One is blowout, others are romp, wipeout, slaughter, and annihilation.

In the numbing cold with a nasty wind, UMass disposed of division II Keene St. 13-0. Southpaw Lynn Stockley, in raising her record to 4-1, tossed a one hitter and struck out eight.

UMass pounded out 16 hits and went through the entire batting order in the second, third and fifth innings.

"It's rough to come down and play a game like this after a doubleheader with Rutgers," said head coach Elaine Sortino. "The thing I liked about the game was the kids maintained their intensity level. They didn't fall asleep."

Sortino also made some lineup changes in the game, putting freshman catcher Beth Talbott behind the plate for some college catching experience. Regular catcher Jackie Gaw took the day off from behind the plate and handled the DH duties.

It wasn't a particularly exciting game although the UMass offense did their best, hitting the stuffings out of the ball to entertain the few chilly fans.

In the second, the Minutemen rolled through the order highlighted by Talbott's two run shot up the third base line. In the third, the inning was sparked by Allyson Rioux's double, a shot to left.

It was a day to hit and hit and hit. Rioux went 3 for 3 with a double and 2 RBI. Gaw went 3 for 4 with a double and 3 RBI. Talbott (two doubles), Chris Coughlin and Debbie Pickett all went 2 for 4.

Next up for UMass is another doubleheader, this time with Atlantic 10 rival Rhode Island, in Kingston tomorrow at 2:30. URI has some young pitchers on their staff.

UMass only played one game with Keene because the New Hampshire team doesn't have a junior varsity team.

The UMass junior varsity won their second game of the year downing Keene St. (2nd stringers) by a 8-3 score. The JV Minutewomen were led by sophomore pitcher Krista Stanton who only gave up two hits while striking out 11. Stanton had a perfect game going into the fifth inning.

Offensively, second baseman Jackie Swist led the team with three hits and two runs. Janet Miller and Ellen Arcieri each added two hits to the winning cause. UMass, who defeated Smith 10-3 earlier this season, is undefeated.

UMass baseball victorious

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts baseball team, with a big five-run eighth inning, finally won a game in New England, defeating the University of Connecticut, 7-5, at UConn yesterday.

The game started slowly, with neither team scoring until UMass broke the ice with a run in the top of the third off of Huskies' starter, Ken Brown.

However, by the end of seven innings, UConn had scored three runs against Minuteman starter Bruce Emerson while the UMass offense had added only one more run, to leave the Minutemen trailing, 3-2.

The big blows of the inning were delivered by Dean Bennett and Chris Waszczuk. Bennett drove in two runs with a single while Waszczuk clobbered his fifth home run, a solo shot.

In the bottom of the ninth, UConn mounted a serious threat, scoring two runs and leaving the bases loaded. Reliever Matt Subocz ended the threat after walking in a run, but not without the help of a fine defensive play by third baseman Andy Connors to get the final out. Subocz earned a save, while Emerson, the converted shortstop, picked up his first victory of the year.

UMass is now 3-10. The Minutemen play a double-header this Saturday at New Hampshire.

Students gain input on SATF, SGA components of new Long Range Plan

By BILL WALL
Collegian Staff

As a result of a meeting Tuesday between student government leaders and top administrators, the section of the new Long-Range Plan for the University of Massachusetts dealing with the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) and the role of the Student Government Association (SGA) has been extensively modified and revised.

The original section of the Long-Range Plan was a source of concern for the SGA leadership because of "a lack of student input, negative rhetoric concerning student control of the SATF, the administration's desire to take control of the SATF, and their attempt to define the role of the SGA," said SGA co-president Tom Ahern.

"The orginal plan showed an extreme lack of concern for student needs and involvement," SGA co-president Charlene Allen said.

In response to what was perceived as a challenge to the SGA's autonomy, Ahern, Allen, and Student Trustee Jim Murphy met with Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey last Thursday and Friday to express their concern over the contents of the section, Allen said.

"We wanted massive changes in the original -- not just to reword it. So Duffey asked us to come up with our proposal over the weekend and he would review it Monday and discuss it with us Tuesday," Ahern said.

The Tuesday meeting was attended by Allen, Ahern, Murphy, Undergraduate Student Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan, SGA treasurer Eric Nitzsche, Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson, Duffey, and his associate, Bonnie Stricklund. At it, Duffey presented a revised proposal which "was the supposed combined effort between student leaders and the chancellor's staff, but there was some negative things in it which we (both sides) went through and agreed to reword," Allen said.

"We tried together to come up with a text that would represent both concerns, those of the SGA and of the Administration, with respect to their responsibilities," Duffey said. "I appreciate what they are trying to say but we are coming at it from different angles. I don't think I can be fully responsive to all their concerns."

The plan differs from the original by a re-ordering of priorities, by incorporating involvement by students in the creation of the planning process, an SGA charter, and in defining the role of the SGA.

The section's original priorities (improving financial management and defining the role of the SGA) have been changed to: expanding the academic mission of the University by providing services to students, combatting oppression, insuring the financial integrity and long-term stability of the SATF, and defining the role of the SGA.

Barring any further modifications, the revised edition of the section will be placed in the new Long-Range Plan and will be sent to the Board of Trustees for their approval.

Student pro-tenant candidates take five of eight precincts in Town Meeting

By NANCY GONTER
Collegian Staff

Students and pro-tenant candidates for Town Meeting swept the ballots in five of Amherst's eight precincts in Tuesday's town election.

In precincts one, three, four, five, and six, pro-rent control, progressive slates won out over candidates who are related to the rental industry in Amherst.

The progressive candidates support rent control legislation, the regulation of condominium conversion, town supported child care, and the continued support of the no-fare Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA) bus service, according to flyers sent out in some of the precincts.

University of Massachusetts student organizers from the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) the Commuter Area Government, and Tenants Organizing Project (TOP), said they were disappointed with the student turnout at the polls.

"I'm fairly disappointed in the student turnout. We put a lot of work into getting out to students," TOP member Mitch Gaslin said.

Gaslin, who was reelected to Town Meeting in Precinct One, said progressive organizers are going to work even harder to get the student vote next year.

Organizers said they were pleased by the large amount of pro-tenant candidates who were elected, citing the 50-55 elected in all the precincts.

"We were very pleased that a substantial number of students and pro-tenant people were elected," Laura Gallant, student coordinator of SCERA and a member of TOP, said.

Gaslin also said he was fairly optimistic about the passage of rent control at this spring's Town Meeting. He said the rent control article lost by only 15 votes at last year's Town Meeting. However, the Board of Selectmen endorsed rent control last year, he said, and probably won't this year because of its newly elected member, Allen Torrey.

Several students involved in student government were elected to Town Meeting, including Student Government Association co-presidents Charlene Allen (in Precinct Four), and Tom Ahern (in Precinct One). Former SGA President Jim Murphy was also elected in Precinct Six.

The following residents won seats in Town Meeting in Tuesday's election. Terms are three years unless otherwise noted

In Precinct Two: Joyce Berkman, Dolores Chmelin, Robert Chmelin, Anne Hastings (two years), Gene Keegan, Joan Maano, David Ross, Robert Shumway, Alice Stanton, Otto Stein, Thomas Wilkinson.

In Precinct Three: John Boden, James Crosby, Janet Diskin, Linda Doyle, Eliot Ghat (one year), Merle Howes, Keith Kaneta, Deborah Lawrence-Riddell, Linda Lockwood, James Luippold (two years), Brian O'Connor, Laverne Thelen, Roy Rosenblatt (two years), John Sullivan (two years).

In Precinct Four: Charlene Allen, Stephen Austin, Lauren Bertsch (two years), Ann Marie Bolger, Francis Fortino, Florence Frank, William Hart, Douglas McCrae, Edward McGlynn (two years), Stanley Moss, Helen Pettyjohn (one year), Christina Platt, Bernard Moreau.

In Precinct Five: Freda DePillis (two years), Maurice Hernandez, Philip Covelli, Francesca Maltese, Karl Myer, Kenneth Moskowski, Meline Kasparian, Peter Sands, Joel Saze, Carolyn Wills, Marea Wexler

In Precinct Six: Charlotte Gayer, Marjorie Karlson, James Murphy, Diana Sousa, Ronald Story, Michael Sullivan, Bruce Tinkman, Roger Wallace, Mary Wentworth, Sara Woodbury, Eric Einhorn (two years), Gerald Jolly (two years), Theresa Kolish (one year), Ellen Story (one year).

In Precinct Seven: Patricia Burns, George Como, Stevenson Fletcher, Robert Gross, Irving Howards, Deborah Jacque, Ronald Jacque, William Lambert, Jerome Mileur, Arthur Swift, Eric Nitzsche (two years).

In Precinct Eight: Deobrah Berkman, Stephen Bloomfield, Homer Cowles, Gerald Grady, Elizbeth Holtzman, Marjorie Levenson, Peter MacConnell, Edward Markert Jr., Janice Ratner, Frederick Rew, Dolores Sutton (one year).

General Ed. plan faces vote today

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

After nearly two months of both criticizing and praising the General Education Curriculum proposal, the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate will vote today on the controversial plan.

The proposal has taken nearly two years to reach the floor of the senate.

During the past four senate meetings, senators have expressed both approval and disaffection with the plan, which would, if passed, significantly alter undergraduate University requirements.

The proposal calls for, among other things, the elimination of the current distribution requirements which require undergraduates to elect a number of courses from "C," "D," and "E" cores.

That distribution system would be replaced by a new curriculum having Skills, Breadth of Knowledge and Integration of Knowledge components.

There are six motions before the senate concerning the proposal.

Three of the motions concern the specifics of each component of the proposal. The other three motions were recently introduced by the senate Academic Matters

Dukakis expected to sign tuition aid bill

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

Relief from escalating tuition bills is apparently in sight, as Gov. Michael S. Dukakis is expected tomorrow to sign a bill allocating a total of $34 million in state scholarship aid, an aide to the governor said yesterday.

Jim Hinkle, administrative assistant for education for the governor, yesterday said Dukakis will sign into law the $15 million increase in the current state financial aid package that was supported earlier by the legislature. The amount is an $11 million increase over the amount originally requested by the governor for the academic year 1983-4.

"It's the result of a long term joint effort on the part of the legislature and the governor," Hinkle said.

Under the plan, aid will be divided into three categories: general scholarship aid for Massachusetts public and private colleges, special scholarships, and special private grant programs.

The Massachusetts Board of Regents would oversee the implementation of the funding which would go into effect July 1, 1983, the beginning of fiscal year 1984, and extend into the 1983-84 academic year.

General scholarship aid would total $15 million and provide upwards of 28,000 grants and financial awards to students. Special scholarships, a "new item," according to Hinkle, would receive $15 million, while the fund which provides additional monies for students receiving aid from private corporations would receive $4 million.

The bill was passed in the House and Senate on March 30 and 31 respectively, after a proposed two-cent per gallon gasoline tax increase, which called indirectly for $25 million in student financial aid assistance, failed.

If the governor signs the bill, it will be considered a victory for many legislators who have been fighting for it, including the two Amherst Democrats, Rep. James Collins and Sen. John Olver, who have been pushing for a financial aid bill since mid-1982.

"It will be particularly satisfying," Olver aide Stan Rosenberg said.

Reagan blasts Democrat plan

PITTSBURGH (AP) — As thousands of unemployed workers demonstrated outside in drenching rain, President Reagan yesterday touted his economic policies and charged that the Democrats' spending plan would plunge the nation back into an even worse recession.

Speaking at a jobs conference in this economically depressed steel town, Reagan turned up the heat in his battle against the proposed Democratic budget alternative approved by the House.

"I've never seen a budget proposal with a more flagrant disregard for its consequences — and those consequences would be more unemployed Americans, higher interest rates, more government spending and a recession worse than the one we're just emerging from," he said.

Reagan flew here to inspect a job retraining program intended to teach computer skills to laid-off workers and to address a conference on unemployment caused by the decline in heavy industry.

Five thousand protesters, by police estimate, jammed the streets outside the downtown hotel where Reagan was speaking, waving banners, chanting slogans and booing the president when he arrived.

"Reagan, Reagan, he's no good. Send him back to Hollywood!" they shouted.

Among the placards held aloft was one reading, "Want jobs, not voodoo economics." Another read, "Cannot live with Reaganomics."

Soviets deploy new missile

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Soviet Union has developed a new, long-range land attack cruise missile which it may deploy on mobile launchers as a fresh threat to Western Europe, U.S. intelligence sources said yesterday.

The missile, designated by intelligence officials as the SSCX-4, is said to have a range of nearly 1,900 miles, more than the American cruise, the GLCM, scheduled for deployment in Europe late this year.

U.S. reconnaissance satellites recently detected what analysts believe is a possible mobile launcher for the SSCX-4 at a test center in the Soviet Union. It was described as a wheeled tractor-trailer vehicle big enough to launch four missiles.

Intelligence analysts, speaking only on condition that they remain anonymous, said the Soviets might be able to move such missiles around relatively rapidly over long distances - and that they could bring most key targets in Western Europe within their range if they were deployed in Eastern European nations belonging to the Soviet-led Warsaw Pact.

There was no prediction as to when the new Soviet land attack ground-launched cruise missile might become operational.

If the U.S. intelligence assessments prove to be accurate, such new missiles would add to the perceived threat to Western Europe represented by intermediate-range nuclear ballistic missiles, such as the much-discussed SS-20, which carries three warheads, has a range of more than 3,100 miles and can hit Western Europe from well inside the Soviet Union.

Astronauts do practice walk

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Two astronauts who will take the first U.S. space walk in nine years tested their space suits yesterday and pronounced them fit for the next day's adventure in the shuttle Challenger's open cargo bay.

Mission specialists Story Musgrave and Don Peterson were so eager to get ready that they completed many of the two hours of tests by the time they were supposed to start them.

At White Sands, N.M., meanwhile, engineers firmed up plans to correct the orbit of the huge communications satellite that went astray after being ejected from Challenger on Monday. They ran into trouble with the errant satellite again-and got out of it, again.

The astronauts' practice session involved putting on the bulky suits and pressurizing the airlock, everything short of actually leaving the spaceship, and checking the suits' pressure and communications.

"The checkout...was totally normal," Musgrave reported.

The excursion into the ship's 60-foot long cargo bay will have one element not planned before the flight. Mission Control told Musgrave to photograph nylon covering flapping loose on the ship's tail.

Musgrave and Peterson will be tethered by 50-foot cables. One flight director said Musgrave may "kind of hop up" to aim his camera over a maneuvering engine toward the nylon.

On the last flight of Columbia problems with both space suits were discovered hours before the astronauts were to make their space walk. The exercise was canceled.

Springfield workers suffer lung damage

SPRINGFIELD — According to a company-commissioned study, almost one out of eight workers exposed to asbestos at Monsanto Co.'s plant here has suffered asbestos-related lung damage.

In 1978, the chemical company began a study of 487 workers that may have been exposed to asbestos used in the plant's phenolic manufacturing operation from 1941 until 1959, company spokesman Gar Fletcher said yesterday.

Fletcher said X-rays showed 65 workers, or 13 percent of those examined, had suffered "pleural thickening" of lung tissue related to asbestos exposure.

No deaths have ocurred among the workers as the result of the exposure to asbestos, he said.

Several former Monsanto employees, diagnosed as suffering from asbestosis, had been among hundreds of former asbestos workers across the country to file suit against the Johns-Manville Corp., which supplied Monsanto with asbestos.

Johns-Mansville has since filed for bankruptcy.

Churches call 1982 'good religious year'

Religious rights are being trampled in 24 of the world's nations, but there are scattered areas of improvements, says a summary of data gathered from around the globe.

While suppression has increased in some countries, it has lessened in others, making 1982 "on balance, a good religious year," the report says.

Nevertheless, in some places "your beliefs could still cost you your life," says the report compiled by A.D., an official monthly published jointly by the United Church of Christ and the United Presbyterian Church.

The third such annual study, it was based on questionnaire responses from governments, religious centers, denominations and councils, academic researchers and human rights groups, as well as news reports and staff interviews in many countries.

Peter Velez, left, of Lenox, promoter of "Ladies Mudwrestling' in Pownal, Vt., tells Paul Harach, a leader of a group of Pownal residents protesting the show, that he respects their right to protest the event. Velez brought mud-wrestling to Pownal's American Legion Hall after several nearby Massachusetts towns refused him a license. About 400 attended the show, which a dozen protesters said exploited women.

Station owners claim snags with new test

BOSTON (AP) — State officials said Wednesday the first week of the new auto emissions testing program is going smoothly, but a spokeman for service stations described troubles with test equipment as a "serious problem."

James Ayotte of the Bay State Gasoline Retailers Association and a representative of an equipment manufacturer both agreed, however, that problems will diminish when the mechanics get used to the emissions analyzers.

Mass. residents say 'better dead than red'

BOSTON — Nearly one half of the Massachusetts residents polled by a university survey center say they'd prefer all-out nuclear war to communist rule and one in three said, in effect, they would rather be "Dead than Red."

Of 792 residents surveyed by telephone, 49 percent said they would prefer all-out nuclear war to living under Communist rule, 40 percent chose Communist rule and 11 percent couldn't decide.

When told that nuclear war would mean death for everyone in the United States and many other nations, a third of those polled still picked war.

"One in three in effect said 'Better Dead than Red,'" said Prof. Padraig O'Malley, a senior policy analyst at the Center for Policy Studies at the University of Massachusetts, which released results of the poll Tuesday.

"The concept of nuclear war is so unthinkable, that people have difficulty even in accepting it. It remains an abstraction even when its consequences are explicitly described," he said.

It shows how the process of politicization has left a deeply ingrained impression in the public mind of what Communist rule would be like."

Democratic minorities want more delegates

BOSTON — Blacks and Hispanics called for a stronger voice yesterday in future Democratic party affairs.

Rep. Raymond Jordan, D-Springfield, told a Statehouse news conference that minorities would seek a guarantee of 6 percent representation at future conventions.

The 6 percent minimum will be one of the platform issues blacks and Hispanics will support at this weekend's Democratic State Convention in Springfield. He said there will be only about 75 to 100 blacks and Hispanics among the 4,000 delegates.

Jordan speculated that another 100 blacks and Hispanics sought delegate status at party caucuses but were not elected.

Ban on night jogging bill meets opposition

BOSTON Even Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray's son is against her proposal to ban night jogging.

But the Cohasset Republican isn't sweating it, even after four workers in the House clerk's office complained when she filed the bill.

Murray is serious about the legislation and she says she filed it to protect the joggers.

"I filed that jogging bill because so many times we've almost hit people," she said yesterday after asking the Public Safety Committee to support her bill. "I represent three small towns. We have some really windy roads, and, with Proposition 2 1/2, so many of the towns have cut out street lights."

Northampton clown Henry Brown entertains some enthusiastic fans yesterday beneath the Fine Arts Center sculpture. Brown was on campus to promote the Seventh Annual New England Artist Festival, which is moving from Northampton to the University of Massachusetts this year. Senate gives UPC $25,000 for 'Mystery Series' concerts

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night granted $25,000 to the Union Program Council (UPC) to help finance this year's spring concert, now called "Mystery Series 1983".

UPC Talent Coordinator Bill Prichett said the concert will be "a two day show," with "approximately three acts a day," but he would not reveal the exact dates and location of the concerts "for security reasons."

"We'll let you know where it is," Prichett told the senators, "but I'd really rather not say right now."

As an example of the effectiveness of secrecy, Prichett told senators of a man from the University of Massachusetts at Boston who came into the UPC office yesterday and "asked for the (concert) dates so he could bring up ten busloads of students from UMass, Boston" for the concert.

UPC will announce the details of the concerts "probably five days before the event," through advertisements in the Collegian, Prichett said. Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson recommended the policy "to keep the concert to the campus," Prichett said.

Dave Edmunds, Angela Bofill, Spyro Gyra, Romeo Void, the Joe Perry Project, and Sonny Rollins are all possible acts for the event, Prichett said, but he would not say whether any of these acts had signed with UPC to perform.

The concert should cost approximately $39,400 Prichett said, but there will be no admission charge. UPC will pay $8,000 into the event, and the Campus Center Board of Governors will contribute $6,000, in addition to the $25,000 contributed by the Student Government Association (SGA).

In other business last night, the senate voted to delay for two weeks the election of a UMass, Amherst chapter representative to the State Students Association of Massachusetts (SSAM) General Assembly.

State Student organizer Michael Ferrigno protested that neither he nor many of the chapter members knew the election would be held.

"There are a lot of people active in SSAM who aren't senators," Ferrigno said. "It just makes sense that we should hold a meeting of the chapter before we go ahead on this. In two weeks we'll have time to sit down and discuss this among the chapter members and come up with a good recommendation for the SGA." Some senators argued students would know more about SSAM in two weeks, and a wider range of candidates would be available to represent the University to the SSAM.

Non-union professors attack Knapp's stance on contract

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

An open letter sent Monday to University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp and signed by 11 UMass professors criticized his support of a union contract which forces all faculty and librarians to join or risk being fired.

Four of the so called "Amherst 11" were suspended during spring break week after refusing to choose one of the three options given to them by Knapp in a hand-delivered letter to each in March. The professors are protesting being forced to join the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), the faculty union on the Amherst and Boston campuses.

Six of the professors were not fired because they filed litigation with the Massachusetts Labor Relations Committee. The other choices Knapp gave included filing a grievance or paying the $235 agency fee.

"We are writing to you filled with shame for our University," the open letter said. "By your recent actions, we believe you have chosen to abrogate the concept of tenure and have thereby severely shaken the foundations of academic freedom at the University of Massachusetts.

"We were granted tenure for demonstrating excellence in research, teaching and service. To make our continued employment contingent on the payment of a fee makes a mockery of the original award of tenure.

"To claim that (the contract) is the law ignores the fact that you did not have to sign a contract with such a clause or to enforce the union's demands so willingly or brutally. Were we uncharitable, we might suspect that you chose suspensions so that the stigma of firing tenured faculty would not taint your career.

"As faculty members, we are appalled by the lack of notice about your action. Did you take this action on your own? Why didn't the various Chancellors and Deans comment loudly about your action?

"As faculty members, we are depressed by the fact that your action forces some of us to lose a considerable amount of money. Others have been forced to join in litigation about the size of the agency fee an I not about its existence. They are being forced to fight the wrong fight.

"Many of our fellow faculty have told us that they support our position. They would take similar action but are terrified of similar suspensions. Thus, your action has effectively blocked other faculty from the expression of their beliefs.

"UMass is the first major university to abandon completely tenure and aspects of academic freedom."

Professor William C. Conner of the chemical engineering dept., who has been active in the hearings disputing the agency fee, also signed the letter.

Professor John Palmer of the zoology department, one of the signers of the letter, called the contract "a guarantee of mediocrity." He said good teachers and great scholars would be dissuaded from coming to UMass in the future if mandatory union fees are not eliminated.

"The quality of University faculty will drop to that of a community college and the students will lose a hell of a lot," he said.

At hearing yesterday in Boston, the MSP was asked to open its account books for the Boston Labor Relations Committee.

Knapp and MSP president Bruce Laurie were unavailable for comment yesterday.

'On the Other Hand' wants to use official evaluations to write annual publication

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

The decision whether to allow the Course and Teacher Evaluation (CATE) Project to use departmental teacher evaluations in the production of their annual publication, "On The Other Hand," will have a great effect on future publications of that book, project coordinator Peter A. DeLiso said yesterday.

The case is presently in appeals court and has been for a few months, DeLiso said. Results of the case are expected this month or next month, he said.

The question that has been raised in court concerns the release of departmental teacher evaluations to CATE for the purpose of including statements by students in the annual "On The Other Hand."

CATE maintains the evaluations are statements of performance and not covered by the right to privacy act, which blankets and protects personnel and medical files. The opposing side said the evaluations are filed under personnel and are therefore statements of personnel, DeLiso said.

"If we do win, we will be able to look at the departmental evaluations. A lot more evaluations will be available to us," he said.

"If we lose, we're going to make the book anyway, and continue to do so whether the administration wants us to or not. Students give us a good evaluation on their own outside the classroom," he said.

But if the case is decided against the project, the number of evaluations CATE currently uses from cooperating departments will decrease.

"The chemical engineering department has been good to us," he said. 'Some professors cooperate occasionally. Right now most departments and professors are playing it middle of the road. There is some peer pressure going on here".

"On The Other Hand" evaluations are tabulated by students in the project and the Academic Affairs Office each summer and circulated during September and October before ring registration. It is funded through student fees, although DeLiso did not say how much the book costs.

"Let's just say it costs as much as you would expect a book of that nature to cost. It's not cheap," DeLiso said. "But, on the other hand, we do do a good job at keeping the price to a minimum. We shop around for the best buys. We're saving the students money.

"Last year the work was done on a volunteer basis. This year, 90 percent of the work was done in the Whitmore Administration Building, which leaves us more time to publicize. This year more students should know what the project is.

"The paradox simply is it can provide good service to students but only if the students serve it. It's really students helping students."

"Another paradox is the departments that say the respondents are not enough to give a good cross section of evaluation-therefore they're not going to give evaluations, but they say they think it's a good service."

Good times roll for fraternity

By PAUL DESMOND
Collegian Staff

Travellers using Route 9 this weekend may come across some unusual traffic between Amherst and Boston. Members of Beta Kappa Phi Fraternity will be rolling a keg from Faneuil Hall in Boston to Amherst to benefit the United Way.

So far, at least $2,000 in pledges has been promised, according to Beta Kappa brother Paul Gentili.

"We're going to merchants in town and hitting up friends and relatives," Gentili said. Sponsors are asked to pledge a certain amount of money per mile.

Approximately 25 fraternity brothers will do the actual rolling and running while another 20 will be riding along the route in vans, conducting various promotional activities and providing protection for runners from the sometimes hazardous conditions along Route 9, Gentili said.

"It's a cooperative effort by the whole house," he said, "and all precautions are being taken" for the runner's safety.

The crew is scheduled to leave Boston at about 10 a.m. Saturday and spend Saturday night in Worcester. Gentili said he expects the keg to roll into Amherst around 2 or 3 p.m. Sunday.

Proceeds from the keg roll will be given to the Hampshire Community United Way. It in turn will distribute money to the 23 agencies that make up the United Way, such as the Association for Retarded Citizens, Children's Aid and Family Service, and Visiting Nurses Association.

The key roll is the brain child of Beta Kappa brother Craig Keenan, who works for Miller Brewing Co., donators of the sacrificial keg.

Any person interested in making a pledge or receiving more information about the keg roll can call Paul Danello or Craig Keenan at Beta Kappa.

World Health Day tries for health by year 2000

"Better Lifestyle, Better Health" is the theme of World Health Day, which is being observed today by several groups sponsoring tables on the Campus Center Concourse.

Sponsored by the World Health Organization (WHO), World Health Day will be recognized worldwide under the theme "Health for All By the Year 2000: The Countdown has begun."

As a part of World Health Day, a survey was taken recently at the University of Massachusetts in which only half of the 300 students questioned were able to correctly answer 5 of the 10 questions asked. None of the students answered all 10 questions correctly, according to Margaret A. Brew and Marina Najjar, the students who conducted the survey.

Fewer than half the students answering the survey were aware that 25 percent of the world's population has no access to safe drinking water, that in poorer nations infant mortality is more than ten percent, or that one fourth of the world's population is chronically undernourished.

Information about the survey will be available at the table on the Campus Center concourse.

Also as a part of World Health Day, a collection will be taken at the concourse table, in Earthfoods, and at the People's Market to help build a health clinic in the African nation of Burundi.

Early morning prank causes water damage

An automatic fire hose activated early yesterday morning in the Graduate Research Center caused extensive water damage to the first, second and third floors, University of Massachusetts police said yesterday.

According to police, perpitrators turned on the hoses at full pressure, leaving up to two inches of water on the second and third floors of the tower and causing heavy damage to the ceiling tiles of the first and second floors. The water has since been removed.

The vandalism was reported at 3:15 a.m. yesterday.

Police said nozzles were reported missing from fire hoses on the first and ninth floors. There are no suspects, police said. The case is still under investigation.

Debate Team does surprisingly well, finishes in top sixteen in tournament

By JAY HOLZMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Beside its teams in the Curry Hicks Cage and Alumni Stadium, the University of Massachusetts has another team to cheer for. It's the UMass Debate Team.

After returning from the four-day National Debate Tournament (NDT) in Denver, Colorado, on Sunday, the UMass Debate Team established itself as one of the top teams in the country.

Represented by juniors Steve Anderson and Eric Jensen, UMass finished the tournament with a 5-3 record, placing them as one of the top 16 teams in the nation. Among their losses was to runner-up Dartmouth. UMass equaled their best record in the history of their NDT entries.

"They did better than anyone expected," Coach Star Muir said pointing out that this was to be a rebuilding year for his team.

"Other coaches and judges were saying how they (the UMass team) set themselves up nicely for a good showing next year. They really deserved this," the first year coach added.

Junior Eric Jensen came away from the tournament optimistic.

"It looks good for next year because we'll have lots of seniors while other teams will be losing a lot of people to graduation," he explained.

Along with their showing in the NDT, the team of Jensen and freshman Danny Povinelli came away with first-place in the Novice Nationals, held two weeks ago at Northwestern University in Chicago. The Novice Nationals are set up for first-year debaters. In that tournament, 48 teams from 22 states attended.

Unlike star running backs, basketball stars, or Garber's Gorillas, UMass debaters need an American Express Card to be recognized on campus. However, according to team members, the effort they put in is worth it.

"It's fun. It gives you a chance to think on your feet and outhink others," freshman Danny Povinelli said.

As for time committments, Povinelli added, "In an average week, I'll spend 10-20 hours a week at the Debate Union (located in Munson Hall) or at the library doing research. We do the equivalent of two or three research papers a week. Now it takes me only an hour to research a term paper."

Junior Steve Anderson said, "If a debater sticks with the activity for a year, he'll definitely improve his speaking and research skills. In addition, you get to meet lots of new people from around the nation."

For junior Ike Hawkins, the debate team fits right in with his plans to be a lawyer.

"It teaches you to speak coherently and organize your thoughts. No debater would be nervous in front of a crowd of any size," Hawkins said.

"It's very educational. Even when we lose, it helps us point out our weaknesses," Jensen added.

The competitive season, which began in October, is now over. However, activities still continue for the 16-member team. This summer, UMass will be the site for workshops for debaters from across the country.

The students also participate in a public debate program which presents debates on current topics to schools, citizens groups, social clubs, and the general public. This year's debate topics include "The Nuclear Freeze," "The Moral Majority," "The Value of a College Education," and "Foreign Arms Sales."

Beehives stolen from Amherst farm

By DAVID B. MINER
Collegian Staff

Amherst police yesterday said they are investigating the theft of 15 beehives from Atkin's Farm in South Amherst.

Police say the theft occurred sometime Monday night and that each of the hives was valued at $100.

Richard Bonney, a noted bee-keeper who teaches at the University of Massachusetts, said the thief was "probably another bee-keeper who wanted to increase his stock of hives."

"While the theft of hives is unusual for this area, it is a fairly common practice nationally. In California, for example, it is not uncommon for thousands of hives to be stolen at a time," he said.

Bonney said Atkin's Farm does not raise bees as much for their honey production (the average hive produces about 50 pounds of honey per year) as for pollenation of apple trees.

"Bees are an essential link in the process of pollenating the apple trees," he said.

He estimated it would cost Atkin's Farm between $20 and $25 per hive to rent replacements.

He estimated each of the stolen hives contained about 35,000 bees.

Because of the number of motions before the senate, there is a possibility one or more components of the plan may not be passed.

During debate over the proposal, the senate has been divided on the issue of Breadth of Knowledge and Integration of Knowledge, and specifically the proposed Freshman Seminar.

Breadth of Knowledge is divided into six areas: continuity and change, expressive culture, the individual, societies and institutions, the biological world and the physical world.

Some senators have said Breadth of Knowledge goes too far, while others have said it doesn't go far enough.

"I am very troubled by the whole concept of Breadth of Knowledge. What I see is that there is very little different in this proposal than the system we currently have," said Frank R. Hugus, German language and literature associate professor at a recent senate meeting.

Other senators have praised Breadth of Knowledge, calling it long overdue.

"We need some kind of a system so we can explain 'why' to students when they are taking courses," said Micheline Dufau, a professor of French and Italian.

The Integration of Knowledge component of the proposal has been the most heavily debated part of the plan,

Integration of Knowledge contains the Freshmen Seminar, which has been both highly criticized and praised by senators.

The seminar encourages tenured faculty to teach smaller classes comprised of freshmen.

There is very little concensus in the senate on how the vote will turn out.

"I don't think anyone can say for sure how this thing is going to turn out until the final vote is taken," said Charles Hutchinson, chair of the Ad Hoc Committee on General Education.

"You're Hired!"

If you're like most graduating students, these are the two words you want to hear most. But today the job search is tougher than ever. Fewer jobs, more applicants. You know it. We know it.

We also know you're skeptical of people selling answers by mail. So we won't guarantee that our book, "How to Land the Job You Want," will send a flood of job offers your way. We will, however, guarantee that if you dedicate yourself to its precepts, you'll maximize your chances of someone telling you, "You're hired."

"How to Land the Job You Want" provides practical guidelines for all phases of the job search—not theoretical job-hunting rhetoric. It will help you identify career alternatives that make the most sense for you. Write an effective resume. Get, prepare for and handle interviews. And decide between job offers.

What makes our book special? It was developed by the very people you want to hire you: executives at major U.S. corporations. We've used the principles outlined in "How to Land the Job You Want" to advance our own careers. We've successfully coached others to advance theirs. And we've interviewed applicants who have followed them...as well as those who haven't. "You're hired" is what we've said to those who have.

Get the edge on your competition. Send for your copy of "How to Land the Job You Want." Do it today. The book is only $9.95. The results could be worth a whole lot more.

State energy secretary visits UMass

By DAVID KIRKWOOD SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

A public forum on energy was held yesterday at the University of Massachusetts in which newly appointed state Secretary of Energy Sharon Pollard and members of her office shared ideas, heard suggestions and became familiar with a variety of representatives from groups involved with energy in Western Massachusetts.

The Executive Office of Energy Resources (EOER) in Massachusetts is in the process of planning its energy programs for the next four years, and is now receiving input from people across the state on where the needs and concerns for energy planning and funding lie.

"New directions and priorities are appropriate considering the changing energy picture, Gov. (Michael S.) Dukakis' priorities, and new opportunities that are available to us," Pollard told teachers, utility officials, and representatives of energy advocacy groups, community development offices and private industry.

One of the main topics discussed was the allocation of $6.6 million received by Massachusetts and other states from an oil overcharge lawsuit.

After hearing comments on how this money should be allocated in the future, Pollard said, "We will carry out our responsibility to return the money that consumers were overcharged by designing programs for all kinds of energy users."

Education, travel combined in program

By JEAN AMARAL
Collegian Correspondent

Part two of a two part series.

There are summer programs offered for students who want to travel abroad but do not want to improve a foreign language. These students may attend Trinity college in Oxford, England or Hokaida University in Sapporo, Japan.

For the student who would like to travel to England, there is a program offered at Trinity College, Oxford. Director Richard Haven said this college was founded in 1555 and has very large grounds including "one of the most beautiful gardens in England."

He added the college is very small providing a close, relaxed atmosphere for the six weeks students spend there.

Haven said "the biggest difference in the colleges in England and America are the smaller classes in British universities." The classes at Oxford contain no more than twelve students and are taught as tutorials, which means the "students are expected to initiate ideas and do a lot more talking.

Essays are written on subjects before these subjects are discussed in class," Haven said. There is a wide range of courses offered, according to Haven, including Chaucer, Paleography, Metaphysicals and Cavaliers, and Eighteenth Century English Poetry. Most courses involve studying literature, but there are a few which do not: Creative Writing Workshop: A British View, Art and the Rise of Industrialism and a new Comparative law course.

Haven said normally one four credit course is taken for the six weeks, but it is possible to earn four more credits by enrolling in a three credit course that lasts for three weeks, and a one credit Shakespeare course.

Haven said, "the faculty consist of all British professors, several from Oxford, one well-known one from Cambridge, and a few from other universities who have been at Oxford at one time or another."

"Students are very positive about their experience, and many come back a second time," Haven said.

Haven said the many non-English majors who attend this program also find it a very satisfying and valuable experience.

The other overseas summer program involves the Hokaida University in Sapporo, Japan.

According to the brochure provided by the International Programs Office, this college is closely related to UMass because it was founded by Dr. William S. Clark who at the time was President of the Massachusetts Agricultural College now UMass.

The brochure states that the program is organized around the theme of "contemporary Japan". Students participate in lectures, field trips, and traditional arts such as the tea ceremony.

Lectures are given in English. This program is offered every other year in even numbered years.

For more information on the Oxford program, students should contact Professor Richard Haven or the International Programs Office. This office is also the place to obtain more information about the Hokaida University.

Soviet government suppresses writers

By CRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

Women writers in Russia are no more discriminated against than are men writers as long as they conform to the government's standards, according to Soviet literary scholar who spoke last night at the University of Massachusetts.

Dr. Sarah Babyonyshev, who was exiled from the Soviet Union in 1981 for her dissident activities, lectured on "Women in Russia: Lidia Chukovskaya and Eygenia Ginsburg" to 30 people at Herter Hall.

"Feminism as it is in this country does not exist in Russia," she said. "In the 20th Century, everyone is in the same boat. There is absolute equality in the labor camps and in the prisons."

However, she said, both men and women writers are discriminated against and may lose certain priveleges allowed writers if they step over the limits set by the government.

Babyonyshev spoke about Chukovskaya and Ginsburg, two well-known authors whom she had known while living in Russia.

"There are many remarkable women in Russia," she said. "Even though these two women are interesting characters, they are different in artistic make-ups and personalities."

Ginsburg, who spent 18 years in a labor camp, "Was a very feminine personality. She was very interested in appearing as a lady," Babyonyshev said.

Chukovskaya, on the other hand, was different, she said. Chukovksaya was a political personality since she was 16 years old. When she was 18, she decided to join the Socialist Party in Russia.

Currently, Chukovskaya is living in Russia and will not leave unless she is physically forced, because she feels "those who leave Russia are exactly those who are needed there," Babyonyshev said.

Ginsburg said if she had not spent time in the labor camp, she would have "become a bad writer because I would have had nothing to write about," according to Babyonyshev.

Coping with UMass' New Math

Do you remember the New Math? It was the system in grammer school; designed to teach you a whole new perception to the use of numbers. It was something that I was not very good at. During my first year here as a freshman I found that the University offers its own version of this math. It does not satisfy the E-core Requirement, but this is a math that I must be good at, because without a complete mastery — graduation is not possible. I call this University Math.

This math is divided into the sort of categories that one learns in Elementary Algebra, the difference lies in the more literal meaning of these terms:

The first thing that you become acquainted with are Real Numbers. These are your student number and your social security number. Without these numbers you are not a real person. This is a large university and your name just doesn't count. Each of these numbers are stamped on your identification card. This card is more important on campus than your American Express Card, regardless of Tom Landry and Robert Ludlum. You shouldn't leave home without your "Am-Ex" card, but you cannot get anything done at UMass without that ID card.

Rational Numbers are equally important. You must familiarize yourself with these numbers because you cannot get home or to class without the building, floor, and room numbers sufficiently memorized. Telephones on campus also act differently, off-campus calls require you to dial 9 first, and on-campus calls only require five digits.

With the arrival of registration, Whole Numbers become meaningful. You cannot take courses without the proper categorization coordination on your registration form. Scheduling numbers, section numbers, course numbers, discussion numbers, alternate selection numbers, and waiting list numbers — make up the set of whole numbers.

Addition is also given a new meaning...There is the university billing procedure adding to your grief with fees that almost exceed the cost of tuition. Addition is also very important in your senior year as you strive for a little addition to your quality point average and in your accumulation of graduation credits.

Subtraction is not a popular exercise. It is a fact of life that at the beginning of the semester there is subtraction from overenrolled classes, closed majors, and amount of available financial aid grants. The university specializes in subtraction: the semi-annual checkbook roulette at the Textbook Annex to perhaps the ultimate form of subtraction — academic withdrawal for the non-payment of a lab fee.

Who can leave out Word Problems?...The best example of this can be shown in the amount of dining commons meals you care to eat as compared to your actual meal plan. The meal system is very organized, you are given the choice of 19, 14 and 10 meals each week. From this set of facts you learn why very few of us opt for the 19 — three meals a day for three days and two meals a day for five days. Why most of us after our first year will opt for the 10 instead of the 14, (especially if you've lived in Sylvan) — two meals a day for five days, except weekends — when it is room service pizza for two days. You also learn that these numbers are not perfect squares, but then, neither is the food.

These are the kinds of things that you must learn in order to ensure that your four year stay is enjoyable. Without a firm grasp of these fundamentals, your college experience will be a confusing and unrewarding experience. So the next time that you are home, you can explain to your parents what you have learned and exactly why they had to re-mortgage the house to put you through college.

Jim Murphy: A new perspective

To the Editor:

This is written in response to the article on ex-SGA President Jim Murphy on Monday April 4th. First of all let me say that the article was unique to the Collegian — it was well written and fairly accurate. Secondly I believe Jim Murphy did not do a 'bad' job as President either. But after this, we have a problem.

Is Jim Murphy running for God? Is (the articles author) his campaign manager? The article though written well, was very one-sided and biased in it's content.

Mellow definitely describes Jim Murphy, but class does not. As President, Murphy addresses a crowd of 10,000 people, with the now immortal words — "holy shit". No wonder President Knapp was concerned with our school's image, Jim Murphy obviously was not.

For about 10 percent of the student population Jim Murphy did an excellent job, for the other 90 percent who weren't affected by his programs, who still wait in long lines to register for classes, who still cannot get required courses, and who have no real representative to go through in dealing with Whitmore, he did nothing. This is not a political or biased position, this is a fact.

As for 'conservatives' being in the Student Senate, I've been there and my impression is that Mao Tse-Tung would be labeled a conservative in that Senate. The Senate is run by a dictatorship of the far left that will not even consider any other views.

No one faults Jim Murphy for all of this. But to call the recent elections "representative" of the student population is at best inaccurate. The current Presidents were elected by ⅛ of ⅛ of the students. What is more representative is that the Student Senate is so unresponsive to student needs that 65 percent of those they supposedly represent, did not even bother to vote.

So the next time the Collegian decides to take a look at the SGA President or Senate, please give us both sides of the story, not one.

Factual foul play in columns

To the Editor:

Last week, in a three article series about the situation in Central America, in a most pathetic example of intellectual sterility, guest columnist Kathy Curda exposed her ignorance about historical and geographical facts; Ms. Curda basically claims that the U.S. is actually following a progressive policy in that region of the world and that "all the people who criticize the Salvadorean regime should be opposing the Nicaraguan regime," that the withdrawal of U.S. troops from Vietnam (and the end to massive bombing of the Vietnamese people) has caused the deterioration of human rights situation in Vietnam, and that finally, if we were to extend the dangerously distorted argument to its logical conclusion, all progressives should actually support direct U.S. military intervention to solve the "Salvadorean problem"!

All the arguments of Ms. Curda are false to the core! The facts are too stubborn and blatant for Ms. Curda to be able to get away with her distortions. The fact is that the Salvadorean people have been living for 50 years under a repressive fascist military regime, under extremely harsh and archaic economic structures and conditions of abject poverty. Moreover, this military dictatorship has been armed and financed by the U.S. and its allies for the last 50 years. What we are facing in El Salvador is 50 years of institutionalized state terrorism against the local population. The Revolutionary Democratic Front (FDR) is merely the embodimant of the will of the Salvadorean people to finally fight back. Does Ms. Curda have the audacity to question the recognized fact that 35,000 civilians have been butchered by a regime armed and financed by Washington, and not by the Red Army?

The fact is that it was the U.S., not the Soviet Union, who has destroyed 60 percent of all Vietnamese forestry and agriculture through intensive aerial bombardment and is therefore responsible for the hunger and poverty in that country; the attempt of right-wingers to break every record of lying and hypocrisy by putting the blame on the democratic government of Vietnam is totally preposterous. It is totally ludicrous, for those who support and arm the most barbaric regimes in the world (e.g. Guatemala, Chile, El Salvador, South Korea, etc...) to accuse the Sandinista government, the first truly democratic and popular regime in the history of Nicaragua, of human right "violations", or of having more weapons than it actually needs, for two simple reasons: 1 — The U.S. has the highest military budget in the history of mankind.

2 — The U.S. has invaded Nicaragua three times in the tortured history of that country, and therefore it is more than justified for the progressive regime of Nicaragua to fear another aggression from an ever more reactionary, and militaristic administration in Washington.

The only reasonable course of action to be taken by Washington with regard to the Central American crisis would be to start negotiations with the popular movements of El Salvador, and the Sandinista government, unconditionally and immediately.

Speaking up for recycling

To the Editor:

It has come time for me to set the record straight about on-campus bottle and can redemption. Of all the articles and editorials printed in the Collegian in recent weeks, only one has mentioned the group on campus who is actively working on redemption. That group is the Recycling Project. We first began research on the feasibility of on-campus redemption in September 1982, before the bottle bill referendum even passed in November. Research and initial negotiations continued during last semester up until January. In January of this year I was hired as the administrator of the Recycling Project. Since that time our entire staff has been actively working towards making redemption a reality, in addition to our many other duties.

This work has included massive amounts of research, and a continuing series of negotiations with all of the varied parties involved. A partial list of our contact people include Coca Cola Co. Inc., Pepsico, Mass Crinc, Valley Redemption, the Economic Development Office, the SGA Treasurer's office, MassPirg, and a host of UMass administrators (who have, in every instance, been extremely helpful and supportive). The only student candidates who contacted and pledged their support to our efforts were Tom Ahern and Charlene Allen. We are indebted to all those listed above, and everyone else not mentioned above, for their help and support.

At this time I would like to give a brief description of where campus redemption stands and where it is going. The basic format of our collection system has been established. We have tentative contracts with four companies who are willing to purchase the redeemed containers from us. We have an agreement with University officials to go ahead with most of our plan as it stands. There are, however, a few more kinks to be worked out of the system. We are confident that at least a partial redemption effort will be in place before the end of the semester. To set up a full scale operation may take us into the summer. At this time I cannot forsee any obstacles which would prevent us from operating a full scale, campus wide, bottle and can redemption effort by September. Our primary objective, as a student controlled business, is to set up an efficient, long lasting operation which will serve the University community to the fullest extent possible. We are more concerned with financial stability than political expediency.

No need for U.S. intervention

In considering the three editorials on El Salvador by Katherine Curda that have recently appeared on these pages, I was struck with the realization that in not one instance did she address what has to be viewed by all as the crucial question concerning current U.S. involvement in El Salvador. And that question is: Why must the United States government intervene in the internal affairs of any Latin American nation?

It occurs to me that Curda's misguided attack on the opponents to U.S. involvement and her recitation of selected facts and interpretations of the situations in Nicaragua, El Salvador and Vietnam allow her brand of knee-jerk conservatism to obscure the larger, more fundamental issue at hand. She does not justify her support for having our government take a vested interest in a country approximately the size of Massachusetts.

Bill Wall

Surely Curda can not possibly mean to imply that such justification can be found by the necessity of preserving El Salvador's economic relationship with the United States. Even the most ardent imperialist looking to expand markets for U.S. goods and services can not find much opportunity for profit in the war-torn, economically ravaged land of El Salvador. And any rational policy-maker will realize the expenditure necessary to prop up an unstable government with an uncertain future will be far more excessive than the eventual expected rate of return on business investment and exports to that country. For once, it is conceivable that the interests of multinational corporations are not guiding and shaping our foreign policy because of the lack of possibilities for an economic profit. Therefore economic considerations are not the principal motivations governing our conduct.

Another alternative available to explain the necessity for U.S. involvement is that El Salvador is of invaluable assistance in aiding the U.S. in preserving "democracy" in the Western Hemisphere and that its future, by virtue of its geographical location, is inextricably linked to that of the U.S., and as such its government must be compatible with our ideology.

But is it so crucial to our standing as a world power and a great nation to lower ourselves to support a government and its supporters who are known for violating basic human rights in the most cruel of manners. I think not.

The worst conceivable event that could occur, from the standpoint of the current administration, would be that El Salvador would be able to shape its own destiny by self-determination. And if that nation were to be overtaken by "Marxist" guerillas (a likely occurrence without our help, according to the State Department), what possible harm could result to the U.S.? I see none of great possible significance.

The guerillas currently operating in El Salvador would not have to turn to the Soviet Union and its proxies for support of the U.S. did not support the government. I believe the guerillas would rather be able to do without it because any movement would rather be in control of its own destiny. If the U.S. would withdraw, the guerillas would not feel outnumbered and forced to accept outside help.

But if the U.S. were to disengage itself from this inhumane government, it could present itself to the world as a nation that respects the rights of other people for self-determination. And if, by non-intervention, it gains a moral edge in the world's eye, especially in the developing and Third World nations concerned with the appearance of current U.S. hegemony, then I submit that that would be worth far more in the long run than any benefits possibly to be derived from confounding the already tumultuous situation in El Salvador in particular and Latin America in general. Not much can be said for U.S. intervention in El Salvador in light of its insignificance in the world context.

Is it necessary to legislate caring?

Can you force someone to care?

Apparently some people think that you can.

After hearing the nationwide news reports of the now-famous gang rape at Big Dan's in New Bedford, Wisconsin state legislator Donald K. Stitt says he plans to sponsor legislation providing for a fine to any witness of a violent crime who does not attempt to help the victim.

Rep. Stitt cited the New Bedford case as a major factor in his decision to file legislation, saying "I read with horror the account of the incident."

He was not the only one. The idea of a woman being gang raped in a public establishment while everyone around cheered is repugnant and disgusting enough to make all of us men feel a twinge of shame.

Scott Hersey

ome say that she should have known that the place was rough, and she shouldn't have gone in there by herself. But she, along with every other woman shouldn't have to worry about that kind of thing.

Because of her sex, should she be banned from certain places? The whole idea is ridiculous.

I was thinking about the whole mess the other night while I was enjoying a cold Molson at one of Amherst's quieter bars. A news report about the incident came on the television over the bar, and three men sitting across from me began discussing it. They all agreed that it was a terrible thing and that the men who did it should be punished. But when I leaned over and asked them what they would have done if they were in Big Dan's that night, they all became strangely silent.

Just after the question was asked, and their silence hung in the air like humidity on a hot summer night, a lone woman walked into the bar.

Now this place is nothing like what I would picture Big Dan's to be. And this woman had no reason to be afraid to walk in the bar alone. But the four of us silently stared at her.

I've never been to New Bedford in my life, but suddenly the small, quiet bar became Big Dan's. The lights grew dimmer. The glass I was drinking from became dirtier. And instead of Molson, the beer strangely began to taste more like Old Milwaukee.

The three men across the bar from me were no longer fellow students, with the same attitudes and problems as myself, but instead they were sweaty fat men in dark t-shirts.

That lone woman never made it to the bar in my mind. She was picked up and thrown on the pool table. When a crowd gathered around the table and started cheering, I thought I was witnessing the rape.

And I didn't know what I would do.

Would I brave the crowd and try to pull her away? I could get myself seriously hurt.

Would I break the beer bottle in my hand and threaten to slash everyone? I could get more than seriously hurt. I could get killed.

Would I try to run for the police? I might not make it in time.

Eventually someone put a song on the jukebox and drove me back to reality. The woman was calmly sitting at a table studying. The three men were watching the news. I was shaking. My hands were clammy.

I sat and thought about it for a while, and although I still wasn't sure what I would have done, I know I would have done something.

I would have cared and I wouldn't have needed a law to make me do it.

And I hope most people feel the same.

General Education — the time is now

On April 7 the University of Massachusetts at Amherst has a historic opportunity to seize a position of leadership in American higher education. On that date the Faculty Senate will vote on the General Education Proposal. This proposal, the product of thoughtful and prodigious efforts of students, faculty and administrators offers, if nothing else, hope. Hope for the future, a hope that higher education in America can begin to come to terms with what it means to be an educated person in the last years of the Twentieth Century. It presents an opportunity for this educational community to design a learning environment that empowers those who come here to study with those skills needed to be productive citizens of the Commonwealth, the Nation and the Planet.

This historic opportunity, however, is in jeopardy. Some faculty members, so thoroughly mired in the parochialism of their isolated disciplines, have decided that too much is at stake, that we should not proceed too fast. Sadly, some feel threatened by the more progressive elements of the proposal and have retreated into entrenched self-interest, a self-interest obscured by a rhetorical smoke screen of intellectual "substance" and "rigor"

As so often has been the case in the past 20 years, it falls to the students of this University, undergraduate and graduate, to provide the direction and leadership needed to see the project through. Students have the power to "encourage" faculty members to broaden their educational horizons and begin to work with other disciplines instead of working in isolation from them.

Why is the General Ed Proposal of such significance? What is historic about it? In brief, it begins to put our education into a context. Without a context, education makes little sense, it lacks coherent meaning. "Making sense" and "coherent" are the operative concepts here. Much of what students are now offered lacks these two essential dimensions. The present curriculum presents students with an incoherent mishmash of major requirements, cores and electives. MWF from 8 until 8:50, you take an English Writing course. At 8:50 you pack up your books, head across campus and enter the world of Computer Science for fifty minutes. After a cup of coffee and a quick glance at the Collegian, it's off to Chemistry. After lunch there's Intro. to Macroeconomics. Tuesdays and Thursdays, there's Calculus and Social Problems. As the saying goes: "What's wrong with this picture?" If you are lucky, you've picked up some interesting and worthwhile facts in each class. Perhaps you even made some connections between the poverty discussed in Sociology and the economic system described in Economics. Perhaps — but more likely not.

The problem with the present curriculum is that it does not encourage such integration of learning. In fact, it militates against it. Is it unreasonable to believe that the curriculum can be designed in such a way that the interrelationship of what we learn is made coherent and explicit? And if that interrelationship were to be made real within a historical context which allowed us to discover that a particular philosopher was prominent during a certain period because he or she provided an ideological bulkhead for the dominant political power, our courses would make all the more sense.

During the Faculty Senate debate of March 17, arguments advanced against the General Ed Proposal can most generously be characterized as specious: they appear substantive without really being so. One Senator asserted that the proposal is not intellectually "distinguished". Unfortunately the gentleman neglected to define such an ambiguous concept. The General Ed Proposal is not a hip, educational "innovation" with all the negative baggage that idea carries. Rather, it restores the curriculum to a tradition as old as Socrates: it is as much a restoration as it is a plunge into the future. Writes Walter Benjamin: "In every era, the attempt must be made to wrest tradition away from a conformism that is about to overcome it." A close reading of the General Ed Proposal demonstrates clearly that it is faithful to the tradition of critical inquiry and that it attempts to restore order and coherence to the chaos that presently characterizes the curriculum.

Finally, some faculty members equate the approval of the proposal with the advent of totalitarian rule at UMass. It is not clear exactly why this would be the case. A professor presently teaching a course on Milton could continue to do so. The General Ed Proposal does not propose an arrangement that frustrates change and development; its rationale rests on the importance of change and evolution in the curriculum. The Faculty would retain the power role it currently enjoys. Surely the transitional period will present a challenge that calls forth the best efforts of the entire community. Just as surely, it is a challenge that history, the present and the future call us to meet.

If you support the proposal, let your professors know. Urge them to lobby their representatives. And try to attend the Faculty Senate meeting on April 7 (3:30 p.m., SBA 120).

A film without meaning

MONTY PYTHON'S THE MEANING OF LIFE
Mt. Farms Mall

By ELAINE SENAY
Collegian Staff

Disappointing best describes Monty Python's latest film. After the success and almost cult following of Monty Python and the Holy Grail and Life of Brian, the six member comedy troup has fallen short of their own standards. But there are some wonderful moments in Meaning of Life that hint at great Pythonesque humor of days gone by. Sad to say, though, they blew it.

The Python team wrote the story (or what there is of it) themselves. It seems they had two or three terrific sketches and they stuffed lots of filler between them. This bulk doesn't keep the film afloat. Instead Meaning of Life sinks slowly and painfully into the end credits. This devout Python fan was saddened by the film especially because I went into the theater wanting to love it.

There is one gem among all the wreckage. It is a 10 minute featurette called The Crimson Assurance Company. Monty Python should have only released this short film and forgotten about making Meaning of Life. This tale of a staid English firm rebelling against The Very Big Corporation of America was hilarious and engaging.

Meaning of Life has a few redeeming scenes. You can't help laughing at the production number about birth, in which Michael Palin leads a huge chorus of ragamuffin children in a song called "Every Sperm is Sacred". Well, I have a warning to those of you with weak stomachs. There is one scene that could put you off your food for a couple of days. Enough said about that bit.

Monty Python's The Meaning of Life is one of those films that tries to pretend to have a message or concept, but the troop should have left this one alone until they really had a movie to make about the meaning of life.

Terry Jones, John Cleese, Terry Gilliam, Graham Chapman, Eric Idle and Michael Palin star in Meaning of Life.

Live Wire by Dave Chevan

Editor's Note: People are often willing to go great lengths to appear funny or especially clever in the eyes of their peers. Humor is a delicate business, however. Often we lose sight, in our labors of wit, of other people's sensibilities. We confuse that which is humorously offensive, with offensive humor. As a result, we end up appearing less and less like funny people, and more and more like complete idiots.

Well, despite the fact that last Friday's Collegian was an April Fools Day issue, the parody of David Chevan's Live Wire column that appeared on the arts page therein was offensive, and I do feel like an idiot. I apologize. And to set the record straight, I'd like to say that David Chevan had nothing whatsoever to do with the conception of that parody. Nothing. As Arts Editor, it was completely my own fabrication. I'd like to stress further that no offense to the Jewish community of UMass was intended.

Once again, I'd like to apologize to David, and to anyone else who judged the column to be in bad taste.

On a more melodic note, kudos should be handed out to the Iron Horse Coffeehouse for their continued effort to bring quality entertainment to the Valley. Tonight's installment in their continuing "not at the Iron Horse" series is a Louisiana based Cajun band, Queen Ida and the Bon Temps Zydeco band, performing at the Hangar One. Actually the band insists they're more Zydeco than Cajun or anything else. Either way, this may be one of the few times we'll have an opportunity to hear the authentic version of a traditional American music form.

Tomorrow night will feature some area favorites at the local clubs, Jim K., guitar whiz, will be playing at Sheehan's Cafe. Wild Kingdom, featuring the old Human Sexual Response front line, will be at the Hangar One, and First Rate will rock the Wok. Jim K. and First Rate will both be reappearing Saturday night at the same clubs.

Of local interest is the formation of a new blues band, the Amherst All-Stars. The All-Stars will be performing a regular gig Wednesday nights downstairs at the Drake. Admission is free, and with the colorful ambiance of the Drake, things are sure to be rockin'.

Queen Ida will bring her special kind of blues to the Hanger tonight when she performs with her Bon Temps Zydeco Band.

The list of local bands breaking up or performing massive personnel surgery continues to grow. Syncopation Station, Bratt, R-Complex are the most recent victims of these hard times. Now we can add still another name to this swiftly growing list. Live Wire bids a fond adieu to those jolly rockers, the Pleasure Dots. They'll be playing their last gig next Wednesday, April 13, at Sheehan's Cafe. We'll be down there to catch those last ever sets, and to wonder as Ray Davies once put it, "Where have all the good times gone?" Bye guys, you were a swell band while you lasted.

Violinist, Donq Suk Kang will perform at 8:00 p.m., on Tuesday April 19 in Bezanson Recital Hall in the Fine Arts Center. There will be no admission fee. For further information, call 545-2227.

Tired of eating alone or just of eating in the dining commons? Well, then, brown bag it on Fridays and have lunch in the Old Chapel at UMass while being entertained by dancers, musicians and actors from the Performing Arts Division. The Brown Bag Presentations begin at noon each Friday in April. These performances are free and open to the public.

Shakespeare plays seem to be popular this month. Much Ado About Nothing will be performed tonight through Sunday at 8 p.m. in the Lab Theater at Mt. Holyoke College. Much Ado is a romantic comedy about love and deception that has a happy ending. Tickets are $4 for the general public and $2 for students. Reservations can be made by calling: 538-2406.

Comedy of Errors, a story involving two sets of twins who are set loose in a sleazy city in the Middle East, will be performed by the University Ensemble Theater tonight, tomorrow and Saturday as well as April 13-16 in the Rand Theater. Performances begin at 8 p.m. Tickets are $3.50 for the general public and $2.50 for students. For reservations, call 545-3511.

Buried Child is Sam Shepard's drama about what can happen when people live in the past or become too emotionally involved with events that happened years ago. It's an intense play that gets more and more puzzling with each new scene. It will definitely make you forget your problems. Buried Child opens tonight and continues through tomorrow, Saturday and Sunday in the Hampden Theater in Southwest. Showtime is 8 p.m. with a 2 p.m. Saturday matinee. Tickets are $1.50 for students and $2.50 for the general public. Reservations: 545-2803.

A dance workshop presentation called Celebrations will be presented by the Smith College Department of Theater tonight, tomorrow and Saturday at 8 p.m. in the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theater in Northampton.

The Time of the Boghouse Mind opens tomorrow and continues Saturday and Sunday at 8 p.m. in Emily Dickinson Hall, Hampshire College. Tickets are $2.50 for the general public and $2.00 for students. For reservations, call 549-4600, ext. 351.

That's it for this week. Have a good one.

Gazelles host Springfield College

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

The defending NCAA champion University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will take a 2-1 record to NOPE field this afternoon when they face Springfield College at 3 p.m.

UMass will be without the services of defender Linda Bevelander who will be out for another week with torn ligaments in her ankle.

"Her injury took away some of our defensive effectiveness, but we have adjusted well," said Coach Pam Hixon.

Attacker Tish Stevens has been practicing all week and probably will start. Bunny Forbes will also be an attack wing and hopefully can help the scoring attack.

As far as Springfield College goes, Hixon says they are an improved squad since last year, although she hasn't seen them play that much.

"I don't know what to expect, but I anticipate they will play a zone against us and our strategy will be to fast break against that zone," said Hixon. "We have been concentrating on our midfield game all week in practice and trying to link the offense and the defense better. I think today's game against Springfield will show that's one phase of the game we will be better at than we were against Yale," said Hixon.

Pam Moryl leads the team in scoring with nine goals, with a hat trick in each of the Minutewomen's three games this season. They will need her consistent scoring in order to be effective, but Hixon would like to see some more scoring output from the rest of the team as well as Moryl's.

"For us to be effective as a team we have to get that scoring elsewhere. But without a set starting lineup so far, our scoring attack has been hurt. I look for Linda Hartayan and Tish Stevens to help pick up some of the scoring slack," said Hixon.

One thing that has been consistent is the defense and goaltending.

"We have been outstanding defensively and the goaltending has been superb. Rita Hubner has been a big help to us. She has made some great saves and done a spectacular job," said Hixon.

The Minutewomen will go for their third victory of the season. The game begins at 3 p.m. on Upper NOPE field.

Tennis hosts Vermont

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

Raise the curtain and let the show begin. It's time to turn words into action. For the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team their 11-act play begins today on the Boyden Courts at 3 p.m. against the University of Vermont, who will be out for revenge due to last fall's 5-4 loss to the Minutemen in Burlington.

The Catamounts come to Amherst to face a UMass squad filled with optimism and high hopes. Many of the players talk about an undefeated season and winning the Atlantic 10 championship, words rarely spoken around these parts when it comes to the game of tennis. "This is the best team I've been on," said Neal Mackertich, the number one singles player. "It's so deep. I've never seen a team play better than this. It looks good. I'm the only senior, so it looks good for the future too."

Many of the players believe UMass, long shunned in New England collegiate circles will finally get their due this season, maybe even within the week, as they face Boston College, the Big East champion, Saturday and Rhode Island Monday, both at Amherst.

"Even though these teams have heard we are good they'll have to see it first. These matches are important in that we can show New England how good we are," said Mackertich.

"I think we started to gain respect at the end of last season (fall of 1982) when we went 8-2. Before that, everybody just thought we were a hack tennis team. We beat a couple of good teams in the fall and I think that gave us a lot of respect right there," said Rich Lindgren, the number five singles player. "When we go down to the Atlantic 10 we're not going to see a lot of teams (only URI) that we play in the regular season, and they're not going to know how good we are, so I think we're going to impress them."

"I think we can compete with some of the top schools in the East," said Nick Julian, number four singles player.

Individually, all the players feel they have improved their games over the winter. Stuart Goodman, number three singles player, spent several weeks in Florida during intersession and also made the trip south for Spring Break. Mackertich and Steve Jordan, number two singles player, both competed in tournaments in the New England area.

"In the fall I was mainly a baseline player. All the collegiate players I played serve and volley, so I worked on developing a winning forehand from the baseline to pass the serve-and-volliers and I concentrated on a net game to put pressure on opponents when I'm serving. My serve and my backhand are key to my game," said Goodman.

"I'm stronger at the net and my serve is stronger. This style of play is going to win me more matches," said Julian.

Cornell wears out Gorillas, 11-6

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

About an hour after Cornell University had stunned the Gorillas in a not so pretty 11-6 game between the two nationally ranked teams, Noreen Moreau was wondering why her son, Gerry didn't get much mention in the press.

"And, if you do mention him," she said, "it's Gerry with a 'G' not a 'J'."

Well, Gerry with a 'G' Moreau, who plays in the net for the Gorillas earned some notice yesterday. Sure, he gave up 11 goals but, things could have been much worse.

The local laxters had trouble from the outset of the contest. They were hitting well and hustling all over the field, but for some strange reason, they simply couldn't hold onto the ball. Cornell, on the other hand, gave Moreau fits by keeping the ball in the UMass end of the field for much of the game.

"We couldn't pick it (the ball) up and we couldn't catch it," said head coach Dick Garber after the final tick of the clock. "We couldn't clear the ball because we couldn't throw and catch it."

What the lack of control amounted to was a lot of Cornell shots on the Gorilla goal.

But, for a big portion of the game, Gerry with a 'G' was there to thwart several Big Red scoring attempts.

"Gerry did a great job in goal. I have absolutely no complaints about him," said Garber of his junior goaltender.

The Gorillas got on the board first 4:45 into the first period when Rich Messina bounced a shot past Cornell goalie Peter Ruchkin.

The Big Red answered right back just 24 seconds later when Matt Crowley let a rocket fly which beat Moreau to the lower right corner.

Once again, Cornell seemed to always be on offense as the Gorillas were unable to clear the ball from their own end. As Moreau was forced to make save after save, it appeared as if someone had sewn the local team's sticks shut.

Cornell scored again twice, first on a Ken Entenmann goal from Keven Cook, and next on a Bruce Bruno from Entenmann connection.

The first quarter ended with Cornell on top 3-1

The second period was a scoreless affair that allowed lovers of physical violence to enjoy a very hard hitting period. The key bad man for the Gorillas was Messina, who delivered several tough hits around the midfield area.

As the second half began, the crowd on Boyden Field, estimated at about 7,000, was starting to get restless. They sensed that perhaps the Gorillas were not going to come back in time.

And, just as the halftime mumblings about a poor performance were subsiding, just 49 seconds into the half, Paul Fogarty drove the ball home and the Gorillas climbed back into contention at 3-2.

Again, Cornell answered back at the 5:44 mark and then again at 10:48 to up the margin to three goals, 5-2, but the Gorillas refused to yield.

Chris Schmitz and Gregory Fisk each netted a goal down the stretch of the third stanza and, when the horn sounded, UMass was once again knocking on the door at 5-4.

Then came the disastrous fourth quarter.

The defense, which had been tiring all game due to the fact that the ball was in the UMass end of the field 80 percent of the game, began to slow down, creating one on one opportunities for the Cornell attack.

During a period of time which lasted just under five minutes, the Big Red was able to score five times, upping the ante to a rough 10-4 spread.

UMass managed two more goals by Mike Fiorini and Fisk to make things interesting but it was Cornell who would reign in the sunshine on this particular day.

"We had a mediocre afternoon game against one of the top teams in the country. said Garber, "and you don't win like that."

The loss drops the Gorillas, who were ranked seventh in the nation in this weeks poll, to 1-1.

The next game for the Gorillas will be Saturday when UMass hosts another perenial lacrosse power, Rutgers University, on Boyden Field at 2 p.m.

"We won't be doing anything different," said Garber, "This is a good lacrosse team. We'll be back on Saturday."

Mrs. Moreau may be back too, if her son doesn't get some more ink in the paper.

Zoo Disc plays well in April Fools tourney

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Zoo Disc squad travelled to Manassas, Virginia to compete in the seventh annual April Fools Ultimate Frisbee tournament and the UMass representatives performed well in the 28 team tournament that included last year's National Champions, Rude Boys.

The Rude Boys, an ultimate club out of Boston was defeated by the Berkeley Flying Circus in the final. Zoo Disc was the only team to defeat Berkeley in the entire tourney.

Although Zoo Disc wasn't around for the finals they did play some excellent frisbee and considered the trip a success.

The competition consisted of qualifying rounds Saturday with the top two teams in each of the four brackets advancing to the final round Sunday.

Zoo Disc, ranked ninth in the country and one of only two college teams ranked in the Frisbee World top 20, defeated 19th ranked United Air and Space 16-4 in the first game Saturday.

On the same day Zoo Disc took on fourth ranked, The Gang, and took advantage of a game tying pass from John Knisley to Robert Barnicle with .03 seconds remaining in regulation time and went on to knock off The Gang 12-9 in overtime.

Zoo Disc then took on the Berkeley Flying Circus and defeated the 10th ranked team from Berkeley, California and the eventual tournament champion 10-7.

In the final round Sunday, single elimination as compared to double elimination in the qualifying round, Zoo Disc ran into the Rude Boys and dropped a 13-11 decision in soggy field conditions.

"We feel we had an excellent tourney," said senior Jimmy Melody. "We had a very tough draw but we played well. Our success was a total team effort. There were no real stars."

Next week Zoo Disc travels to Rutgers to participate in a tourney sponsored by The Gang and then look forward to the first ever Collegiate National Championship to be held at SUNY Purchase later this spring. Zoo Disc should be the top seed entering the tournament.

American League West: A three team race

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

The following are Rich Nangle's predictions for the 1983 American League Western Division race.

Kansas City Royals - The Royals are by no means a great team. But they're playing in a division which also includes four terrible teams and two better than average teams. Dan Quisenberry is one of the keys for this club. If he can come up with another big year it won't matter that the Royals' starting pitching staff is not full of stoppers. I mean, this team has Steve Renko in the rotation. Hal McRae is the world's best DH, and he should have another great year. When you do nothing in a game except come to the plate five times age is not so much of a factor.

California Angels - The New York Yankees of the western division have the free agent superstars, minus Don Baylor. And they also have an owner in signing cowboy Gene Autry who thirsts for victory as much as George Steinbrenner, except Autry keeps it under control. Guys like Fred Lynn, Doug DeCinces, Rod Carew and Reggie Jackson could have great years and blow the Royals away. But something tells me that this team doesn't have the desire or the pitching to win. Gene Mauch will be missed too.

Chicago White Sox - While Carlton Fisk and Greg Luzinski can not do it all for this team, there is hope on the horizon. The bullpen is tough and should be more than adequate. Starter Floyd Bannister was the number one man to get in the free agent draft. And left fielder Ron Kittle and first baseman Greg Walker are bonafide Rookie of the Year candidates. But until the White Sox get normal looking uniforms, they won't go anywhere.

Oakland Athletics - the A's are the best of the worst. No more Billyball for these guys. The Athletics weakened a strong outfield and strengthened a weak infield when they traded Tony Armas to the Red Sox for Carney Lansford. While their pitching staff is fairly young and has possibilities, the fact remains the Athletics are back to where they were before Billy Martin became manager. And the future could be worse.

Seattle Mariners - the Mariners were contending for a while in the middle of last season. It may have been a fluke but it was exciting. With Bannister gone they can forget about any chance of winning the division. There are two divisions in the west anyway; the three good teams and the four lousy teams. Seattle is in the race for the latter.

Minnesota Twins - Even though the team is deplorable thanks to Calvin (cheapskate) Griffith, baseball is exciting in Minnesota thanks to the miniature baseball field known as the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome. This is a park where even Bucky Dent could hit 30 home runs. The Twins are a team full of talented rookies including Kent Hrbek, Gary Gaetti and Jim Eisenreich. But they are at least two years away from contending. Some pitching would help.

Texas Rangers - What a joke. I feel sorry for the Texas Rangers. They have to play for a certain last place team in a city where nobody cares. I think the Rangers have an excellent chance to break the record for the worst record in baseball history. Technically, they shouldn't win a single game all season. Maybe they won't!

Faculty Senate sidesteps General Education plan

More debate needed if Senate to pass plan

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate yesterday sidestepped voting on the General Education Curriculum proposal by neither accepting nor rejecting the controversial plan.

The Senate voted to just "receive" the proposal.

The Senate threw out all six motions on yesterday's agenda and replaced them with three controversial motions.

Using the three new motions receive the proposal into the Senate, request the Rules Committee to "initiate a bylaw change to create and appoint a "general Education Council," and if that council is created, to accept the "reservations and alterations suggested by the Ad Hoc Committee's General Education report and the Academic Matters Council report."

The motions were criticized by many who attended the meeting because of the motion's non-committal nature.

"What a display. It shows the cowardice of the Senate to try anything new," former Student Government Association president Jim Murphy said.

Jay Demerath, sociology professor, defended the motions which he introduced, claiming they would generate more discussion on the issue.

"I resent what has gone on here. I resent the language that appears here. Is this (the proposal) ever going to come before us? I doubt it. When are we going to vote? Donald Gjertsen, asian studies professor, said.

The issue of general education is a "matter of widespread resolve" which needs further study, he said.

The three motions "indicate the concept of general education to be an important one," he said.

But, some senators disagreed with Demerath claiming the motions merely put off voting on the plan.

"I resent what has gone on here. I resent the language that appears here. Is this (the proposal) ever going to come before us? I doubt it. When are we going to vote?" Donald Gjertsen, asian studies professor, said.

Other senators said more discussion was needed on the proposal before a vote could be taken.

"In the last month, the Senate has stimulated a lot of discussion on general education. Until something is spelled out in definable terms," the Senate should not vote on the proposal, Fern Johnson, communication studies professor, said.

The debate on general education "hasn't gone on long enough," she said.

Senate action on curriculum proposal could postpone approval to December

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

After spending nearly two years formulating a General Education Curriculum proposal, the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate yesterday approved three new motions which could extend debate on the issue until December, 1983.

During the past two months, the Senate has both criticized and praised the proposal.

Yesterday was supposed to be the culmination of all of the debate with a vote on the proposal.

By approving the three new motions, the Senate avoided facing the question of whether to approve the proposal.

The first motion calls for the Senate to receive the proposal and continue discussing it.

That motion replaced the original Senate motion calling for the approval of the Breadth of Knowledge and Skills component of the proposal.

The second new motion requests the Senate Rules Committee to initiate a bylaw change to create a General Education Council.

This motion is complicated because in the Senate constitution, any bylaw change must be read at three Senate meetings and then must be approved by a two-thirds majority of the Senate.

This means that not until at least May 19 will the Senate vote on the creation of the Council.

This further delays discussion of any new general education curriculum which may come about.

The third motion calls for the Senate to forward to the council, if created, the reservations and alterations elicited by the Ad Hoc Committee on General Education. It also instructs the council to submit new recommendations on general education to the Senate sometime before December, 1983.

Waning input hurts women's movement

By MARY BALDWIN
Collegian Staff

A lack of interest in feminism by women in their 20's is one of the problems facing the women's movement today, the co-founder of the National Organization of Women (NOW) said yesterday in the Campus Center of the University of Massachusetts.

"Continuity in the women's movement is essential. To lose momentum would be a disaster," Sheila Tobias said during her lecture titled, "When is an Issue a Woman's Issue".

Five months ago an article appeared in the New York Times stating that women in their 20's have no perception of how things have come to be the way they are, she said.

"Young women may not realize what it used to be like. Many young women think there has always been an Equal Pay Act, available birth control on college campuses and laws against job discrimination," she said.

"There is a shortness of memory on the part of younger women to older feminists," she said.

In the past any woman who questioned her role in society was considered to be a lesbian, Tobias said.

"Young women do not want to be identified with feminism because they believe feminists are lesbians," she said.

"I am very understanding on the part of young women to formulate their own analysis of feminism but to associate feminism with lesbianism is damaging," she said.

Tobias, creator of one of the first women's studies courses in the country, spoke about their beginnings and why such courses are necessary.

"Many history majors knew nothing about women's history. At first we saw women's studies as filling gaps in the curriculum and making up for the omissions. Basically the academics of those days were not interested in women's issues. It was our responsibility to create interest in women's studies," she said.

Tobias spoke about how books ignore and trivialize the accomplishments of women during periods in history such as the American Revolution, the suffrage movement and peace movements of the past.

The suffrage movement involved two million members. "It was a really big operation and will be treated in history books as a side show," she said.

Another major movement, "the Womens Strike For Peace" in the 1950's which resulted in the banning of the testing of nuclear bombs in the atmosphere has received the same lack of recognition.

"They (the strikers) succeeded in passing the greatest environmental health pact in the world," Tobias said.

The movement was brought on by the damage done to children by strontium 90, a radioactive isotope found in the air after atmospheric nuclear testing, she said.

"Mothers took the stand that nuclear testing should be banned," Tobias said.

Women often fight for peace as mothers, Tobias said. The movement for peace and ending militarism should be a feminist issue, not only a mothers' issue, she said

Senate cuts defense rise by 50 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Budget Committee, in open defiance of President Reagan, voted 17-4 yesterday to slash his Pentagon buildup in half next year.

The panel's alternative grants the Defense Department an increase in spending authority of 5 percent after inflation for fiscal 1984, in contrast to Reagan's demand for a 10 percent hike.

Reagan's version was first rejected 19-2. An 8 percent option offered by Sen. John Tower, R-Texas, failed 14-7, before eight Republicans joined nine Democrats to adopt the 5 percent plan.

Immediately before the vote, Chairman Pete Domenici, R-N.M., made it clear he blamed administration intransigence for the defeat.

"I think it's rather incredulous to say that you can't defend this country without a 10 percent increase, and there aren't any options," he declared.

Because of the nature of the Pentagaon's long-term contracting, the vote would cut $3.3 billion from Reagan's budget for the year beginning Oct. 1, but the savings would total nearly $89 billion over five years.

It was the second highly visible budget defeat in a row for Reagan, who scored multiple successes in his first two years in office.

Late last month, the House of Representatives approved a Democratic-drafted budget that cut Reagan's defense buildup by even more, while calling for a $30 billion tax increase and restoration of $33 billion in cuts in social programs.

Republicans hold a 12-10 majority on the panel. Those voting against the 5 percent plan included Republicans Tower, Orrin Hatch of Utah, Steven Symms of Idaho and Charles Grassley, an Iowan who favors a spending freeze for defense.

Challenger crew swings in space

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Tied to 50-foot leashes, two astronauts made the first U.S. space walk in nearly a decade yesterday, floating joyously around Challenger's open cargo bay to practice repair jobs for future shuttle missions.

Astronaut Story Musgrave nearly swung himself over the side of the space ship, doing a handstand on the rail, restrained by his tether. At times, television showed the Earth spinning 176 miles below them.

"It's so bright out here," said Musgrave, the first out. Astronaut Don Peterson followed a minute later, each tying his tether to slide wires that run the length of the 60-foot-long cargo bay.

Mission Control asked how the real thing compared with the training in a large swimming tank.

"It's a little deeper pool than I'm used to working in," said Musgrave.

Peterson immediately went to a box and removed tools specially built for space use. Both astronauts flexed their arms and moved their legs to evaluate the mobility of the new $2.1 million suits.

Musgrave also climbed up the side of the rear bulkhead to take a look at the material that is flapping loose behind one engine.

Dukakis doubles student aid

BOSTON (AP) — A bill providing $34 million in state scholarship aid for the next school year, nearly double this year's appropriation, was signed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis on yesterday.

"I view this as just a first step in what I hope will be a strong effort to improve education in this state," Dukakis said.

The measure was part of an agreement between House and Senate leaders which led to passage of the state gasoline tax increase that took effect April 1.

The Senate had voted to raise the tax, from 9.9 cents per gallon to 12 cents, and commit the equivalent of a penny — about $25 million — to increased scholarship aid.

The House had voted a more modest tax increase. The final agreement hiked the tax to 11 cents and increased scholarship aid $15 million without commiting any specific tax source to fund it.

The new scholarships are expected to provide assistance to 10,000 additional students, for a total of more than 35,000. But Senate Ways and Means Chairman Chester G. Atkins said that 65,000 eligible applicants still will be turned away, "and a good percentage of these will not go on to higher education."

UMass employees to vote in Democratic convention

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Five University of Massachusetts employees will be among the 12 delegates elected to represent Amherst at the Democratic State Committee's issues convention tomorrow in Springfield, which will feature one of the nation's first straw polls for the party's 1984 presidential nominee.

However, delegates in Amherst, as well as many of the more than 4,000 from throughout the state, have expressed displeasure with the overshadowing effect they feel the ballot has had on what was designed originally as a meeting solely to determine the state's Democratic party platform.

"Clearly there has been a problem with presidential candidates exploiting the convention," said Joanne Levenson, director of the Off-Campus Housing Office, who as a delegate has been receiving almost daily letters from each of the six candidates scheduled to attend.

The annual Democratic gathering is traditionally reserved for debating and formulating party issues in the off-year from elections, but the opportunity to make Massachusetts the first industrial state without a native candidate to go on record was not passed up by its party leaders.

"It's suposed to be an issues convention," said delegate Mary Wentworth, coordinator of the Poor Women's Task Force at the Everywomen's Center, "although it's a potpourri to see who is going to be the first presidential winner. We have to look at the issues and make sure the issues are those which people feel are important."

"It's too easy for a party to get away from their grassroots constituency," Levenson said.

However, second-year delegate Donald Ross, foreign student advisor in the International Programs Office, said the poll would give the state an opportunity to have its voice heard by candidates, who usually become less accessible after receiving their party nomination.

As Progressive Caucus whip for delegates from the local state senate district, Ross said he would press for passage of a "peace package" amendment to the party platform. He expects passage for that coalition of issues, which include a nuclear freeze and rejection of the U.S. nuclear civil defense crisis relocation plans, he said.

Herb Bryan, a delegate who is a non-professional employee at UMass, said he favored an anticipated rules amendment which would allow delegates to cast a vote for an issue (such as "jobs," indicating the nominee should make creating jobs his priority), rather than an individual.

Abortion supporters, meanwhile, plan to poll delegates before the convention to judge an attempt at seeking pro-choice language in the platform, as opposed to simply settling for a ban on anti-abortion stances.

"My position is that if we lose, it would show women where we stand and that we hav to get going," said Wentworth, who plans to push for the stronger pro-choice language regardless of its chance for success.

However, veteran delegate Florence Frank, a part-time lecturer in the Writing Program, agreed with the pro-choice language, but disagreed with Wentworth's tactics, fearing the "emotional blackmail" which could prevent people from publicly supporting the language and the out-of-state reaction to a liberal state's "real message to the anti-abortion people that they've got it."

CROAK, Smith students defend rejection of Kirkpatrick

By BROOKE STATES
Collegian Staff

A hundred and twenty Smith College students and supporters gathered Monday afternoon to protest Jean Kirkpatrick's stand on human rights, and to dramatize why they were opposed to her speaking at Smith's upcoming commencement.

"Jean Kirkpatrick is not going to come to Smith to speak on commencement," said Rosemary Reed, a member of the Committee Responsible for Organizing Against Kirkpatrick, (CROAK). "The press has interpreted this as a freedom of speech issue. They claim she has been driven off campus.

"We protested Smith College honoring Jean Kirkpatrick because we feel that we have a responsibility to our values and morals namely individual worth and the human condition. It is an honor to be chosen and the member of the graduating class looks to the speaker for inspiration," she said.

John McAward also spoke at the rally. McAward works with the Unitarian Church Service Committee. He said he has been to El Salvador 30 times and has helped organize eight Congressional fact-finding trips to El Salvador.

"Despite the fact that the president of El Salvador is constitutionally capable of changing and removing ministers he does not have the power to do that because the military won't let him. In El Salvador 90 percent of the people are living in substandard conditions and 40 percent are illiterate," McAward said.

Others also expressed their opposition to Kirkpatrick.

"Several days ago the Iranian Ambassador was invited to San Francisco State College to speak. The head of the United States Mission to the U.N. refused to let him in. That was Jean Kirkpatrick," said Andy Zimbalist, a professor in the economics department at Smith, and one of the faculty organizers against Kirkpatrick.

"Three weeks ago the wife of the former Chilean president Allende was refused a visa to go on a speaking tour of American colleges. When Mrs. Kirkpatrick went to Chile she refused to comment on human rights there," he said. "This is the foreign policy she has helped formulate."

According to Zimbalist five to 10 percent of the population is in exile and 30,000 people have been killed since the coup that brought the military to power.

Still, others spoke out.

"We were opposed to her speaking at graduation because of what she stood for and because the ballot process for choosing the speaker was faulty. If she wants to speak at a lecture or class that is a different matter," said Cheng-Sin-Lin of CROAK.

Culinary controversy caused by Campus Center crepes

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

Controversy is now being stirred in the Campus Center over the issue of a University of Massachusetts student trying to sell crepes in the building.

Yesterday, Director of Building Operations Dudley Bridges called the police to confront Mary Kate Small upon learning that she was selling hot crepes in the Student Union Building without a license or a food waiver to sell food.

"She was not supposed to be there," Bridges said.

That incident was settled without a confrontation because the policemen did not have a no trespass notice with which to evict Small from the building but the issue goes on and both sides are standing firm.

For the past six months Small has attempted to sell her crepes in order to raise money for a Health clinic in Africa but the Campus Center Administration has forbidden her to do so because it violates policy on the sale of prepared food in the building.

According to Bill Harris, director of the Campus Center, Food Services has an exclusive right to sell hot food in the Campus Center and no one else is allowed to sell food unless they have an approved food waiver.

The barring of Small was a "management decision" based on a health report by Environmental, Health and Safety Specialist George Reed which said the Campus Center "is not a suitable environment for preparing food" due to liability and sanitation reasons, Bernard Wilkes, assistant director of the Campus Center, said.

Small, however, said she feels this is wrong and is determined to keep on fighting.

"Why won't they give me a waiver? They allow people to sell baked goods and I can use the same equipment that follows the same standards as the Hot Dog stand set up by Food Services," Small said.

A friend of Small's asks "what is the difference between mustard and catsup on a hot dog and putting butter and sugar on a crepe?"

Small said Reed did approve her selling of crepes but with "reservations" about the Campus Center being a suitable place to do it, and thus the Campus Center Administration has denied her the right to sell.

"I have never given up, but my attempt has been dampened by the Administration. I want to sell legally but I need support to do it. I don't like conflict but I have been forced into it," she said.

Small is out to attract attention, Bridges said.

"She defies everyone and wants to make a scene, and we are not about to let her do it," he said.

"In the future we will take care of the matter within. She will not be here," Dudley said.

Selling crepes is a question of liability and it is a risk the Campus Center cannot take, Wilkes said.

"People cannot just come in the building and do what they want to do without prior approval," Wilkes said.

"The reason I set up in the Student Union is because it was World Health day and my goal is to raise money to build a health clinic in Burundi," Small said.

Bus passenger hospitalized, JFK resident, 21, arrested

A 32-year-old man, placed under protective custody Wednesday morning by University of Massachusetts police and released 10 hours later, was picked up later that night and brought to the University infirmary, police said yesterday. Police said they had reason to believe the Holyoke man might have been diabetic.

The man was placed in protective custody at 9:25 a.m. Wednesday while on a Trailways bus at the Haigis Mall. He was released at 7:32 p.m. and later found on a PVTA bus at the Haigis Mall at 11:41 p.m. Wednesday. He was then treated at the infirmary and brought to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital, Northampton, police said. He is now in the Intensive Care Unit there. Officials at both the infirmary and Cooley-Dickinson could not specify whether the man was afflicted with diabetes.

The man, who also has a Worcester address, had been placed in protective custody on a Peter Pan bus at the Haigis Mall on March 29 and later placed under arrest on a default warrant from Barnstable police.

In other police action:

A 21-year-old University student was arrested yesterday morning and charged with driving while under the influence, failing to stop for a flashing red light, failing to stop for a red light and speeding, police said.

The John F. Kennedy tower resident was observed shortly after 1:15 a.m. yesterday speeding north on University Drive and executing a right-hand turn onto Massachusetts Ave. without stopping for the flashing red light, police said.

The suspect continued at a high rate of speed through the red light at the intersection of Commonwealth and Massachusetts Avenues and was stopped before North Pleasant Street, police said.

BOG backs Coffee Shop

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

The Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) this week put out a questionnaire testing student reaction on the University Store proposal to move into the Coffee Shop.

So far, the survey results have revealed overwhelming opposition to the proposed move, said Ron Keefe, BOG chair.

"At this point our constituency says the Coffee Shop should be kept open. I feel the issue is reaching a point where we have to say, 'look, this is how we feel,' and we want to meet with the Administration to make sure the move doesn't happen," Keefe said.

At the BOG meeting last night, the issue of the proposal was heavily discussed and although no actual vote was opposed, the majority of BOG sentiment supported stopping the University Store from moving into the Coffee Shop.

Tom Ahern, newly-appointed Student Government Association (SGA) co-president, also spoke out against the proposal and said the SGA will support the BOG on the issue.

"We want to have a Coffee Shop and you have our backing. We will be glad to help you," Ahern said.

Two principle arguments exist against the store's using the Coffee Shop as an annex, Keefe said.

"It is just not going to bring in more money than the Coffee Shop currently is. The Coffee Shop is very popular and does very well," he said.

"The University Store and Campus Center Administration say the issue is only in the planning stages but they are already taking requests to renovate the store and change over the Coffee Shop," Keefe said.

BOG members are afraid the proposal will be enacted by the University store no matter what student opinion on the matter is and ideas of possibly having a sit-in or boycott of the store were raised to prevent this.

For Keefe, however, the best way to go about it is to "finish the petition drive and take the results to the Administration and try and force the issue," he said.

Indoor pollution on the rise from wood and gas stoves

By ANN CARRNS
Collegian Staff

Nearly 100 people gathered at the University of Massachusetts yesterday to hear health professionals from several New England universities discuss the health effects of indoor pollution.

The conference, co-sponsored by the Massachusetts Public Health Association and the Public Health Division of the UMass School of Heath Sciences, was designed to update information in the relatively new area of indoor pollution. Sources of pollution discussed ranged from gas stoves, wood burning stoves and kerosene heaters to building materials such as plywood, particle board and concrete.

Stephen D. Frazier, vice-president for research at Ruch-Hampton Industries in Longwood, Fla. said indoor pollution is becoming increasingly relevant as high fuel priced force people to find alternative means to heat their homes. People also insulate their homes more tightly, he said, and this increases concentrations of pollutants from wood stoves and kerosene heaters by reducing air ventilation.

In addition to this trend, Frazier said, people now spend between 70 and 90 percent of their time indoors. This lifestyle increases their exposure to pollutants from both heating sources and building materials.

Robert W. Tuthill, a UMass public health professor, said New Englanders first turned to wood burning stoves during the 1978 energy crisis.

"Given the large woodland area in New England," he said, "that trend is probably here to stay."

However, wood burning produced both gaseous and particulate materials which can be harmful, he said. These include cancer-causing hydrocarbons, which are produced in greater amount by burning wood than by burning coal, and carbon monoxide and sulfur gas, he said.

Pollution from wood burning stoves can be minimized by burning the stove "hot," Tuthill said, because at high temperatures produce fewer pollutants than cooler, smoldering fires. In addition, proper ventilation will help prevent the pollutants from concentrating to harmful levels, he said.

Kerosene heaters are a source of carbon monoxide if their wicks are not cleaned properly, according to Brian P. Leaderer, associate professor of Public Health at Yale University. Carbon monoxide is an odorless gas which interferes with the oxygen-carrying capacity of the blood.

Radon gas is produced from decay of the radioactive element radium which is found in granite and elsewhere in the earth's crust.

The radon is emitted from rocks used for passive solar heat storage in the form of tiny particles which become lodged in the lungs when inhaled, William Dundulis a radiological health specialist said, and may increase the risk of lung cancer.

Although these and other materials are suspected of increasing the risk of cancer and other diseases, there is little experimental data to confirm it, said Edward Calabrese, a professor of public health at UMass. "I think society is making a lot of demands on this science (the study of indoor pollution) before it's really ready to give the answers," he said.

Calabrese said individuals have their own threshold for the amount of carcinogens to which they can be exposed before they develop a disease. Because of the difficulty in relating doses given to laboratory animals to humans, he said, it is hard to determine a specific risk factor for exposure to these materials.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

'A FLOWER! A SYMBOLIC DANCE TO SPRING! A LIKENING OF ECONOMIC RESURGENCE TO FLOWERS AWAKENING FROM THE DARK WINTER, THE TRIUMPH OF SUPPLY-SIDE VERITIES. ITS PROBABLY A TRICK!'

What more could a person ask?

I could go on and on about why I love apple pie, Chevrolet and my mother, but I won't because there is something more exciting on the scene. It's time for me to come out from under my checkbook and proclaim to the world "I love automated banking machines!"

Automated banking machines you ask, what's so special about those funny little machines that go beep in the night, during the day and on Sunday? Love, that's what so special about them.

Rita Murphy

Before abm's (get used to the terminology) I would stand in the long lines at my local multi-functional bank. As I would stand in the line with people counting their tens, twenties, and fifties, a sick feeling would come over me while I counted my ones.

The bald man, with the cigar sticking out of his mouth, would sneeze and shower me with affection. The old lady knitting (what else is there to do in a bank line?) would smile at me with a "oh, how cute, you're putting your allowance in the bank" look. Little did she know the pain and embarrassment her smile caused.

Then of course there are the people who bring little Sally and little Billy. The little twirps run all over the place screaming and shouting and making disgusting sounds with their armpits. Don't get me wrong I don't mind kids (I really don't mind kids, I gave it up when I was 15.) But why are they such little darlings outside and once they get in the bank, such demonic ankle biters? It just doesn't make sense. And oh, the comments they make. "Look mom, her shirt says UMass, when we go to college will we be as poor as she is?" Oh, how cute the little twits are.

Then of course, there are the wise little ones who say "You're really not going to deposit THAT in the bank are you." Why bother?" Oh, how I love those kids.

Now back to the bank.

After waiting in the line for about 20 minutes, I finally reach a teller. So I do just that, I tell her what a wonderful day it is and she replies, "Is this all you want to put in your account?" She snickers. I guess I made her day. The transaction is complete, so I say "have a nice day. She replies with a yell, "Next."

So much for conventional banks, back to the abm's.

When I approach my friendly little machine there are no lines to keep me waiting. I give my little card with my little name on it to my little machine and it politely gobbles it up. It asks me for my little password. Just my machine and I know the word. It's a secret we will share forever.

A friendly little message is then flashed on the screen, and only my machine and I know what it says.

After several beeps (a nice tune I may add) my little machine gives me my money or takes my little envelope filled with my last paycheck. The abm doesn't snicker or giggle at me regardless of the amount. It respects me, and I respect it.

My machine doesn't pass value judgements on me. I can wear jeans and sneakers and it won't look at me with distaste. It won't pretend to like me when it really doesn't care about me or my money. By the tone of its beeps, I know my little machine really does like me.

When I leave my abm, it beeps a little goodbye and flashes a thank you on the little screen. If I forget to take my little card with my little name on it, it beeps louder. How nice it is!

I love my abm! and it loves me! What more could a person ask from a bank?

Condemning criticism on Collegian critical commentary

To the Editor:

When I saw that a review was written in the Collegian of the Tokyo String Quartet's performance last Wednesday evening, I anticipated reading a review full of praise that was truly deserved. After hearing the concert myself, it seemed to me that the review would be an easy one to write; the concert was magnificent. All moments were breathtaking. The Tokyo String Quartet's high standard of excellence was maintained.

I have always been interested in how reviewers come up with some of their alleged ideas. Are they incredibly well-educated in the field of music? Or are they outside looking in? I must humbly say that although I have been a musician for a number of years and have heard a number of concerts, I still do not feel qualified to review a concert. To condemn or to congratulate? I would probably feels a bit intimidated by the readers of my article. If I wrote a bad review, would I be condemned? I know I wouldn't enjoy the feeling of condemnation and now I'm giving it to Mr. Wissoker. My apologies. It's something I think I should say for the sake of the Tokyo String Quartet.

Now I will contradict myself. Although I don't feel qualified to write a review of some local musicians or a struggling pianist, I do feel that my opinion of the Tokyo String Quartet's performance has some merit. I can safely, honestly, and firmly say that I know when it's good.

The opening phrase in Peter Wissoker's opening is what really put me in a minor mood. "The performance of the Tokyo String Quartet at the FAC Wednesday was good but not great." How, Mr. Wissoker, can you sit at your desk and write something like that? How are you qualified to make such a judgement?

I shouldn't complain excessively, after all, everyone is entitled to their own opinion. I merely want to present some very to-the-point and valid things. I feel however that at the next concert, Mr. Wissoker should get a better seat.

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the April 6 review written by William Fyne on the new Lou Reed album, "Legendary Hearts."

Aside from being offended as a Lou Reed fan, I am also disgusted at the lack of professionalism in Mr. Fyne's writing. I don't think that the sports editor would send a reporter to a football game if that reporter knew nothing of the game or that the managing editor would let an unknowing novice assemble the front page.

Why then should the arts be any different? If the arts editor lets his staff proceed in this fashion for all their assignments, I suggest he should establish some sort of guidelines for reviewers, or at least brief them on their subject beforehand.

On a strictly personal note, I would like to add that the word "mediocre" should never be applied to Lou Reed.

Mr. Reed's music has long been critically acclaimed for its style and originality. His "out of key singing", as Mr. Fyne so quaintly phrases it, is an integral part of his music.

Forget work; stay in school

I was in the Campus Center yesterday, copying over notes while relaxing on a couch outside the Blue Wall when my friend, Harry, gloomily took a seat beside me. He announced his arrival by waving his hand between my notebook and my face. Harry is not what could be called "mature for his age," which happens to be twenty-one.

"Hiya. What's new?" he asked, but not in his usual, cheerful voice. I glanced up.

"My God, you look horrible!" I gasped, with all the tact of a three-year-old child. I couldn't help it. Harry's shoulders were hunched down, his eyes had a far-out, "Twilight Zone" glaze, and his flannel shirt looked like it had just been resurrected from the bottom of the laundry bag. And between you and me, he would have benefitted from standing a little closer to a bar of Safeguard, too.

"Yeah, I know," he admitted, not taking offense. "I got some bad news from my academic dean this morning."

"Are you flunking out again?" I asked sharply. Harry's one of those aggravating people who's brilliant, but thinks the Tower Library is a branch of Southwest.

"No, it's worse than that," he replied, sadly. "I'm going to have to graduate in May. I've racked up all the credits, fulfilled my core requirements and everything. They're kicking me out, into the real world."

"I guess you'll be working, huh?"

"Working?" Harry gaped, as though he'd never heard the word before.

"It's not unheard of. Some people do it as often as five days a week," I said sarcastically. "Just send out some resumes."

"Oh, sure!" Harry laughed, "I can just see the cover letter:. . . 'I'm very interested in obtaining employment. I feel that polishing railroad tracks would not only be enjoyable, but also beneficial in a practical sense. My skills include counting to twenty in Russian, tying my own shoes, and making a terrific grilled cheese sandwich. And I'm always pleasant because I'm constantly stoned.' " He chuckled, appreciating his own wit, and then continued.

" 'Please consider the excellent courses which I have taken in preparation for a career in track polishing, including Choo-Choos of the World. There will be no objection, however, to my doing odd jobs; I have wonderful eyesight and would be of great help in picking little specks of dirt off the floor with my fingers.' He demonstrated by pulling a stray thread off his shirt. "Voila!"

"Be serious, Harry. What qualifications can you put on your resume?"

"How about this?", he snickered, " '. . . Candidate was granted summa cum laude from Happy Morning Nursery School, Class of 1964. He is currently attend the University of Massachusetts, although his academic well-being is somewhat tenuous.' "

"Very funny. What about a job objective?"

"Huh?" he looked blank.

"Why do you want to work there?"

"Well, that's pretty obvious — I need the money!" Harry snapped, as if I were a slow-minded child.

"You're supposed to say that you want the experience."

"Oh, don't worry. I've got plenty of experience!" he grinned, winking suggestively, and putting his arm around me.

"I meant in the job market!"

"I know, I know. Only kidding." He removed his arm and sat quietly for a moment. "I'd re-apply as a freshman, but I'm afraid of getting caught. It might be a felony, or something."

"Why don't you just fail all your classes?" I joked. "That way, you could play Frisbee all spring long, get a gorgeous tan, and come back in September."

"Say, that's not a bad idea!" a smile crept across his face, and he straightened his shoulders. "Thanks, you really saved my life!" Harry impulsively kissed me, then rushed off to find a Frisbee and some suntan oil.

"I really was only kidding. . .

Conference slated

During the week of April 10-17, 1983, the University of Massachusetts will commemorate the 12th Annual Black Musician's Conference.

Founded a decade ago (the original conference was biannual), the conference began a unique tradition of bringing together musicians, educators, students, and audiences in a celebration and exchange which moved beyond the conventional concert setting.

The purpose of the conference is to recognize the major contribution that Black Americans have made to American and world music and to explore the impact of this music on American life and contemporary thought.

To this end the conference has addressed a spectrum of artistic disciplines including dance, poetry, and the visual and plastic arts, and included lectures and panel discussions on the historical and social implications of Black Music. This year's conference is dedicated to the living memory of Thelonious Sphere Monk (Oct. 10, 1917-Feb. 17, 1982).

Highlights of this year's conference include concerts by Billy Taylor and the Springfield Orchestra, The Dexter Gordon Quartet, Marion Brown, Abbey Lincoln, "Dr. Jazz" Ray Copeland, and a gospel presentation by Horace Boyer and Herbert Smith. Visual artists exhibiting this year are Richard Yarde, Adger Cowans, Arturo Lindsay, James Phillips, and Ademola Olugebefola.

There will be two panels; one exploring the relationship between music and painting involving the aforementioned artists, and a second, entitled "Perspectives on Black Music", which will bring together musicians Donald Byrd and Archie Shepp, with Jeff Anthony of the National Endowment for the Arts and jazz educator, Warrick Carter.

Congressman Stokes tells of inquiry into King's death

By JENNIFER HARDY
Collegian Staff

Ohio Congressman Louis Stokes speaking at the Campus Center auditorium Wednesday evening.

Ohio congressman Louis Stokes told a sparse but interested audience Wednesday evening about the committee he chaired that was formed to investigate the assassination of the late civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Stokes said the committee was formed by Congress in 1977.

Stokes, an impressive looking six footer peered over the podium when stating a committee finding that 80 percent of the American people believe that someone in addition to James Earl Ray helped in the assassination of Dr. King.

Stokes said he had to raise funds for the committee because at its inception it had none. The funds that were raised grossed six million dollars. "I had to have everything necessary to do the investigation right" said Stokes.

Sadly recounting when his close friend Dr. King was assassinated, Stokes told the audience he was riding in his car in Cleveland Ohio when he turned on his radio and heard the distressing news of Kings murder. "King was one of the greatest men who ever walked the earth, another was the late Egyptian leader Anwar Sadat" said Stokes.

In questioning James Earl Ray, the convicted assassin of Dr. King, Stokes said he found that Ray was lacking consistency in his testimony that he had not killed King.

"I am convinced he killed King" said Stokes. "We have witnesses who said they frequently saw Ray using the bathroom in a boarding house across the street from the Hotel where King was murdered" said Stokes.

Stokes said he had a limited amount of time to complete the investigation and said he could not have an extention. In closing his lecture Stokes said the committee did a

Stokes has been named by Ebony Magazine as one of the 100 most influential Black Americans. Stokes is also the recipient of seven honorary doctorate degrees as well as being in Congress for 15 years.

Culture plagued by dual-role

By YADIRA A. BETANCES
Collegian Staff

A powerful performance at Mount Holyoke College last Friday April 1st, bewildered an audience of students, teachers and the general public with a comedy and satire about the diffeulty Hispanics face of retaining their culture while living in the United States.

Despite its short duration, "Coser y Cantar" (to sew and to sing) made a startling impact, as the audience's reactions and comments revealed.

Written by Cuban Playwright Dolores Prida the play was an excellent example of the struggles Hispanics suffer while trying to decide which cultural values to preserve.

The play's characters while operating nameless were able to make the play stand like a model representing the feelings of Hispanics that sometimes sadly fit into a dubious category of culture confusion.

"Most of my works come from personal experiences," said Prida. "They touch the Latino theme because I am one of them."

According to Prida, the Latino theme is not well documented in the American society, especially in the artistic realm. "I write drama because it talks to the world."

The play "coser y cantar" not only talked to the mixed audience of Americans and Hispanics, but it also helped erase the character imperfections the media has imposed about Hispanics. Through the comedic performance of Maria Cross, the author showed that factors such as a sordid environment, and infected cultural values in the American society drive Hispanics to a dead end.

Some might join, while others resolve to maintain the cultural ideals of the Hispanic culture. The end result can be said in a simple, yet common phrase: "If you can't beat them, join them."

trailers By Andy Gordon

Just a month ago there were only eleven pictures in production by the majors. The figure is far, far higher now, and when you include the films in pre-and post-production it's high in the hundreds. An outrageously big percentage of these films fall into two of the lamer categories of motion pictures: sequels and 3-D flicks. Several fit in both.

Jaws 3-D is set during opening week of the world's largest sea park. Dennis Quaid, Bess Armstrong and Lou Gossett are on hand as bait. The picture, which was directed by special effects wiz Joe Alves, is scheduled for release on July 22*nd*.

Amityville 3-D, from Dino DiLaurentis, has not been cast yet, but is already scheduled for an August '83 release. Should be really gory.

Emmanuelle 4 in 3-D should add a new twist to soft-core porn. Emmanuelle is 40 when the film opens, but soon enters a special rejuvenation clinic which returns her body to the condition it was in when she was 19, complete with virginity.

Taking it one step further, porno star Samantha Fox stars in a hard-core 3-D feature called Foxy Boxing. I'm not permitted to disclose here how the effect is used, but guys in the audience will be doing a lot of ducking.

Then there's Treasure of the Four Crowns, a 3-D adventure; 99 Women, a 3-D women's prison flick; Hit the Road Again, a 3-D trucker film; and the Amazing 3-D Man, starring David Carradine.

The list of sequels is a mile long. Steven Spielberg is directing three of them (actually four if you count the soon-to-be-released Twilight Zone movie). First he's shooting Raiders of the Lost Ark, Part 2, which has Harrison Ford reprising his role and takes place three years earlier than the original. Henry Thomas and Drew Barrymore return for E.T. II, with a screenplay by Melissa Mathison, and then Spielberg will take on 2010: Odyssey II, written by Arthur Clarke.

Harrison Ford also returns, as do the other original characters, to Revenge of the Jedi, the third installment in the Star Wars saga, due in May. Superman III is also due soon. It again stars Christopher Reeve and Margot Kidder (in a teeny role, after she publicly ragged on the producer) as well as Richard Pryor and new romantic interest Annette O'Toole. Superman IV, incidentally, is now in pre-production and shooting has been completed on Supergirl, with Helen Slater in the lead.

Also reprising original roles will be Arnold Schwarzenhegger in Conan II; and the original cast back for more in Star Trek III: In Search of Spock.

Sequels we really don't need include Porky's II: The Next Day;Love at Second Bite, again starring George Hamilton; Beach Party II, with Frankie Avalon and Annette Funicello; Airplane III; Smokey is the Bandit, Part II and The Sting II, both starring Jackie Gleason; and Surf II, vhose title is strictly a gimmick, there never was a Part I.

On the horror market, there's Halloween IV, produced by John Carpenter; The Howling II; Aligator II; The Boogeyman II,ator

On the horror market, there's Halloween IV, produced by John Carpenter; The Howling II; Aligator II; The Boogeyman II;and, get psyched, Anthony Perkins as Norman Bates returning after 22 years in a mental hospital in Psycho II.

LOCAL BEST BET: Harold and Maude is showing tomorrow night at the Campus Center Auditorium. Directed by Hal Ashby, the picture stars Bud Cort and Ruth Gordon, with music by Cat Stevens. It's a must-see.

Teri Garr and Jackie Gleason clown it up in The Sting II, currently in release.

Robin's throb-in' failure

THROBBING PYTHON OF LOVE (Casablanca)
Robin Williams

By DAVID CHEVAN
Collegian Staff

In 1978 Robin Williams made "na-no na-no" a household term. His weekly half hour sitcom, Mork and Mindy, became an overnight sensation thanks primarily to Williams's comic timing and almost non-stop improvisatory style. But the corporate powers that be would have nothing to do with this stuff, and kept adding more "fixed" (i.e., non-improvisatory) lines, weird characters, and Jonathan Winters, almost obliterating any of Williams's abilities all in the name of high ratings.

Five years later, Williams struck out on his own with work like Popeye and Garp, two highly anticipated and consequently disappointing films. On the tail of this, his critical nadir, it is not surprising that Williams has come out with is his most commercial work to date. From a lesser artist, Throbbing Python of Love, Williams second comedy album, might be considered reasonably good. However, in comparison to Williams's live appearances, his sketches on Mork and Mindy, and his first comedy album Reality, What a Concept, this album is but another disappointment. The album is one overextended gag focusing on Williams's sexual prowess, on his "Throbbing python of love", or "Mr. Happy" for the younger set. While I have nothing against dirty jokes, this all falls far below the standards Williams has set previously.

On his first album there was an entirely improvised sketch entitled, "A Meltdowner's Nightmare", a Shakespearean parody of Three Mile Island, there was a visit to Mr. Roger's Neighborhood, and a William F. Buckley interpretation of Little Red Riding Hood, on the new album Williams approaches women in the audience and asks them if they want to "Shake Hands with Mr. Happy." There are a couple of quick clever sketches including an Elmer Fudd imitation of Bruce Springsteen (Springsteen imitations are in vogue this spring). This album is commercial comedy designed for a fourteen year old male mentality, good for some, but I'll stick with my old Williams.

The Gorillas to challenge Rutgers

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

Even though his team had been blown off the field in the fourth quarter by an outstanding Cornell University team and lost, 11-6, University of Massachusetts lacrosse coach Dick Garber still smiled, as he explained the collapse.

"We just ran out of gas," said the Gorilla mentor. "That's the only reason I can think of. I think our close defensemen got tired of chasing the quick attack of Cornell."

That may have been the reason for the fourth quarter demise, but it only seemed a matter of time before Cornell pulled away. The Gorillas simply played a mediocre game against one of the top ranked teams in the nation and got burned. Dropping balls and making bad passes catches up with a team playing such high quality competition.

Even Garber admitted a 3-1 halftime score between two nationally ranked teams was ridiculous, but actually the Gorillas were fortunate to still be in the game.

After the third period, in which the Gorillas managed to stay close, 5-4, the quickness of the Cornell attack began to take its toll on the Gorilla "D".

Cornell scored four goals on isolation one on ones and the Gorilla defense, which was supportive in the first three quarters, reacted a step slow. Umass was down 10-4 and a comeback did not seem likely.

"We had opportunites that we did not capitalize on and if we had we still might have pulled it out. But all of a sudden you're down 10-4 and you're in trouble," commented Garber.

What the Gorillas must do now is wipe Wednesday's loss from their minds and get ready mentally for Rutgers when they knock heads with the Scarlet Knights tommorow at 2 p.m. at Boyden Field.

"They're a very good team," said Garber. "They had potential last year and this year they have an excellent team."

Rutgers (3-2), ranked number 12 by the latest United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association poll, lost to New Hampshire 12-11 and top ranked Syracuse 20-11.

The top man for Rutgers is returning All-American midfielder Al Ray, who takes care of the faceoff duties for the Knights, and returns for his final year of eligibility after handling the fullback duties for the Rutgers football team the last couple of years.

Gerry Moreau, who was bombarded by 57 shots against Cornell, will start in the net for the Gorillas, who will be looking to return to the form that earned them a 11-4 win over Hobart last Saturday.

Women's lacrosse shuts out Springfield, 9-0

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

Although it was a cold day for a lacrosse game, the University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team was hot as it trampled over Springfield, 9-0.

The Gazelles fired 25 shots on Springfield goaltender Lyn Dulick. Tish Stevens lead the attack with a hat trick and two assists after missing two games with a knee injury.

"Tish is a visible person in the attack," coach Pam Hixon said. "I think it shows statistically in the attack. She was our third highest scorer last year. We know she can produce goals. We just need to have her out there to do it."

The UMass defense was equally impressive in the rout as UM goalkeeper Debbie DeJesus only had to turn away five Springfield shots.

"We play a combination zone," Hixon said. "When Springfield had the ball we stayed active to put the pressure on the ball. We played better today than against Yale (a 4-3 come from behind win last week). We're putting together a good squad."

Six of the Gazelles nine goals came in the second period when Springfield was spending time trying to net a score on DeJesus. Ro Tudryn started UMass off four minutes into the game and Linda Haytayan and Stevens followed to give Massachusetts a 3-0 lead at halftime.

Throughout the start of the second period, Springfield was hustling hard but running in circles. The voice of Hixon could be heard in the UMass end saying, "pressure, intercept, pressure ball!" as Springfield held the ball and tried to get a shot on the net.

But every time Springfield would bring the ball to the Gazelle's end, UMass would turn around, pass the ball back to the Springfield end and, most of the time, score.

"The Springfield goalie played a super game," Hixon said of Dulick. "The score could have been a lot higher. She made a lot of saves today."

Stevens scored the fourth goal of the contest for UMass at 23:37 of the second period. After receiving a pass from Pam Moryl, Stevens passed in front of the net and whirled the ball past the left shoulder of Dulick.

Moryl came back four minutes later to get the first of two goals for the aggressive attacker with an assist from Stevens. After getting the pass, Moryl whipped the ball in from the side of the net.

Michelle Boyer scored the Gazelles sixth goal at 17:40 with a beautiful play. After connecting with Moryl, Boyer took the pass and ran across the net while holding the ball long enough to pull Dulick to the side of the net. Boyer reached over her shoulder to sweep the ball past the moving goalie.

Haytayan and Moryl each scored their second goal's of the game two minutes apart and Stevens completed her hat trick by putting in her third goal just before the buzzer.

With a record of 3-1, the Gazelles will take on Northeastern University on Saturday with a 1:00 start.

Softball split at Brown

KINGSTON, R.I. — The University of Rhode Island and the University of Massachusetts played two good games yesterday in Rhode Island. The two Atlantic Ten rivals split their double-header with URI shutting down UMass, 3-0 in the opener and the Minutewomen taking the second game 3-1.

UMass only managed a Sally Maher single in the opener, but in the second game was able to get eight hits, most of them scattered throughout the lineup.

"I felt like we offensively couldn't break anything open in either game," said head coach Elaine Sortino. "I can honestly say nothing went our way offensively. It was frustrating."

Sophomore Lori Whidden frustrated Minutewomen batters by only giving up a single to Maher and walks to Alison Rioux and Beth Talbott while striking out two.

URI managed two runs in the third and a triple by Debbie Pereira and a home run by Tracey Turner on consecutive long shots down the right field line. URI scored again in the fourth to take a 3-0 lead.

UMass' best shot came in the seventh inning when Jackie Gaw got on base due to a URI error. Talbot walked but then the rally died and so did the game.

"Those hitters were lucky (talking about Turner and Pereira). They were late," said Sortino.

In the second game, UMass had no intention of playing catch-up. After Rioux sent a shot downtown to centerfield that was caught, Chris Coughlin reached first base after URI's Pereira dropped the throw from the third baseman. Talbot walked two batters later and Maher, who has been hitting very well lately (at a .319 clip), smacked a three run home run to right.

That, as things turned out, would be all that UMass needed in this game. But URI could never be counted out. In the rest of the game the UMass offensive effort kept shorteircuiting due to some bad calls and some mental errors. URI picked up a run in the fourth and that was it.

Maher shone at the plate, going two for three with a homer and a single with three RBI's in the second game and getting the only hit in the first game.

Janet Miller sent a deep shot to left field for a double but was thrown out trying to stretch it into a triple. Marianne Lombardi also played well going two for three (two singles).

Both pitchers threw well in both games. Lynn Stockley picked up her second loss against four wins in the opener and Kathy Reed upped her record to 8-2 with a one hitter in the nightcap.

UMass now 12-4 travels to New Hampshire for another double-header tomorrow at Durham.

"We are going to work on our bunting and base-running," said Sortino. That's where UMass made several of their errors.

NOTES: Gaw played DH nursing a sore shoulder and Talbot filled in very well behind the plate. Rioux showed why she's an All-American shortstop by pulling off some super plays.

Men's track team to start its uncertain season tomorrow

By LAURIE FISHER
Collegian Staff

After a challenging fall season, the University of Massachusetts men's track team is not easing back into competition this spring. Their first meet of the outdoor season will be this weekend against three of the top four New England schools, Dartmouth College, North Eastern University and Boston College which is hosting the meet. Coach Ken O'Brien has no illusions as to where the UMass track team stands in respect to their Division I competitors.

"I've absolutely no idea of what the results will be, we haven't competed in six weeks. This weekend will enable us to assess our situation and draw up a game plan for the season," O'Brien said Thursday.

Here is a brief profile of the top UMass track competitors:

JOHN WRIGHT: "I think John will continue to perform as one of the best high hurdlers in New England. I hope his consistent performances indoors will carry over to the outdoor season," commented O'Brien.

Wright, a senior, won the high hurdle event at the New England track championships with a time of 7.53 seconds in early March.

BRIAN OSBORN: A junior who placed third last year at the New England in the 400 yard dash continues to make progress. "Brian is a stronger runner, he can run the same distance with less effort," O'Brien said.

JOHN KEELAN: He has traditionally been a middle distance runner, placing fifth in the 1000 meter event last year, although he has the ability to run 5000 meters.

O'Brien said Keelan will be an experiment this season as they try to push him into the longer distances where he has more of a chance of placing.

STEVE HYDER: The UMass shotput record holder with a distance of 53'6.5" has significantly improved this year — he throws over a foot further. "Steve is working on the hammer. Although it is not his best throwing event, it is the one I think he has the most future potential in," O'Brien added.

RONALD FARBER: A sophomore who won the Eastern discus event last spring can expect a tough season with most of the good discus throwers returning for another season.

JOHN PANACCIONE: The leading freshman runner has the potential to consistently score if he can shake his injury jinx, O'Brien said. He has a knee tendon probem that arose from too much training.

Greg Mader and Todd Johnson will continue to compete in the decathlon event.

Middle distance runner Rick Dorion continues to be plagued with seriously strained tendons.

University reseachers gain access to world renowned supercomputer today

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts researchers will communicate with one of the world's most powerful computers for the first time today as they sign a timesharing agreement that will provide regular access to Colorado State University's Cyber 205 supercomputer.

The Cyber 205, one of only 41 of its kind in the world, is known in the research community as a class VI computer and is manufactured by Control Data Corporation.

The supercomputer will communicate with UMass through an already installed 1,601-mile phone line, according to University Computing Center Director Conrad A. Wogrin.

The computer is valued between $12 and $15 million. The Cyber 205 and the Cray I, its competitor, are the only class VI computers in the world.

These class VI supercomputers are at the forefront of biomedical research, atmospheric studies, geophysics and petroleum engineering because of highly sophisticated modeling ability, according to Edward H. Coughran, director of the Institute for Computational Studies at Colorado State University.

"It (the timesharing agreement) is mainly for people who have very large problems of a kind that don't go on the computers we have here," Wogrin said.

He said Colorado State's computer can complete 200 million operations per second while the system at UMass is able to compute only 7 million operations each second.

Colorado State University will charge each institution researcher $1,000 per hour of computer time, which will be charged to individual researchers.

"It is strictly out of the research grants and contracts that it (the fee) is paid from," Wogrin said. The UMass Computing Center charges $800 per hour of computer time, Wogrin said.

While the computer system at UMass is an interactive system, the Cyber 205 is a batch system. The computer reads in sets of date, instructions for computing those data and "runs till it's finished," Wogrin said.

He said that while UMass will benefit from the enhanced computer facilities, Colorado State will benefit as well because "being where we (UMass/Amherst) are, we can attract people from different institutions." Increasing use of the system will help to defray the $400,000 monthly lease payment Colorado State makes for use of the system, Wogrin added.

"You can't maintain a ranking University without giving faculty the facilities that give it the reputation," Wogrin said. "For a faculty of that type, you have to have those facilities."

Student input to be heard via referenda

By PAUL DESMOND
Collegian Staff

Today and tomorrow the Student Government Association (SGA) is holding elections on five referendum questions.

The issues being voted on are: the establishment of the State Student Association of Massachusetts on the University of Massachusetts at Amherst campus; the proposed reorganization of the Undergraduate Student Senate; proposed changes in on-campus living options; Residential College academic and social programs; and University policy concerning South Africa.

Question one asks whether students support the establishment of a UMass/Amherst Chapter of the State Student Association of Massachusetts (SSAM) funded through a $1 dollar per semester increase in the Student Activities Fee.

SSAM is seeking the support of all state colleges and universities. A similar referendum question will be run on at least six other state campuses this spring, according to Mike Ferrigno, State Student Coordinator.

Once fully organized, SSAM would represent all state college and university students' interest in the state legislature and other policy-making groups in areas such as financial aid, Ferrigno said.

Ferrigno expects the referendum question will have widespread student support and emphasized the need for a large turnout.

"We have a track record students can respect and be proud of," he said, citing SSAM's registration of more than 6,000 students statewide for last fall's gubernatorial election as an example of the group's effectiveness.

Question two asks students to decide if the Undergraduate Student Senate should be reorganized to reduce the number of senators and to elect them at large. Senators are currently elected from each dormitory, from among commuters and Greeks, and from the Third World Caucus.

Former student senator David McCarthy supports the reorganization effort. He believes issues would be more manageable in a smaller senate.

Democrats support Mondale

By DAVID B. MINER
Collegian Staff

This past weekend more than 4,000 Massachusetts Democrats met in Springfield to establish a party platform for the next two years.

Billed as an issues convention, the event turned into a showcase which attracted national media coverage after Massachusetts senior Sen. Edward M. Kennedy removed his hat from the ring.

See related convention stories on page 5

All six of the announced national Democratic hopefuls were on hand to woo delegates as they voted in the first presidential preference poll to be conducted in a major industrial state without a favorite son candidate.

As expected, the front-runner, former Vice-President Walter Mondale, won the endorsement of the convention, narrowly defeating an initiative put forth by the Massachusetts AFL-CIO in which delegates cast their votes for "jobs" rather than selecting a candidate. By doing this the AFL-CIO wanted to show that jobs were the primary issue on the voters' minds.

Mondale received 29.3 percent of the vote compared to 25.6 percent for jobs.

California Sen. Alan Cranston did better than he had predicted in his preconvention press conference. He said he was "ranked by the national press as being a distant fourth in the six man race."

"My object in coming to Springfield is to show that I am competitive with the other candidates, to give credibility to my campaign. I will be happy with any percentage above one percent of the total vote."

He did better than that, receiving 16.9 percent of the total which leaped him past senators John Glenn (15.3 percent) and Gary Hart (10.5 percent). The other two hopefuls, Fritz Hollings and Reubin Askew each received less than one percent.

Over-shadowed by the preference poll was the main reason the Democrats met, that of setting a party platform.

Palestinian gunman murders mediator for Israeli peace

ALBUFEIRA, Portugal (AP) — A leading PLO advocate of reconciliation with Israel was assassinated Sunday by a gunman who pumped five bullets into his head and chest at point-blank range in a crowded hotel lobby and escaped under police gunfire.

An extremist Palestinian splinter group claimed responsibility for the murder.

Issam Sartawi, the Palestine Liberation Organization's European coordinator, collapsed in a pool of blood by the hotel reception desk. Police said he died instantly and that an aide suffered a thigh wound in the attack.

Sartawi was representing the PLO at the 16th Socialist International, a conference of socialist politicians held in this coastal resort.

Witnesses said bystanders screamed in panic as the gunman, dressed in a light suit, walked up to Sartawi, shot him five times, then ran out of the hotel waving a pistol.

In Damascus, Syria, a fanatic PLO splinter group blamed for several attacks on moderate Palestinians claimed responsibility for the killing, saying Sartawi had tried to sell out the Palestinian cause.

"It is our pleasure to communicate to you our success in implementing the death sentence towards a criminal and a traitor," said a statement by the Revolutionary Council of the Fatah. The faction is led by Abu Nidal, a PLO renegade.

The PLO blamed Israeli secret police for the killing, but Israeli officials condemned the attack.

On the Israeli-occupied West Bank, where Sartawi was born, Palestinian newspaper editor Ziad Abu-Ziad said, "He was one of the best Palestinian minds."

The 47-year-old, U.S.-educated cardiologist was a key figure in contacts between Israelis and the PLO. He helped set up a four-hour meeting in January between PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat and three Israeli leftists.

Sartawi also reportedly worked to arrange swaps of Israeli and Palestinian prisoners from last June's Israeli invasion of Lebanon. His efforts won him a nomination for the 1983 Nobel Peace Prize.

Sartawi joined the PLO after the 1967 Arab-Israeli war. He was a leader of al-Fatah, Arafat's guerrilla organization, but later formed his own Action Committee for the Liberation of Palestine.

Citizens supportive of nuke freeze in muddy Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — Mud, not missiles, troubles Muscovites in this month of downpours. But, just as in Dubuque or Dusseldorf, the mention of a "nuclear freeze" can draw a quick nod from the ordinary Russian.

"Of course, it's the best idea, this freeze," said Yevgeny Dimitrovich, a carpenter who leisurely window-shopped with his wife on Kutusovsky Prospekt. "More bombs won't help either you or us."

The comment was typical among people questioned by an American reporter in central Moscow.

The Soviet population is bombarded each day with reports and commentaries on the complexities of the U.S.-Soviet missile deadlock.

Some grasp the details. Young radio technician Vitaly Shakov, for example, recited the Kremlin line on the issue of medium-range missiles in Europe: President Reagan's call for a cutback in Soviet rockets would mean "one-sided disarmament" by the Soviets, and U.S. aircraft should be counted in the nuclear equation.

But other Muscovites were as unfamiliar with the intricacies of warheads, throw-weights and first strikes as are most Americans.

Instead, in the spring thaw, they are preoccupied with maneuvering through the mud and with angling a good assignment in next Saturday's "subbotnik," the annual spring cleanup when everyone volunteers a day's work as streetsweeper, trash-hauler or seedplanter.

Questions about the arms race still could turn Muscovites talkative. There are two things they said they were sure of: the "goodness" of the American people, and the "common sense" of a nuclear freeze.

"Ordinary Americans are a sympathetic people, a good nation," said Shakov, 26. "... We have the same skies over us."

Shakov and the others interviewed through an interpreter knew about the U.S. nuclear freeze movement, and said they liked it.

"I think it is a very, very reasonable idea," Irina Kovalenko said. "It's only common sense. And then in the future I think they should destroy all the weapons."

Bust of burglar modeled by witness

SANTA FE, N.M. — A woman who witnessed a burglary last month gave police a description of the man in the form of a seven-inch bust she fashioned out of clay.

The bust, signed "Mountain" by the Santa Fe artist, is being kept well-watered by detectives who hope it will yield a clue before it dries up and falls apart, police said.

The bust is of a man the woman reportedly saw robbing her neighbor's house on March 18, officers said.

Little information, including the name of the Santa Fe artist, could be released on the burglary, Santa Fe police Sgt. Gilbert Ulibarri said.

Police Capt. Rick Montoya was skeptical the sculpture would help in identifying the burglar.

"It looks like anyone," he said.

Black mayoral defeat could thin votes in '84

CHICAGO — Democrats are keeping a nervous watch on Chicago's bitter mayoral campaign, fearing defeat for Harold Washington on Tuesday could drain away vital black support for their 1984 presidential nominee.

Some Democrats already are speaking of disciplinary measures against Chicago ward bosses who are backing Republican Bernard Epton against Washington, hoping to be the city's first black mayor.

Some black leaders, meanwhile, say the party must be held to account if it can't deliver white votes. Some predict a Washington defeat would discourage blacks from turning out in 1984.

Murderer happy in luxury jail

BEDFORD HILLS, N.Y. — Jean Harris, the former school headmistress serving a 15-year to life sentence for murdering "Scarsdale Diet" author Dr. Herman Tarnower, says she is much happier in her new living quarters than she was in regular prison.

She is among 26 Bedford Hills Correctional Center inmates housed in Fiske Cottage under a program for prisoners with good records.

The brick building has private rooms, patios, wall-to-wall carpeting and portable televisions.

"We all love it here," Mrs. Harris was quoted as saying in the New York Daily News yesterday. "We think it's a great place."

Mrs. Harris' room has pink, green and yellow curtains, with matching pillow cases.

Live mannequins no 'dummy' of a deal

BOSTON — Eleven out of 12 people walk right by model Mary Murphy without a second glance. But that twelfth sees something different — a mannequin that needs to blink occasionally.

Helen Aiken, the owner of a women's clothing store in the city's Copley Square, has hired two women to model clothes in her shop window.

They must pose, motionless.

"A human being shows off the clothes so much better," said Ms. Aiken. "I can hire a lot of models for what I'd spend on a dummy."

Sitting or standing mannequins cost $600 to $1,200 she said.

Women unite for on-the-job safety

By ONAIDA FOX
Collegian Correspondent

Women Organized for Occupational Safety and Health (WOOSH) at the University of Massachusetts merged last week with a Boston-based occupational safety coalition to serve as watchdogs for women in the Valley against health hazards in the work place.

Myra Hindus, a member of WOOSH, said the purpose of the merge with the Massachusetts Coalition for Occupational Safety and Health (MassCosh) was to provide stronger support for women in hazardous work places.

Members of WOOSH expressed concern as to whether the merge with MassCosh would be in the group's best interest.

"I want to know that MassCosh needs us as much as we need them," one member said. She said she wanted to know more about MassCosh politics before she had to invest money in membership fees.

MassCosh is made up of 11 members from unions in both eastern and western Massachusetts.

WOOSH, which was organized three months ago, has written fact sheets on women and safety in the valley in clerical, laundry, retail, and food service work. Members recently wrote a fact sheet on video display terminals, VDT's and their health effects, said Jenni Gunnell, a member of the group.

"Writing this fact sheet was controversial enough," because of problems with the University, one member said.

WOOSH is funded by the Haymarket fund and by fundraising events conducted by the members.

Meetings are held at 5:15 p.m. every Thursday in the Everywoman's Center located in Wilder Hall. The five-member organization would like to draw more members in the community, Hindus said.

Alertness the key to exam performance

By FRED STEINWAY
Collegian Correspondent

For most students, the demand for good performance in examinations creates some stress and anxiety. But there are some things students can do and avoid doing that can make exam time easier and more successful, according to health officials at the University of Massachusetts.

"Some physical exercise is important so body and mind are both alert," said David Kraft M.D., director of the University Mental Health Services at Hills House South. "If you have a routine of exercise, don't leave it off during exam times," he said.

"In preparing for exams students often don't take time off for themselves," said Kraft. "Pace yourself. A 10-minute or half hour break can really improve your performance," Kraft said.

Staying up late to study will harm test performance, although some individuals do well, Kraft said.

"Caffeine can keep you awake," Kraft said, if the student is about to fall asleep. "You're better awake than asleep at an exam," he said.

It is wise to be cautious, though, in the use of coffee. "If a person is sensitive to caffeine, (he) better be careful," Kraft said. Have half a cup and sit quietly for a while without talking, until you feel the stimulus from the coffee. Then go to your work. "Know yourself," counsels Kraft.

Drugs are probably the least helpful way to prepare for an exam. "Be very careful about using very strong stimulants," Kraft said. "I have seen students flunk tests this way," he said.

Mental health educator Lynn Bechtel presents an Exam Alert Workshop to fraternities or residences upon request. She can be contacted for a workshop at the University Mental Health Services, 545-2337.

Radiation, pregnancy an ongoing study

By CATHERINE COLLINS
Collegian Correspondent

An ongoing controversy as to whether or not pregnant women who operate Video Display Terminals (VDT) are in danger of adverse pregnancy effects due to radiation is currently being addressed at the University of Massachusetts.

"Radiation is on the minds of the people these days. There is no radiation problem at this time," said Jim Tocci, radiation safety officer for the department of Environmental Health and Safety.

Myra Hindus, the coordinator for Working Women's Task Force at the University of Massachusetts Everywoman's Center, said, "There is a need for more study. It isn't an open and shut case."

The issue first surfaced in Canada where occurrences were reported at a Vancouver hospital. Since the installation of VDT's at the hospital in 1978, it was reported that only one of six pregnancies among women working at the machines resulted in a normal full-term birth, Hindus said.

One study conducted by the U.S. Army found that during the period between October 1979 through October 1980, seven miscarriages were reported as well as three cases of congenital malformation.

Even though there are other more obvious problems which affect all VDT users such as eye and muscle strain, the radiation problem is the one which attracts the most attention, said Anita Seroll, environmental hygienist with the UMass Department of Environmental Health and Safety.

"Radiation gets bad publicity," she said.

A study reported by the "Health Physics Journal" in 1982 stated very few VDT's have been found to emit x-rays at levels exceeding the regulatory limit. The VDT's which exceeded the limits were either withdrawn from the market or modified.

Hindus said, "There is low level radiation. It is the cumulative effect of working on those machines that is being questioned."

A study will soon begin by the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) on the impact of VDT's on pregnant women. Present plans are to include 5,000-6,000 pregnancies in a retrospective study. Tocci said, however, he believed the issue has already been "put to sleep very carefully."

Currently, workers in Canada and at Boston University have won the right to do alternative work during pregnancy. According to Tocci, "Radiation is a part of the universe. Technology knows better.

"We're going to have to live with it and we're going to have to understand it," he said.

A man of two faces relays kindness through spirituality

Baba Ram Dass Collegian photo by Jim Powers

By GLEN GOLDSTEIN
Collegian Staff

The incense and flowers on the stage at Northampton High School yesterday seemed to be waiting for the speaker, spiritual seeker Baba Ram Dass. A small minority of the crowd, drugged, with glazed eyes, were awaiting Dr. Richard Alper, former Harvard professor turned psychedelic mushroom muncher. The audience got both, from one man.

Sitting on a blue reclining chair while he spoke, Ram Dass (Alpert) looked not like the stereotyped image of a spiritual seeker (flowering robes and beads) as much as he looked like your old uncle from New York.

Ram Dass explained that there is Ram Dass, who is spiritual, beautiful and kind. There is also Dr. Richard Alpert, who is greedy and lustful — two sides of the same man.

People would approach Ram Dass and tell him that his spiritual books had changed their lives and made them happy.

"For years everybody wanted Ram Dass, not Alpert," Ram Dass said, "but sometimes Alpert would sneak out."

Ram Dass made several jokes about the two sides of his personality, but most of his talk was on the desire to help people while knowing that not everybody in need can be helped.

"I know that there are people in India who are blind because of cataracts. They need an operation that costs $10 and takes four minutes," Ram Dass said. "Three of us went to see the new Monty Python movie last night. That was $10 right there."

If the person who was blind and needed the $10 was his father, cousin, or even a person outside the auditorium begging, Ram Dass said that of course they would get the money from him, because they would be of "us."

"Where is the level where 'them' becomes one of 'us'?" Ram Dass asked.

Later Ram Dass talked briefly about his work with the anti-nuclear movement. He said the fear that makes him protest against nuclear weapons is the same fear that causes the paranoia in some people that make them want nuclear weapons.

UMass professor dies from heart attack at 53

University of Massachusetts Professor Richard W. Trueswell, 53, died of a heart attack Friday at Bolling Air Force Base, Washington, D.C.

Trueswell, of 3 Kennedy Drive, Hadley, was a professor in the department of industrial engineering and operations research at the School of Engineering, where he had been department head for 10 years.

He was a consultant to Bolling AFB on leave of absence from UMass and a retired colonel in the Air Force Reserve.

Born in Newark, N.J., Trueswell was graduated from the Stevens Institute of Technology, Hoboken, N.J., where he received a bachelor's degree in mechanical engineering and master's degree in industrial management. He received his doctorate from Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill.

He was a member of a number of honorary and professional societies.

He leaves his wife, Wilma (Morgan) Trueswell; three sons, Richard, William and John, all at home; and a daughter, Wilma Mary Trueswell of Manilus N.Y.

Visiting hours will be from 2-4 p.m. and 7-9 p.m. Tuesday. Funeral Services will be Wednesday at 9 a.m. at Douglas Funeral Home, Amherst, with burial in Massachusetts National Cemetery, Bourne.

in a committee of over 12 members," he said.

McCarthy said a smaller senate would encourage better attendance and more active participation among senators, something that is lacking in the current senate.

"Even at the most important meetings we can only get three-quarters of the senate to show up," he said.

But Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan disagrees with McCarthy.

"Reorganization would cut down on representation and make the senate less responsive to student needs," he said.

"What the referendum question doesn't address is that we'd have the same problems (with attendance) with less senators," Sullivan said. "A smaller group would only develop more centralization of power."

Question three, if ratified, would express students' desire for the administration to allow the option of co-ed bathrooms in co-ed dormitories to eliminate forcing students to use bathrooms on a floor other than the floor they live on.

Mark Welch, author of the question, said the basis of the question is to allow students the opportunity to choose their own living conditions.

"All options now exist, but you can't select which you want," Welch said.

Director of Housing Services Dr. Joseph Zannini said it is unlikely the administration will change its policy on the co-ed bathroom issue.

"Our policy is clear," Zannini said. "It appears to me that the referendum is an opinion survey. I don't think an opinion survey is going to change our position. We don't feel it (co-ed bathrooms) is a policy we can support or defend."

Question four concerns an administration proposal to eliminate the academic, social and arts programs offered in the Residential Colleges. Students are asked to indicate whether they favor the continuation of these programs.

Bruce Levy, an assistant to the SGA president, supports the Residential College programs.

"I think the programs are very valuable to people in the dorms," Levy said. "They bring academics down to where people live. They help break down the hugeness of the University."

Zannini said he also supports continuation of the programs.

"I strongly support the idea of academics in our residence halls," Zannini said. He also indicated that he would like to see the programs expand.

The final question deals with UMass funding and sponsorship of academic contacts with South Africa.

Referenda Elections — April 11 & 12

These are the questions which appear on the ballot:

1. Do you support the establishment of a UMass - Amhesrst Chapter of a State Student Association of Massachusetts through a one dollar ($1.00) per student/per semester fee allocated from Student Activities Trust Fund? This will represent a one dollar increase in the Student Activities Fee per semester.

YES
This will establish a funding mechanism for the UMass contribution to fund a State Student Association of Massachusetts for the purpose of lobbying for student concerns. The SSAM would be composed of the 28 State schools working in unified effort to link students together. This could result in more student representation and recognition on the state level.

NO
SSAM would be forced to be funded through alternative means. Either through SATF monies without a raise in the present fee, or through grants from the administration.

2. The Student Senate currently consists of 130 members, with representatives elected from each dorm, the commuters, the Greeks, and the Third World Caucus. It has been proposed to reorganize the Senate to reduce the number of senators and to elect at large. Do you feel the Undergraduate Student Senate should initiate the process to amend the SGA Constitution to reorganize the membership of the Senate to reflect this proposed change?

YES
This would advise the Senate to initiate an investigation of the present Undergraduate Student Senate. By restructuring the Senate, there would be a reduction of senator seats and would change the constituencies to multiple dor. / per seat.

NO
The Senate would continue to exist in its present form and would not change to reflect this proposal. Each dorm/house would continue to have it's presently allocated number of seats.

3. Do you favor a plan which would expand the University Residence Hall living options to include the four options listed below, replacing and adding to the two living options now available. The four options would be: 1. A completely single sex dorm; 2. A single sex floor in Co-ed dorm; 3. A Co-ed floor with single sex bathroom; and 4. A Co-ed floor with Co-ed bathroom.

YES
This would ask the University Administration to add #3 & #4 as options to the present living arrangements, giving students a larger number of living options.

NO
Would maintain the present perference of single sex or co-ed dorms with single sex bathrooms.

NO PREFERENCE
I live off campus.

4. The Residential Colleges support a variety of academic, social issues, and fine and performing arts course throughout the residence hall system. The University administration has proposed to eliminate these programs. Do you favor the continuation of residentially-based academic programs?

YES
This would recommend to the Faculty Senate who is at present time debating this issue, to maintain the Residential Colleges as they presently exist. The Residential Colleges are supported by the School of Education and offr courses that are not otherwise offered in a community setting. They also provide educational centers in the community.

NO
Means that you do not favor the present residentially based programs and would prefer to have all courses taught in academic buildings.

5. Do you favor University regulation and reviewing of Umass funding and sponsorship of academic contacts with South African educational institutions, government and corporations?

YES
This would suggest to the Board of Trustees and/or Faculty Senate to regulate University funded academic contact with South Africa.

NO
You do not think that the University should establish such regulations in this area.

If you have any questions or want more information, plase contact the SGA Hotline, 545-0341.

Local voice heard at Democratic convention

Delegates support Mondale, go with the flow on issues

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Amherst delegates to the Democratic State Committee's issues convention Saturday in Springfield expressed satisfaction with many of the issues endorsed, while overwhelmingly tagging Walter Mondale as their choice for President.

Seven Amherst delegates, including three of the five from the University of Massachusetts, cast their vote for the former vice-president and Minnesota senator, while Sen. Alan Cranston of California recieved two of the town's 12 votes. Two no preference and one vote for "jobs" were also issued by Amherst representatives.

State Rep. James Collins, one of the 12 Amherst delegates, voted with the town majority, because "Mondale has a longer and stronger record" on eduation issues.

Within the Frnaklin/Hampshire County state senate district, 29 votes were cast for "Jobs," 25 for Mondale, 20 for Cranston, and eight for Sen. John Glenn of Ohio.

Despite being the only candidate of the six to speak in Amherst (March 4 at UMass), Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado received no votes in the town and six of 98 cast in the district.

With only 10.5 percent of the total convention vote, however, Hart remained confident, and afterward implored his circle of student supporters, "Don't be discouraged."

"Naturally we would have liked him to get 15-18 percent," said David Nelson of Students for Gary Hart, a Recognized Student Organization at UMass. However, he said Hart improved from receiving five percent of a similar vote held earlier this year in California, and that his campaign is "moving forward."

"It's growing every day," Hart said of his student forces, which he said now exist on more than 150 campuses (up from 104 when he visited UMass) in all 50 states.

Conceding "Mondale has his foot pretty much in the door" in Amherst despite Hart's large student support there, Nelson said Hart is not depending "on students alone. He's not naive."

Donald Ross, foreign student advisor in the UMass International Programs Office, said most of the issue planks sought by the Progressive Caucus, of which he served as district whip, were passed.

He said, however, this did not include the "peace package" containing the nuclear freeze and related proposals, which did not see a vote due to an earlier party leadership-backed roll call on a legislative rules changes vote.

SSAM signatures gain large delegate support on platform

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

A pledge to build a new Roxbury Community College supported by the State Student Association of Massachusetts (SSAM) became part of the Massachusetts Democratic Party platform after a voice vote during Saturday's issues convention in Springfield.

The measure, offered to the convention by State Student Coordinator Mike Ferrigno, was endorsed by Arthur Osborn, president of the Massachusetts AFL-CIO Saturday morning. Ferrigno has been active in organizing the SSAM at the University of Masschusetts.

Ferrigno and some other SSAM supporters collected more than the 400 necessary signatures from convention delegates during the presidential candidate speeches and straw vote before the platform votes. Ferrigno said the platform vote was a boost to the new organization's quest to be respected by state legislators. UMass students are voting today and tomorrow on whether or not they support a $1 check-off fee on their semester bills to fund the financial aid advocate group.

Osborn said before the vote that passage would show the ability of labor and education to work together. He added that labor would be instrumental in any facet of the convention.

"All the candidates centered their speeches on jobs and the economy," Osborn said. "Labor will deliver to the chosen candiate solid and true support."

Osborn also predicted the overwhelming passage of the Roxbury Community College measure.

"We're going to get the word out that it's the type of amendment that we should support," he said.

Osborn also said he supports having a student on the Board of Regents.

Ferrigno said the minority caucus helped deliver the vote on the convention floor. He said the passage of the measure was due mainly to labor support and an earlier pledge of support by Governor Michael S. Dukakis.

The platform amendment forces the issue of building a new Roxbury Community College into the limelight after being a largely ignored issue for 17 years, Ferrigno said.

"It's just another victory for the SSA," he said.

Problems developed for the SSAM when no bus left from UMass Saturday morning. Supporters had hoped to collect the necessary signatures from AFL-CIO members at an early morning labor issues forum. But because of the mix-up, the supporters arrived late and had to scurry for signatures on the convention floor after finding their own transportation to Springfield.

numbered years shall be a State Issues Convention for the purpose of adopting a party agenda and/or platform.

The party met to consider such issues as abortion, U.S. involvement in Central America, acid rain, handgun control and other issues of local, national, and international concern.

The first major issue the convention faced was a measure changing the method of selecting members to the state committee. The previous method had all state committeemen selected at a general election. Now the number of committeemen is enlarged and half are to be elected at local caucuses.

One of the issues the delegates debated which has been presented at the past three conventions is the abortion question. Pro-choice backers argued that it is the right of each and every woman to choose whether or not to have an abortion. The measure passed on a roll call vote.

On another woman's issue, a unanimous vote pushed for passage of a national Equal Rights Amendment.

Delegates also passed a measure dealing with education, voting to push for a new community college to be located in Roxbury as quickly as possible.

Three measures dealing with crime came up for votes, each passing with no opposition — a total ban on the national level of all snub-nosed hand guns, stronger crime control laws with repeal of the death penalty, and passage of laws which would protect victims and witnesses of crimes.

On issues affecting senior citizens, the delegates voted for full medicare funding, measures to make the social security tax more progressive, and income tax credits for those caring for senior citizens at home.

Proponents of no smoking sections in public places passed a plank calling for the establishment of no-smoking sections in all restaurants.

In other issues, the convention called for testing of Vietnam veterans and their children for the effects of agent orange; indexing of public assistant payments for cost of living, and backing the right of federal employees to engage in collective bargaining over working conditions.

Add experience to your degree.

Facts indicate that you may work in three to five different careers. It won't be unusual to make changes as you go. And it's entirely possible that your final career does not even exist today.

Often in a first job, you are an assistant to the assistant. Your responsibility is limited to a desk and typewriter.

But when your first job is an Army 2LT, you'll have real management experience. You'll be in charge. On a specific job assignment, you could have 30 to 40 people working for you. And you could be responsible for millions of dollars in equipment.

Responsibility for people and resources is exactly the kind of "take charge" experience civilian employers seek. It's a margin of difference in the increasingly competitive job market.

Prepare to rise to the top in your field. Make your first job 3 or 4 years as an Army Officer.

If you have two years remaining in school, you can begin ROTC this summer. You'll be compensated financially; stimulated physically and mentally. To add experience to your degree contact

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Why don't we vote?

Okay, so you claim to be incurably cynical about the potential power of our generation. Sure, you've seen the signs for today and tomorrow's referendum to fund the new State Student Association, (SSAM) but you figure it's just students and it's not going to make a difference anyway, so why bother voting.

Why should you feel otherwise?

Young people, as we know too well, don't vote in numbers anywhere near proportional to our numbers in the population. Since 1972, when the Twenty-Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution gave 18-year-olds the right to vote for the first time, young people have failed to develop any sort of electoral political clout. Not surprisingly, this has resulted in an appalling lack of political representation for young people.

But why has this happened? Why haven't young people become involved in the political process? Why don't young people vote?

Jackson Katz

These are crucial questions, but they don't lend themselves to the kind of simplistic answers you often hear when people talk about our generation. Statements such as "young people today are apathetic" or "all the Me-Generation cares about is designer jeans and getting rich" do not adequately deal with the complexity of the issue.

Rather, there are a number of related phenomena that, when taken together, can help explain why young people for the most part have foregone their potential political power and chosen instead to accept the consequences.

For one, young people share with the rest of society the stifling feeling of powerlessness. "You can't fight city hall" is a slogan deeply imbedded in the national consciousness. My vote means nothing, the logic goes, so why bother?

Also, today's younger generation of potential voters came of age in the era of Vietnam, Watergate, and ever-more-frequently occurring economic crises. When Jimmy Carter spoke of a "crisis of confidence" in government, he articulated the concern of millions of Americans old and young who share the view that our government is inherently corrupt, burdensomely bureaucratic and unresponsive to individual's needs.

Another reason for the lack of younger voter participation is our absence of a generational identity that would enable us to see some major issues in terms of them being "our" issues. Draft registration and financial aid cuts are obviously student issues in the 80's, but so are nuclear arms control, abortion rights, enviromental protection, jobs, etc. For us to get involved in the political decision-making process, we have to realize that it is in our own self-interest to do so.

On a more positive note, the election of Michael Dukakis in Massachusetts and the liberal Democratic gains in several states and Congress in last fall's mid-term elections are cause for optimism. As people say, Ronald Reagan's most enduring contribution may very well be his reactivation of many of the progressive elements in our society, not the least important of which could turn out to be the current generaiton of young people and students.

In the past couple of years, more and more progressive people have begun to realize that while the vote is not the final solution to the myriad problems plaguing our country, it is essential that young people and progressives of all ages become involved in the electoral process.

We've all too clearly seen what happens when we don't, and special-interest coalitions like the New Right and reactionary politicians like Ronald Reagan, traditionally on the extreme fringe of American politics, subsequently acquire disproportionate political influence.

If we do get our act together and begin to exert the political muscle that our numbers alone give us (seventy-five million Americans were born in the "Baby-Boom" generation of 1946-1964) we have a lot to look forward to in terms of progressive leadership in the troubled times to come.

In fact, if we had become actively involved sooner, we wouldn't even have some of our present worries. Remember, possibly the single greatest factor contributing to the election of Ronald Reagan in 1980 was the exceedingly low voter turn-out. The lowest in a presidential election in thirty-two years, the "Reagan mandate" was delivered by only 27 percent of American voters.

And just think, Reagan defeated Carter in Massachusetts in 1980 by only 3458 votes. If a little more than half of the people in Southwest alone had voted back then, we Mass. residents could hold our heads high once again and boast about being the only state in the country to vote against both Nixon and Reagan!

As far as Ed King goes, we wouldn't have had to suffer through four years of his administration if we had mobilized young voters back in 1978. King beat Dukakis in the Democratic primary by 57,000 votes. In the Massachusetts public higher education system alone, there are over 120,000 students, more than 400,000 students in all. And this is just students! Think about it.

Jackson Katz, a resident of Amherst and UMass alumnus, is a freelance writer working on a book about the current generation of young Americans

Rape column shows sensitivity

To the Editor:

I would like to thank Scott Hersey for his sensitive editorial (4/17) about the gang rape in New Bedford. His thoughts moved me and I would like to think the majority of people who read his editorial have examined their own consciences and placed themselves in a similar situation. I was horrified and pretty shaken up when I first read about the rape. I thought to myself, "God, that could have been me." I am angry that, as a woman, I have to take extra precautions to protect myself in a society that could allow such a hideous action. How many other such incidents have occurred and gone unreported? How many more women will be subjected to the brutality of rape?

My heart went out to that woman in New Bedford. The thought of rape scares the shit out of me, as it does for most women. I would rather not think about it. It's easy to say, "That could never happen to me." But in reality, I'm just as susceptible as any woman to being raped. That's what scares me the most; the fact that despite the precautions I take, I may be raped. I'm tired of the rules I have to follow and the games I have to play because I'm female. Sometimes I wish I were neuter. I wish I had no sex so I would be judged by my personality and character and not by the fact that I have breasts and a vagina.

Rape isn't going to go away and neither is the sexism that I and every woman face every day. I refuse to be intimidated by the rules society expects me to play. I know I'm not powerless, and I know I can take care of myself, but I'm still damn afraid and that fear won't go away either.

Cashiers — they are people too

To the Editor:

Standing in line for food at the Hatch or Coffee Shop can be a pain in the ass. So is getting your ID card out. But do not take it out on the cashiers. Going through the lines we have heard them being called sluts, bitches, etc. Would you call your mother that?

The cashiers are only following the law. They are required to collect tax from non-students using the Hatch and Coffee Shop. These include conference people, those staying at the hotel for various reasons, and employees of the University. Many of these are young and could be mistaken for students. The state feels that it needs to tax these people to make revenue.

You have to show ID at a bank, to police officers, and at many other times. It is not too much to ask to have it ready, particularly when you are standing in line for five minutes waiting. Abusing the cashiers because you had a hard day, have nothing to do, or because you cannot be bothered to reach into your pocket is assinine. If you don't like the law, do something about it. It does not hurt to show people a little respect, because they are working instead of going to college. You will be there soon enough.

Defense plans bad for jobs

One common myth that most people cling to is that defense spending helps create jobs. You would think with all of the money that the Reagan administration is spending on defense, that lots of people would be going back to work to build the weapons to help stave off the Soviet threat. Wrong. A study just released by Employment Research Associates of Lansing, Michigan shows that money pumped into defense spending actually helps cause unemployment.

According to the study, for each $1 billion spent on buying new weapons, 24,000 jobs were created. But if that same amount was spent by taxpayers to buy consumer goods and services, it would have created 38,000 jobs. In 1981, $20 billion was spent by the Defense and Energy departments for nuclear weapons research and development, as well as for buying new and maintaining old weapons. That outlay generated 475,000 jobs. If that money wasn't transferred to the Pentagon by consumers, 745,000 jobs would have been created in industry, agriculture, mining, commerce, and the service industries by consumer spending. So that $20 billion in weapons spending cost the U.S. 270,000 jobs.

Randolph T. Holhut

More than 87 percent of the working population is employed in industries of businesses that are affectd for the worse with every increase in Pentagon spending on nuclear weapons. Virtually every worker is affected by runaway defense spending.

Why doesn't defense spending create more jobs. According to the study, it is because (1) making military products is more capital-intensive than most production for consumer goods, (2) the military makes the bulk of its purchases from contractors who spend more on expensive machinery and less on personnel than the businesses that make consumer goods, and (3) the industries and businesses that the military buys from have a higher rate of inflation than do civilian industries, so money spent by the military stimulates less activity than money spent by consumers.

The equation is simple; the more money that is spent on defense, the fewer jobs are created. As the Reagan administration runs full bore towards building up the military machine, what they will discover is while they make this country stronger militarily, they will also make us weaker economically. How deep would this recession have been if less money was spent on arms? Would recovery already have occurred if fewer dollars were spent on weapons? If this study is true, and it was compiled using figures from the Pentagon and Bureau of Labor Statistics, the President's economic recovery plan is being undermined by his plans for defense.

Defense spending doesn't just take jobs away from American workers. It takes away capital that could be used to develop new technologies. In 1977, way before the current build-up, for every $100 of new fixed capital formation, $46 was spent on the military. The comparable military expenditure for West Germany was $18, for Japan, $3. While we were pumping money into weapons, our allies were investing in consumer products (like cars and cameras). Is it any wonder why we lag so far behind our foreign competitors?

Money spent on defense is like throwing money down a bottomless pit, there is no limit to how much is thrown down. It is putting a tremendous drain on our economy, in the form of fewer new jobs, lower productivity and slower development of new technologies. Is the Soviet threat so great that we have to bankrupt ourselves to ward it off? They say that the price of freedom isn't cheap, but on the basis of these figures, we have already paid too much.

AN EVENING OF HARDCORE
(The Freeze, et. al)
Saturday, April 9
Pulaski Hall, Easthampton

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

Hardcore punk rock concerts are one of the most misunderstood forms of entertainment today. People tend to equate punk with violence and therefore condemn an entire genre of music which is not only innovative and highly enjoyable, but also non-violent.

The problem, of course, lies in the fact that well over 99 percent of the general public have never been to a hardcore show and have never been exposed to the music on record. The only exposure most people have to punk is a couple of misinformed television shows written by ignorant fools who know nothing about hardcore and what it represents. Recent Quincy and CHiPs episodes have molded the thoughts of countless otherwise ignorant individuals about punk music.

The hardcore show at the Pulaski Club in Easthampton Saturday night was further evidence that kids can be responsible in pulling off a music event. There were no adults of the mother or father kind in the club that I could see. And the show went off without any kind of major incident, contradicting the Quincy and CHiPs misrepresentations.

The first thing one notices when walking into most all ages hardcore shows is a sign that says "No alcohol or smoking allowed in the building." Hardcore youth know that one does not need to be in an altered state in order to have a good time, and they're right. I'm just bothered by the fact that my mother has been telling me that for years.

Unfortunately I did not get to see the entire show. Although it began at 6 p.m., I did not show up until around 10 due to my presence at the Democratic convention in Springfield. But I still got to see five of the advertised ten or so bands. To the bands who will not get mentioned here, all I can say is "forgive me."

All White Jury was just getting ready to begin when I arrived which was fine with me. I've seen them three times and while they may not be the most talented band in the area, they make up for it in style. At least two of the band members, the bass player and lead singer Simon, can be seen on campus here at UMass. Simon is the punk with the evil looking mohawk who gets his share of stares and snide remarks from narrow-minds who can't deal with people who don't wear alligator shirts or monogrammed sweaters.

All White Jury never wastes any time in insulting people they don't like. Simon dedicated one song to people who belong in fraternities calling them all "Phi Kappa Wanker." Another song "I'm a Jock" describes the beer drinking, get laid attitude of many athletic types in a less than positive manner.

At one point the guitarist made a motion to a room in the back of the club hall where beer was being served (no one with beer was allowed out of the room).

"I need beer man, because Molly Hatchet rules, you faggot," he yelled into his microphone. At another point, the guitarist introduced a song critical about hunting by saying people who like to kill animals do so because a certain part of their bodies is not quite up to scratch.

The Outpatients were next and they put on a very impressive set that featured some excellent hardcore instrumentals. They displayed the most energy of any of the bands I saw. They also played the longest set — 45 minutes.

Da Stupids feature a female lead singer (a rarity). During one song which lambasted football fans, the band threw a football into the crowd which provided some added excitement. I couldn't help but wonder what would have happened if the same thing had happened at a heavy metal show. I'm sure a crowd full of jerks could have caused some serious damage to the Pulaski Club. Next to the stage was a glass encased list with the heading "Honor Roll." It was not broken during the course of the evening. But I'm not surprised since hardcore crowds are the most well behaved groups of people I have come in contact with. They are far more conscientious than REO Speedwagon and Red Sox crowds whom I have also come in contact with.

Borscht came up from New York City and provided what I consider to be the best set of the night. They brought out the most intensity from the slamdancers (who by the way contained the least amount of goons that I have seen in quite some time).

Slamdancing can be extremely violent and even dangerous if idiots are on the dance floor looking to see how many heads they can bash in. But slamdancing is not violent at all when people engage in it for the purpose of simply crashing into people and having a good time. Good slamdancers pick people up when they fall and don't throw elbows into other people's faces. Bad slamdancers are filmed on Quincy and CHiPs and written about in People magazine. The scene in Western Massachusetts has produced very few if any slamgoons.

The final band of the evening was the ever-popular Freeze who went through their usual set of hits. A hardcore hit is any song that most people have never heard more than once, since there isn't a commercial radio station on the face of the earth that has the guts to play the music on the air. After all, what would the advertisers say?

The next big hardcore event in Western Mass. will be at the Grange in Greenfield featuring Crucifix from San Francisco and Boston's SS Decontrol. If you haven't seen Decontrol yet, make sure May 14th is an open date on your calendar. This band is not to be missed.

James Cotton gives a spelling lesson

JAMES COTTON
Saturday, April 9
Blue Wall

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

I went to the Blue Wall for a spelling lesson Saturday night. I wanted to know how to spell "boogie." And I'll tell ya something. "Boogie" is spelled "C-O-T-T-O-N."

Yes, James Cotton and his Blues Band know how to boogie. I'd almost go as far as to say they coined the word. Cotton's hour and a half performance for a near capacity Blue Wall crowd Saturday night, was the third and final act in the Blues in the Blue Wall Series (sponsored by UPC and the Duke Ellington Committee) that also included such blues masters as J. B. Hutto and Koko Taylor.

Natural Boogie opened for Cotton in a performance that bordered on the mediocre. They were impressive at first but...Hey, I have yet to find an opening act that does anything for me the way the New Riders of the Purple Sage did opening for Leon Russell oh so many years ago.

The Cotton Blues Band took to the stage after the opening act, jamming and soloing for almost half an hour, just before being joined on stage by Cotton himself.

Although he did not cover all of the hits I expected, Cotton performed many old favorites including "Jelly Roll Blues," for New Orleans' immortal Jelly Roll Morton, "Part Time Love," "Rockett'88," and "Can't Do It On My Own."

The group left the stage after an excellent rendition of "Boogie Thing," one of Cotton's more recognizable blues tunes (to those unfamiliar with the master that had the entire audience on its feet dancing to James' special boogie beat.)

Cotton returned for an encore, the Cotton blues standard, "When It All Comes Down." And as the song drew to a close, Cotton and his band left their instruments, joined center stage arm-in-arm and led the audience in singing,

"When it all
Comes down
I'll still Be around."

The end was dramatic, and touching to say the least. It's reassuring to know that after all, the 25 to 30 weeks for 13 years on the road, the hundreds of sweaty power-packed performances and all the miles and miles between them, James Cotton will still be there.

"It's hard to get record companies into the blues," Cotton said after the performance. "Only we're showing them ourselves. We're working twice as hard."

James, you just keep on working. You're doing beautifully. And the next time I need a spellin' lesson, I'll know you'll still be there.

Mens tennis falls to Boston College

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

And you thought Boston College had only good basketball and football teams.

Taking a cue from my fellow writer Jim Floyd: Wrong, Racquet breath.

Let me introduce you to the BC men's tennis team, reigning Big East champions and conquerors of the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team, 6-3, Saturday on the Boyden Courts.

Utilizing talent from distant lands (BC's top two singles players were imported from California and Argentina), the Eagles, quickly became a force in New England collegiate tennis, and beat a fine UMass team whose hopes of an unbeaten season crumbled under the weight of an aggressive and powerful BC attack.

UMass could muster only two of the singles and saw its superb doubles tandem of Steve Jordan-Rich Lindgren suffer an extremely rare defeat (they were 7-0 in the fall).

Neal Mackertich and Stuart Goodman, at number one and three singles, respectively, registered the Minutemen wins in singles. Mackertich struggled early, fell behind, but rebounded to ease past John O'Connell 7-6, 6-1.

"I started to slow because I was really tight. This being the first match probably had something to do with it. His serve was big. He goes for winners by coming in and following his serve. It took a long time to discover that his forehand was much weaker than his backhand," said Mackertich.

Goodman got by Carlos Silva in a hostile match plagued by several heated arguments over disputed calls. Goodman hung tough though, and eventually won, 7-5, 4-6, 6-3.

Boston College victories in singles were recorded by Louis Nunez over Steve Jordan, 6-2, 3-6, 6-3, at number two singles by Bill Kelly beat Nick Julian, 6-4, 6-4 at number four singles and Jim Garaventi at number five singles beat Rich Lindgren, 6-4, 0-6, 6-3. Bob Conklin made quick work of Mark Gelinas, 6-0, 6-2.

"He was very good at the net," said Julian of Kelly. "He put everything away and made tough shots which I couldn't do anything with."

In doubles, Jordan-Lindgren fell to O'Connell-Kelly, 6-4, 7-5, in a match in which the UMass duo had set point at 4-5 in the second set before losing the game and the next two games to drop the set and the match.

Mackertich-Mike Duseau got the lone UMass doubles win with a 7-5, 6-2 triumph over Nunez-Conklin at number two. Goodman-Dave Salem lost at number three to Silva-Garaventi, 7-5, 6-3.

"This was a tough first match," said Coach Bob Szlosek. "After URI (this afternoon at 3 p.m. on the Boyden Courts) we should roll. I just want to be ready for the team championships. I still say we will win the Atlantic 10 (April 22-23 at Pittsburgh) and finish top five in the New Englands (April 29-30 at Yale)."

After the URI match today, the Minutemen face Holy Cross in Worcester Tuesday, MIT on Thursday in Amherst, and Central Connecticut-Bowdoin in a tri-match Saturday on the Boyden Courts.

UMass rugby team rally falls short 19 - 17

By SCOT COOPER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Rugby team had an optimistic outlook when they faced the visiting University of Paris last Tuesday afternoon.

After all, Paris had worked hard to tie Boston University 0-0, and UMass had stuffed the Terriers 14-4 last Saturday. However, the Frenchmen scored early, capitalizing on UMass penalties, and held off a late surge to win 19-17.

Many observers watched in amazement as the Paris team couldn't do anything offensively in the first half.

Everytime they moved over half field, UMass would bunch up and retard their drive. The first half ended with Paris ahead 9-4, with all points results of capitalizing on UMass penalties. UMass chose the wrong half to get tagged with penalties, because a stiff breeze was at the backs of the Frenchmen and they converted three out of five kicks for their nine points.

William Carroll and Al Borghi helped UMass win a scrum close to the Paris goal line, and captain Mike DaCampo scooped the ball off to winger Simon Bunce who touched the ball down for UMass' only points of the half. UMass fullback Marty Bluck had the wind in his face and a bad angle to contend with and his conversion kick fell short.

The second half was a copy of the first half, but this time UMass grabbed onto the ring. With the exception of line outs, UMass was winning every phase of the game. Jack Harney battled against Paris' eight man all afternoon.

Despite the chilly temperatures, the tempers got hotter as the day went on. It was especially hot when a UMass try was called back and the Unicorns were staring at a nine point deficit.

A holding call against Paris put the ball within Bluck's range and he popped it through to make the score 13-7 — UMass was climbing out of the hole. It took only two minutes for the rout to become a game again. Mike Holmes, who bends like Gumby, went in for another four points in the comeback bid. Bluck's kick would have tied the score at 13, but it hit the post.

Paris put some more distance between a possible tie with another penalty that made the score 16-11. UMass hit two more penalty kicks and Paris notched one to account for the final of 19-17.

Overall, Tuesday's match was far better than the BU game. UMass controlled the ball for a good portion of the contest. When they didn't have the ball, their defense got it back quickly.

UMass travels to Hartford to battle with the Wanderers this weekend. They return home a week from Saturday, game time 12:00 noon, against Southern Connecticut State College.

Knights escape Gorillas

Gorilla win slips away

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

After viewing the film of his team's 14-13 loss to Rutgers University Saturday at Boyden Field, UMass head lacrosse coach Dick Garber may have summed up many observers feelings when he thought about Saturday's events.

"Had we won it would have been the end of a super day" said the always upbeat leader of the Gorillas (now 1-2).

"Looking at the film I was impressed by the play from a competitive point of view," said Garber. "It was one great lacrosse game."

One great lacrosse game is right, as 8,000 Gorilla watchers packed both sides of the Boyden Hill fence and witnessed an offensive explosion of sorts by the Gorillas, and also saw an All-American midfielder from Rutgers take control of the game.

Al Ray, who played halfback on the Rutgers varsity football team for four years but failed to make the NFL Denver Broncos chose to enroll as a graduate student at Rutgers and take advantage of his final year of lacrosse eligibility.

Ray showed why he was an All-American, winning 23 faceoffs and losing only eight, and helped control the tempo of the game.

"UMass is an explosive team," said Scarlet Knight head coach Tom Hayes." But Al Ray is just unbelieveable. Winning the faceoffs is important because it helps you control the pace of the game. If there's somebody better than Al, I want to see him."

Ray finished with two goals and two assists in the game, but it was obvious he was the main threat for the Knights, and like any true star he came through when the chips were down.

More than a few heads hung on the Rutgers bench when Tim Cutler gave the Gorillas a 13-12 lead with 1:48 remaining after a see-saw half that saw five lead changes. But Ray won the next faceoff, rushed down the gut of the Gorilla defense, and beat goalie Gerry Moreau from about fifteen feet. It took only six seconds.

Ray displayed a few halfback moves a few seconds later when he rushed, was forced left by the Gorilla "D", but dished off to Brian Krost, who fired from ten feet on the left with 1:12 left to score what proved to be the gamewinner.

The game was not without controversy with the referees receiving extreme heat from Hayes throughout the game, but particularly in the fourth quarter when the Rutgers coach claimed UMass had scored an illegal goal.

Rutgers Chris Hefferan put the Knights up for the first time since early in the third quarter with 6:30 remaining in the game, then the controversy occured.

Mike Fiorini came back after the very next faceoff and faked a shot high and whipped the ball low to beat goalie John Maslonski to tie the score at twelve.

Hayes contended Gorilla freshman Mark Stratton was substituted for illegally when Stratton mistakenly thought he was supposed to come out and ran towards the substitution box but was pushed back on the field by his teammates. Hayes claimed the contact was illegal but the referees disagreed and the goal stood.

Cutler scored his goal to put the Gorillas up 13-12 but Ray went into his savior act and stole the game from UMass.

"Albert Ray was a major factor winning all those faceoffs," said Garber. "You look at their team without Ray and I think would have handled them."

we would have handled them."

The Gorillas received exceptional performances combination of Rich Messina (1 goal, 2 assists), Karl Hatton (1 goal, 1 assist) and Peter Martino (2 goals, 1 assist), and also from Paul Fogarty (2 assists), who made several nice passes, Mike Fiorini (3 goals, 1 assist) and Tom Lukacovic (3 goals) on attack.

"After looking at the films, I felt much better and I'm sure the players will feel better after they see the film Monday," said Garber, "I knew we played well. I knew we made some mistakes but we also made some great plays. Some of those plays by Karl Hatton were unbelieveable and Tommy Luckacovic came on and gave us three goals. So we did some good things out there."

The Gorillas have an important week coming up, playing three teams they will be challenging for the New England lacrosse title.

After travelling to Brown to take on the Bruins Wednesday, the Gorillas return home against Boston College Saturday and the University of New Hampshire Monday.

Collegian photo by John Doucette

Rick Messina upended Al Ray on this hit, but in the end it was Ray and Rutgers that upended the Gorillas 14-13.

Fans enjoy Hill life

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

As the final seconds ticked off the clock on the Boyden Field scoreboard Saturday, what sounded like a police siren slowed to a crawl and then died as the Gorillas trudged off the field.

And, Kurt Richardson (aka, the man with the siren) was not the only UMass fan to contribute a little extra to what has for some time at the university been more than just a game.

To be sure, UMass lacrosse is a social phenomenon, a rare mixture of athletics and partying, of spectating and sunbathing, cheering and chatting.

Each time the Gorillas host a team at Boyden Field, throngs of students numbering in the thousands flock to the Hill, whether in the drinking or non-drinking sections (as the inside and outside portions of the fence around the field have come to be known).

"I think they should allow beer back on the field," said Richardson from outside the fence. "It's not the same since the new policy took effect."

At no time has the policy been more evidently enforced as on this past Saturday. Kegs were sent away from even the outside of the fence as police uniforms appeared to be part of a new trend in fashion in the crowd.

Though the two year old policy has altered the scenario of laxomania days past, it has given the event a new look that makes the Hill resemble an airplane with two classes of seating.

In the tourist class, that being the inside, fans are treated to top notch collegiate lacrosse (hey, so they're 1-2, this is still the upper echelon of Division One.) without the need to wipe beer from their behinds as they depart for home. It is supportive in tourist class and the view of the game is better (so is the opportunity for tanning).

Back in the social compartment, the atmosphere is a bit more casual. People pay attention, but almost no one sees every goal (some people don't see any goals and a few never see anything).

Gorilla Airfare won't travel again until Saturday when everybody in the state's favorite school, Boston College, comes to town. But that's okay because it gives Kurt Richardson time to fix his siren. The handle broke.

National League East: Expos have the talent

By ELLIOTT KALB
Collegian Staff

Editor's Note: This is how Elliot Kalb thinks the 1983 National League East will finish.

The National League has won four consecutive World Series, hammered the junior circuit shamelessly in All-Star games, and retained the pitcher's spot in the batting order. In short, the National League is for purists. The National League East alone could field all-star teams that would dominate a team made up of the other three divisions in baseball.

No less than four teams from the N.L. East would run away from every other team in the N.L. West, while the Cubs and the Mets would contend for the West title. Here is how the division looks to shape up in early April.

EXPOS: No team in baseball has won more games over the last four years, and this could be the year the fans from Montreal do their celebrating off the ice. Outfielders Andre Dawson and Tim Raines are among the league's most dangerous threat. Defending batting champ Al Oliver, catcher supreme Gary Carter, and starting and bullpen aces Steve Rogers and Jeff Reardon will enable the Expos, under new manager Bill Virdon, to "out-talent" every other team in baseball.

CARDS: This team has everything needed to repeat as World Champs in 1983. Joaquin Andujar should emerge as a superstar on the mound, and manager Whitey Herzog has both depth and quality on the mound and in the field. Bruce Sutter is the key to the Cardinals' hopes, for no matter how well Hernandez, Ozzie Smith, Lonnie Smith, et. al. perform, they'll only advance as far as Sutter takes them. And that could be a long way.

PHILLIES: It will be asking a lot for Philadelphia to bring home the division title in 1983. At age 38, Steve Carlton should pick up his 300th career victory (he needs 15), but after Lefty, the pitching becomes thin and unproven. If everyone stays healthy, and with more help this year in the bullpen and off the bench to spell relics like Pete Rose, Philadelphia has the savvy to make things interesting.

PIRATES: Like the Red Sox, some teams will always count on a strong offensive attack. Look for Dave Parker to put some big numbers on the board, and Lee Mazzilli to have a good year. Bill Madlock and Jason Thompson should provide enough offense for the Pirates to battle the top three teams in the division and hold off the pesky Cubs for another year.

CUBS: Yogi and Boo Boo are not the only bears I like. I like the Cubbies from Chicago. They socked 110 homers a year ago, then picked up Ron Cey from the Dodgers. Bill Buckner, Larry Bowa and Keith Moreland are all solid performers, although Bowa and Cey will cover only the ground they stand on. They need arms.

METS: I've heard so much about Daryll Strawberry that there is no way he can live up to expectations. George Foster and Dave Kingman are both capable of better years than 1982, and there are unproven ballplayers in at least three positions (catcher, right field, and shortstop). Mike Torrez, Tom Seaver, and Craig Swan head up the pitching staff. The team to watch in 1986.

Louis Stokes Honors King Week

by Tracey Bryant

In 1977 a Congressional Select Committee was formed to investigate the assassinations of John F. Kennedy and Martin Luther King, Jr.

At that time 80 per cent of the American public believed that neither Lee Harvey Oswald nor James Earl Ray acted singularly in their assassinations but were part of a conspiracy.

Due to rumors floating around claiming FBI involvement in the murders, and also the insistence of the Congressional Black Caucus to have the murder of Martin Luther King investigated, one committee was formed.

Congressman Louis Stokes from Ohio was the fourth person to chair the committee, and the first Black to ever chair a congressional committee of national scope.

Before his chairship the committee had no funding and was basically disfunctional. Said Stokes, "Many people never wanted this investigation to go forth. We had a particularly tough time getting Congress to fund it."

In taking on the position Representative Stokes vowed, "to leave no stone unturned in an uncompromised search for truth", and to have an integrated staff incorporating some of the best Black professionals in the country.

Of the investigation Stokes concluded, "I feel our major findings will withstand the scrutiny of history."

The Committee does believe that James Earl Ray commited the act of assassination alone, but they are also confident that a $50,000 bounty offered by two St. Louis businessmen was the primary motivation.

Although the two businessmen were as far as the committee could trace a conspiracy, they did thoroughly investigate FBI files and question FBI official.

They found that the FBI under J. Edgar Hoover had enacted a huge project to "destroy" Martin Luther King. This project included all types of surveillance including room and wire tappings. There was also an intense hatred of King generated by Hoover, said Stokes.

In their plot to destroy King, the FBI had sent King an ultimatum letter and had picked out a candidate to replace King as the Black leader. Congressman Stokes declined to mention who the FBI had chosen.

In relaying the history of his acquaintance with King, Stokes told the audience that in 1965 King came to Cleveland to lead a voter registration drive. It was the brother of Louis Stokes, Carl Stokes running for mayor in that city. Carl Stokes lost that election by 1700 votes. Said Louis Stokes, " The Black community was just not ready or even able to believe that they could elect a mayor of a large city."

In 1967 King returned for a second time and they got an even larger voter turnout and his brother Carl did become Mayor of Cleveland, Ohio.

Chicago race: possible electoral resurgence

by Rhami Imani

All eyes are directed at Chicago this week because tomorrow Chicago will possibly elect the first Black mayor in that city's history. But what is even more important is that this election will be a political indicator of the strength and direction of Black electoral politics as we head toward the 1984 presidential elections.

Last semester this reporter enthusiastically wrote about two electoral races that had Black politicians leading their opponents before the election. Unfortunately, both candidates, Tom Bradley, runnning for governor of California and Robert Clark, runnning for U.S. Representative of Mississippi, lost their races by close margins. Both would have been historic elections, with Bradley being the first Black governor in the U.S. and Clark the first Black representative from Mississippi since Reconstruction.

Yet those effort may have been a stepping stone in the current resurgence in Black politics that reaches from coast to coast. But it is the Chicago election that is in the limelight now. Democratic presidential hopefuls are all flocking to Chicago in support of Harold Washington.

The situation is a classic one with Chacago being the second largest and yet most segregated city in the country. The Democratic hopeful is Black, the Republican, Bernard Epton, is white. Yet this city which has such strong racial lines drawn is traditionally Democratic, leaving many whites to decide whether they will either vote along party or racial lines.

Washington, a former state legislator and current U.S. Representative, is the most qualified person for the position. He is definitely more qualified than the current mayor Jayne Burne who Washington defeated in the primaries. The 60-year-old native Chicagoan is a graduate of Northwestern law and a World War II veteran with a long history of local Chicago politics behind him beginning from when he used to distribute political leaflets for his father, who was a Democratic precinct captain, as a youngster.

But, the important thing about Chicago is that it is the most political Black community in the country and has even been titled the center of Black politics, on the same level as New York is the center of Black arts. With this title the Black community's pride is running with Washington as the community has come behind him with an unprecendented 85 percent Black vote.

Although Washington is leading in the polls he has a number of obstacles in his path. One is the Chicago media which has been criticized for not giving a fair perspective of the race, even by white media practioners. There has been moves to have a write-in candidate on the ticket such as Jayne Burne or the former governor of the state. But the major obstacle is that of the blatant racism that exists in the white neighborhoods of Chicago, the same racists who met Rev. Martin Luther King with one of the most vicious mobs that had been seen by King.

Yet many believe that the time is ripe for a Washington victory. Blcks across the country are supporting Washington. Down the road is the Philadelphia election on May 17 which may put the first Black mayor in that office with the election of W. Wilson Goode. After that the country may have to deal with one of the most important elections in our history: a Black vice-presidential or presidential nomination. The Washington election is the key as it is the indicator of the rise in Black political power, power that cannot be ignored.

Editorial Comment: S.G.A. Elections: A chance for progress

By Angela Brown

The special referenda elections, being held today and tomorrow, include ballot questions of great concern to all students, but perhaps not of immediate significance. These issues range having an international dimension, as does the question on UMass relations with South Africa, to the more everyday, but personally experienced question of choice of campus living options with respect to coed vs. single-sex bathrooms.

Two of the five ballot questions deserving special note are #1 and #5, on the State Student Association of Massachusetts, and on establishing a policy regulating university-funded academic contact with South Africa, respectively.

The issue of university-funded academic contact with South Africa has been skirted by the administration since the UMass community discovered Professor Wilce was granted $600 to attend a conference in that racially oppressive nation. This remains the case despite resolutions from both the undergraduate and the graduate senates demanding action. Although broad concern has been voiced, officials remain silent, and in fact display confusion as to the jurisdiction such a problem should fall within. A positive vote on Question #5 would demonstrate how widely students are concerned about such activities of a public institution. Also, it would show alliance with the world community's condemnation of South Africa, as shown in the UN, etc. Every act of disassociation with the South African government brings closer the day when the regime will be destroyed and the nation reconstructed by all of its own people.

The regulation of university-funded relations with South Africa would be consistent with other Massachusetts initiatives since the state legislature has recently ruled that all public pension funds be taken out of apartheid South Africa, and invested in Massachusetts enterprises whenever possible.

Question #1, which would establish funding for the State Student Association of Massachusetts, is worthy of firm student support. The State Student Association has a long and active history behind it, beginning with the arrival of Gov. King in office, and the concurrent reorganization of the state's higher educational system (which left us at the mercy of the Board of Regents and its tuition hikes). As such, the association has its roots in the fight back against the tuition hikes that so drastically changed the make-up of the UMass student body. Students from many state schools, from UMass-Amherst to Roxbury Community College, were in those days packing the halls of the Board of Regents. Now, the association is undergoing further development: it is near becoming a full-fledged lobbying mechanism that provides a means for sustained, united action for all students of Massachusetts.

The referenda elections offer exciting options to make political advances. However, one ballot question, #2, proposes that the student senate drop some of these issues of real importance, to submerge itself in a protracted period of self-contemplation. The "reorganization" of the Student Government Association, as has been recently proposed during the presidential elections, calls for an electoral mechanism that would severely curtail its representativeness. Senator elections by dorm, and continuance of the Third World Caucus, are two keystones to campus-wide representation in student government.

Evelyn King Comes to UMass

On Thursday, April 21, contemporary rhythm and blues returns to the Fine Arts Center here at the University of Massachusetts with a performance by RCA recording artist Evelyn King. The show will be produced by the Duke Ellington Committee and UPC Productions. It will also feature Soulsonic Force of "Planet Rock" fame.

Draft Registration Requirement Delayed By Changes

By Angela Brown

According to the Financial Aid Director, Arthur Jackson, and the Chronicle of Higher Education, a federal court ruling and planned revisions in regulations have created confusion as to how and whether the Solomon Amendment is to be enforced. The law which would bar males from receiving federal student aid unless they register for the draft, was scheduled to take effect for school terms beginning July 1.

A Minnesota federal district judge delayed enforcement of the new law when he filed a temporary injunction last month. Judge Donald D. Alsop ruled that the law was likely to be found unconstitutional, and barred its enforcement.

Also, the U.S. Dept. of Education has announced it will drop a requirement that draft-age men provide college administrators with copies of their draft registration documents before they can receive federal aid at least for two years. But, students are presently asked to provide draft registration information on federal financial aid forms. However, the UMass Financial Aid Office at the present time will not deny aid to those who do not provide the information, since the provision itself may be found unconstitutional, according to Jackson. Students may later be asked for the information.

Ari Jackson said that the decision will have to be either overturned or sustained in the near future. The Justice Department has until April 8, to file an appeal against the injunction.

According to the Chronicle of Higher Education (3-23-1983), Judge Alsop's ruling states that the students will probably prove that the law violates their rights against self-incrimination. They might also prove the law is unconstitutional because it punishes men (for not registering) before they have been found guilty of breaking selective service law.

Many schools are experiencing confusion as to whether to request draft registration information, or if such requests constitute enforcement of a law now barred in federal district court.

The revised regulations are expected to be finalized by the Department of Education in early May.

But, more congressional action may change the situation in the near future as changes may be brought to the floor of the House after approval of two sub-committees.

Gil Noble Speaks to College Students

Gil Noble, prizewinning producer of the ABC television public affairs show "Like It Is", gave an address for the Strait Ahead Committee's weekend program commemorating Martin Luther King, Jr. at Amherst College, Sunday. After showing an extremely moving film on King entitled "An Amazing Grace", he briefly commented on King's life and death, and went on to call for a revitalized Black consciousness in the current generation of Black college students through a stronger grasp of history.

On King's life, Noble emphasized that although King led the civil rights movement "he was not the movement itself." He attributed King's death to "a combination of events that were brewing," including the FBI's conflict with King, and the formation of racist hate groups.

But, the body of his talk was devoted to an analysis of the sentiments of Black college students, the situation they face under current conditions, in the job market, for example, and the juncture in history as it affects all Black people.

In speaking of the civil rights movement he said "we now have a generation of Black students that seem somehow to have missed this." Noble stated that this adversely affects "their ethics, their agendas and their morality."

"I would admonish those in institutions such as this not to limit yourself to academics," he said. "There is another dimension to education...your political development," he continued, adding that Black history is "the womb from which political development springs."

Noble stressed that without a sense of history Black students are in danger of becoming "mainstream swimmers." And, this danger is prevalent since Black students "are graduating from college who have never taken a Black Studies course," according to Noble, because they are not required to do so. He said that these graduates may be "so articulate, so bright, so charming...(but) mis-using the clout that has been conferred on them," by seeking personal gain. "Maybe that is why is has been given to them," he added.

He argued that Black students should not be misled to believe that their "temporary affluence and success" upon graduation is guaranteed. "You are not going to stay ther long unless you can build up a power base," he warned.

He declared that Blacks have rarely "made it" on the basis of merit, saying "we got there because of politics, there was pressure...broadcasting included, that is the reason I am working there, because some people I don't even know were out in the streets, fighting."

"It's mandatory for Black people, students, to become students of self," he concluded. Even to "shape your behavior pattern in the job market," is necessary, he added, with the feeling that this prevails in all aspects of survival, and growth.

What this meant, continued Stokes, is that if Blacks could show that kind of political maturity in Cleveland, it could happen all over America. "This is what it meant to Dr. King;",said Stokes. "He took pride in this kind of work."

Five months later Louis Stokes was running in an election campaign. While riding in his car he heard on the radio that Martin Luther King had been shot, and was dead. Stokes called King, "one of the greatest human beings" he'd "ever had the privilege of meeting."

In describing King, Stokes related a story about the night of his brother's mayoral victory. "King refused to go downstairs because he didn't want to take any of the glitter off of Carl."

The congressperson also said that Dr. King had a "tremendous mind... and was many years ahead of his time." He urged everyone to look at King's April 4, 1967 speech. It linked domestic and international struggles. He continued, "The message in this speech is perhaps more relevant today than it was even in its time." "His (king's) deep perception can be seen, and applied today.", Stokes added.

In discussing the bill to have Martin Luther King's birthday declared a national holiday, Representative Stokes told the audience that the bill had met with a great deal of antagonism on the floor and had lost. He said that the major oppositional argument was the loss of a day's production.

Congressperson Stokes incited everyone "who loves this country and has a deep appreciation of it" to sign a petition for this bill.

When asked what he thought about people just taking the holiday instead of continually "begging" Congress for it, Mr. Stokes replied: "There is a mechanism in place, a procedure to be followed the same as any other lobbying group. We should keep putting pressure on the Congress for national recognition, continue to lobby and continue to take it on our own. We should continue all of these."

He responded to a question concerning Harold Washington's candidacy stating that when he was in Chicago, he could sense that "we were on the threshold of a history-making event; like in Cleveland in 1967." He said that he with Black leaders from all over America campaigned Saturday all over Chicago. "The place was so electric," reported Washington.

Louis Stokes believes that this election "symbolizes something significant." When asked what it would mean if a Black man became mayor of the second largest city in America, Stokes jokingly replied, "It means New York is next." He followed with a more serious note, "It means that there are 200,000 new voters registered. It says to Black people all over America that they do have power." Stokes continued, "The significance is that this act can be duplicated all over the country."

Stokes believes that Harold Washington can win, and if he does will have overcome a great deal of racism.

He also believes that Ronald Reagan will win the next presidential election. Unless the Democrats run a Black man as Vice-President, Reagan will walk off with the Presidency, contends Stokes and an older member of Congress. "Reagan will not be easily defeated.",

Stokes also stated that "We should never have all our eggs in one basket. We have to acquire the political sophistication of dividing so they don't know which way we'll go."

"Voter registration is an area where we have not exercised King's dream." "The only way any ethnic group has ever pulled themselves up was through exercising political and economic power."

"In most cities we are underregistered and voter turnout is even lower that white voter turn out." He chastised, "There is no reason we ought not to be utilizing the power and potential we have. Until we do, we will continually find ourselves shortchanged in politics and in this country."

What happened to Venereal Diseases?

Part I

By Masherrill Fant

Venereal Diseases (VD) are still around; however, today they are called Sexually Transmitted Diseases (STD). Part one of this two-part series will discuss two of the most common STD's, gonorrhea and syphilis.

Gonorrhea remains the most common STD. It is caused by the gonococcus organism and, if untreated, can cause arthritis, sterility, heart disease or serious pelvic disorders. This should never happen because gonorrhea can be easily diagnosed and cured by proper medical attention.

In the male, the first symptoms of gonorrhea occur two to six days after contact with an infected person. The symptoms consist of painful urination and a pus-like discharge from the penis. Females with gonorrhea rarely have symptoms, but if they do, these may be a pus-like vaginal discharge and lower backache or lower abdominal pain.

Syphilis is another common STD. It is caused by a spirochete organism and if untreated may cause damage to vital organs, insanity, crippling paralysis, heart disease, blindness or deafness. Syphilis can also be easily diagnosed by a blood test and cured by proper medical attention; however, in the later stages, the damage to the body can not be undone.

Syphilis occurs in three stages: 1) two to six weeks after contact with an infected person, a painless sore (chancre) occurs where the organism entered the body and disappears with or without treatment; 2) two to six months after the chancre disappears a widespread non-itchy rash occurs and fades away, even without treatment; and 3) the last stage is where the serious damage occurs which may lead to death. These symptoms are the same for females and males.

It is extremely important for anyone with symptoms or who thinks he/she has been in contact with an infected person to seek medical attention as soon as possible. Students can be treated at the University Health Services with confidentiality or you may contact the VD Hotline at toll free: 1-800-227-8922.

David Du Bois promotes unity at the MXC

By Brenda Ling

David Du Bois, visiting professor of Journalism and Afro-American American Studies, spoke last Thursday on the need for unity in Third World students struggles. Beginning by acknowledging that "there are things on your minds, there are things on my mind also," Du Bois continued on to pinpoint apathy and lack of respect as barriers to Third World students' gaining more control. By parallelling peoples' striving for self-determination around the world with students' need to gain influence on campus, Du Bois outlined the urgency of combatting the "agenda to exterminate any expression of Black consciousness, including destroying Black communities" in a world that consists of 75 percent non-whites.

Du Bois emphasized that, in response to constant racial attack, "we've got to get our act together fast, we've got to think of ourselves as a family." We can't afford "to succumb to apathy or to think of ourselves as individuals." Instead all must "make a contribution to our (collective) survival" through consciousness of, and participation in, eradicating discriminatory practices.

Du Bois described the relation of Africans' and African-Americans' oppression as "a connection which this country's power structure doesn't want to come into existence." He mentioned W.E.B. Du Bois, Martin Luther King, Jr., and Malcolm X as three great black leaders who understood the shared oppression of Blacks worldwide. Since one common goal of all Third World peoples is to maintain a sense of self-respect, Du Bois proposed "Demonstrating our commitment to assure our survival and to contribute to our liberation."

For Africans, family stands highest as an extended social institution and as a "life-long interaction." In this tradition, Du Bois suggested that "there has to be a way to bring together key individuals to sit together and to work out an unbrella (organization)- through which problems can be resolved." Perhaps if we all commit ourselves on this campus to begin to establish a community of togetherness, if students do "not leave it up to the administration to resolve conflicts," we may take "a first step toward dealing with apathy and lack of respect."

Washington's Program for Chicago An eye toward needed solutions

1. OPEN GOVERNMENT

As Mayor of Chicago, Harold Washington will open city government to its citizens. People will have direct access to city officials, departments and public records. Citizen input will be encouraged at all levels in the administration. They will be afforded opportunities and a structure for participation in municipal planning and budgeting.

In order to bring about a truly open government, Harold Washington will:

- Institute a comprehensive Freedom of Informaiton Act for Chicago.
- Provide an expanded period of City Council and citizen review of the city's budget prior to adoption.
- Support collective bargaining with the unions of choice of all city employees.
- Establish a formal neighborhood planning and program development process, providing the structure for neighborhoods to be effective partners in development.
- Encourage the City Council to reestablish itself as an open, active and deliberate legislative body.
- Select appointees committed to open government for major positions and boards and commissions.

2. MORE JOBS FOR CHICAGO

More jobs for Chicago is Harold Washington's highest priority. His administration will begin efforts immediately to reverse 15 years of job loss and declining economic vitality. To retain and produce jobs, his administration will form partnerships with business, labor and neighborhoods so that government dollars, in concert with private dollars, achieve maximum results.

As Mayor, Harold Washington will:

- Improve the economic climate by:
  - -Simplifying bureaucratic procedures for those who do business with the city.
  - -Refurbishing the basic infrastructure of the city and making service more efficient.
  - -Encouraging local purchasing by both the city and private companies.
- Promote economic development in the city by:
  - -Expanding the pool of private and public investment capital for small, medium and large businesses by creating a Chicago Industrial Development Corporation to target investments toward economic development.
  - -Establishing a policy-recommending Council on Employment and Economic Development with representatives from commerce and industry, labor, and community development organizations.
  - -Seeking to minimize plant closings by providing business support and financing, and by developing programs directly aimed at distressed industries such as steel.
  - -Establishing Neighborhood Development Boards which will plan for neighborhood job development.
- Retain and create jobs, by:
  - -Involving public schools, city colleges, and community-based organizations with the private sector to improve job training programs to create a skilled workforce.
  - -Fighting for an increased share of state and federal economic development money that can create jobs.
  - -Establishing an affirmative action program that will end discrimination in city jobs and contracts.

3. A SOUND FISCAL POLICY

The short- and long-term fiscal policies of the Washington administration will emphasize stability, realistic program priorities and budgetary control.

This can only happen in an atmosphere of openness and public confidence in the way the city handles its money. Chicagoans need to be shown that the services they get are commensurate with the tax burden.

To bring order to the city finances, Harold Washington will:

- Cut up to $100 million in waste from the city budget, thus releasing funds for neighborhood and other priorities.
- Institute a Financial Management Program that emphasizes efficiency and innovation to keep costs down.
- Work to increase the Illinois income tax to provide additional revenues to the City and to allow the State government to meet its legal obligations to schools and mass transportation.
- Aggressively seek an increase in Chicago's share of state and federal money.
- Make the tax burden more equitable for those with low and moderate income supporting by tax reforms, such as increasing personal exemptions and capping the taxes on utility bills.

4. NEIGHBORHOOD INVOLVEMENT IN REVITALIZATION

As Mayor, Harold Washington will direct more city resources toward neighborhood revitalization and will involve neighborhood residents in key decisions that affect community life. To help neighborhoods help themselves, Harold Washington will:

- Work to ensure a fair balance between neighborhood development and downtown development.
- Target resources to revitalize local commercial strips throughout the city.
- Ensure fairness in resource allocations among all neighborhoods.
- Support the self-help projects initiated by local community organizations.

5. BETTER, AFFORDABLE HOUSING

Harold Washington wants every Chicagoan to live in a humane and affordable dwelling.

His administration will work to preserve the existing housing stock as an irreplaceable resource drawing upon the energies of private and community developers. It will provide greater assistance to those who have the fewest resources.

The city will use its fiscal leverage to increase the availability of private financing for the rehabilitation of dwellings and the building of new housing.

Reorganization and reform of the Department of Housing and the Chicago Housing Authority is critical.

- To improve the quality and quantity of the housing stock, the Washington administration will:
  - -Use Community Development Block Grant funds for housing more effectively.
  - -Reform the Chicago Building Code to make rehabilitation cheaper and easier.
  - -Implement the recommendations of the Chicago Energy Commission to reduce housing costs for property owners and renters.
- To bring fairness and justice to the housing market, the administration will:
  - -Explore community-based housing courts.
  - -Adopt a tenant bill of rights, including a Fair Rent Commission.
  - -End housing discrimination.
  - -Increase the stock of housing for low-income families.
  - -Work to shelter Chicago's homeless indigent and elderly people.
  - -Generate low-cost funds for housing by utilizing tax-exempt bond financing for multi-family as well as single-family housing.
- To reform the Chicago Housing Authority, the administration will:
  - -Appoint CHA board members who have substantial backgrounds in housing.
  - -Increase the formal involvement of CHA tenants in building management.
  - -Hire residents to improve safety conditions.

6. EXCELLENCE IN EDUCATION

Excellence is the only acceptable standard for all Chicago public schools and the city colleges. The city's economic and political vitality depends on literacy, work skills, self-respect and social awareness of its citizens. Providing educational leadership, Harold Washington, as Mayor, will work with the Board of Education and the City Colleges to:

- Fight for a state income tax increase in order to get the money necessary to operate our schools with sufficient teachers and manageable class sizes.
- Change the method of selecting School Board members, either by a statutory nominating panel appointment method or by electing members from districts.
- Promote quality education to improve literacy and vocational training, improving graduates opportunities for continuing education or for entering the job market.
- Recommend improvement in bilingual and bicultural programs which serve Spanish-speaking children and children from 20 other language groups.
- Promote a rational approach to decentralization which will significantly involve principals, teachers and parents in the operation of their local schools.
- Advocate a greater involvement in the schools by business, labor and community groups.

7. SECURE COMMUNITIES

There is no place for violence in our great city. People should be able to walk the streets in any neighborhood without fear. Secure neighborhoods depend upon the active involvement of all of our citizens and a relationship of trust between the people and the police.

As Mayor, Harold Washington will forge partnerships involving the Police Department, community groups, and other governmental and private agencies to fight crime and protect our neighborhoods.

- To guarantee the best police protection, the Washington administration will:
  - -Insist upon professional and highly qualified leadership for the Police Department.
  - -Renew professional pride throughout the department.
  - -Increase on-the-street police activity.
  - -Establish an independent review process for the careful and attentive handling of citizen complaints regarding the police.
- To involve citizens in making their communities safe, the Washington administration will:
  - -Examine the successful crime education/citizen participation programs in other cities for possible adoptation here.
  - -Improve the working relation with the State's Attorney's Office for more efficient prosecution and improve the effectiveness of the Office of Municipal Investigation.
  - -Make accurate data on crime widely available to citizens and community groups.
  - -Provide increased police protection for senior citizens.
  - -Improve security at CHA and CTA facilities.

8. AFFORDABLE QUALITY HEALTH CARE

Chicago's infant mortality rate, one of the highest in the industrial world, is symptomatic of the serious problems in public health and private care that Harold Washington is determined to remedy.

The prescription begins with prevention. It calls for an upgrading of medical services and insists on the coordination of available resources in order to make all Chicagoans well and keep them that way.

- The new administration's health care program will:
  - -Use neighborhood people to identify and prevent health problems at the local level.
  - -Advance public health education by bringing together the schools, the Department of Health and private and public health delivery systems.
  - -Coordinate the sharing of the medical resources and technology of our governmental and private institutions.
  - -Identify other critical public health problems and remedy them whenever possible.
- The new Mayor will actively pursue funding at all levels of government in order to:
  - -Reverse the cuts in Medicare and Medicaid.
  - -Wage a major attack on priority health problems, such as infant mortality and tuberculosis.
  - -Restore community-based health and mental health programs.
  - -Streamline emergency medical services.
  - -Train and place home health care workers.

9. IMPROVE RACE RELATIONS

There will be no higher priority of Washington's administration than unifying Chicagoans in a common effort to work together. Only by respecting diversity and rejecting racial prejudice can we work together to accomplish the massive tasks which lie ahead.

Harold Washington, as Mayor, will include whites, Blacks, Latinos, Asians and our many other minorities in a shared effort to rebuild Chicago. Deep commitment to human dignity, equality and unity will characterize the Washington administration.

The Washington program reaches out to heal the wounds from past animosities. Diversity does not mean division. For only in strong communities can various peoples gain the necessary confidence to deal with each other with mutual respect.

10. FAIRNESS AND EQUITY

All programs and appoaches of the Washington administration will be based on the fundamental principles of fairness and equity which have, for too long, been ignored by City Hall.

The domination of city government by a small group of insiders has produced a long list of the excluded and ignored. As Mayor, Harold Washigton will reverse this process. He is committed to an inclusive administration, one which will draw on the talents and skills of everyone — women as well as men, black and Latinos as well as whites, poor as well as wealthy, and the disabled as well as the able-bodied.

All groups will be included in the administrative positions and all groups will share equitably in the resources and contracts of the city. As an example of this emphasis on equity, Harold Washington will establish an Office of Women's Affairs which will give special attention to the employment, health, housing and safety concerns of women. This office will reach out to women's organizations and community groups to provide resources to assist them with their programs. A high priority will be given to the especially serious problems facing poor and minority women.

Our city will be rebuilt by including all groups and utilizing fully the talents and leadership capacities of all Chicago's communities.

11. ELIMINATING THE ABUSES OF PATRONAGE

Harold Washington's administration will see to it that city employees are paid for the work they perform, not for political activities they are required to do. The Washington administration will respect and adhere to the law, codified in the Shakman decrees.

In keeping with the professional expectations of city employees, hiring and firing will no longer be based on political clout or connections. This single step will eliminate millions of dollars of waste. It will free city workers from the demeaning demands of kickbacks, fund-raising donations and feudal loyalties.

The end of patronage abuse will also assure competent and dedicated city workers that they no longer have to fear political reprisals for doing their jobs. The Washington administration will challenge city workers to work to their capacities, and reward them for performance.

12. STRONG LEADERSHIP/NEW PARTNERSHIPS

Not until Harold Washington have Chicagoans had an opportunity to elect a Mayor of such strong, experienced and determined leadership. Two decades of leadership at local, state and national levels have finally produced a candidate for Mayor who can forge the cooperative alliances and coalitions that can make a complex city work.

Chicago can be revitalized and rebuilt. The people of Chicago can be put back to work. Healthy communities can flourish. Principles of fairness and equity can prevail.

Harold Washington is a classic example of a historical meeting of the man, the moment and the mission. And we must seize this opportunity to create a new history and a new vision of politics in Chicago.

Harold Washington cannot rebuild Chicago alone. He can give us a common vision, a common purpose and a common set of challenges so that we can become partners in the effort to build.

Du Bois Corner

By Rahim Imani

During the 1920's a period existed called the "Harlem Renaissance" that turned Harlem into not only the Black Arts mecca of the country but also the most noted Black community in the world. During this time the pride of the Black community rose to a level that made many people believe that the rights of Black people would probably come aobut. Although this did not come about, the artistic work of Black people was promoted like never before.

Out of this period came the works of Countee Cullen and Langston Hughes who portrayed the Black community in their literary works. The work of Aaron Douglass was exhibited on canvas while James Van Der Zee captured the period with his photography. Also, white writers and musicians seemed to change their perspective of Black people as many of them began to examine and write more about the Black community.

The music of the "Harlem Renaissance" became one of the most powerful elements of the period as musicians such as Duke Ellington and Count Basic led their big bands in nightclubs called Small's Paradise and the Cotton Club. The rich white community would come uptown night after night for here was the best entertainment New York could offer.

The "Harlem Renaissance" was a period when Black culture was on the rise and Black people took pride in being who they were. From art, to literature, to music and even photography, the image of Black America was brought to the forefront of American culture. A strong and positive cultural image that would effect proceeding generations up to this day.

Grenadan Ambassador to speak on U.S. policy in Caribbean

Dessima Williams, Grenada's Ambassador to the Organization of American States will be visiting Amherst on Thursday, April 14, to address the academic community and the general public. Ambassador Williams will hold a press conference from 10 to 11:30 a.m. on the 14th, at the Faculty Club on the UMass/Amherst campus. She will be discussing Grenada's role in the Caribbean and Central America and its connection with United States defense activities in that area. She wil also give a public talk "The Role of United States in the Caribbean: Focus on Grenada" on Thursday evening at 8:00 p.m. in S.B.A. 116. Her visit is being sponsopred by the Western Massachusetts chapter of the U.S.-Grenada Friendship Society and other organizations.

The small Eastern Caribbean island of Greneada has been a focus of attention in theCaribbean and Central America in connection with U.S. defense activities in that area. The island won its independence from Great Britain in 1974, and in March 1979, the New Jewel Movement ousted Eric Gairy, who had ruled through dictatorship for 28 years.

The People's Revolutionary Government formed by the New Jewel Movement has been criticized by the U.S. government because of its relationship with Cuba. Although Williams was appointed Ambassador to the U.S. in April 1979, neither Carter nor the Reagan Administration has accepted her credentials.

Williams, an organizer of the New Jewel Movement in Grenada, has served as the island's Ambassador to the OAS for the last four years. She holds a B.A. in International Relations from the University of Minnesota, an M.A. from American University, and was studying for her Ph.D. when she was appointed Ambassador.

Grenada's Ambassador, Dessima Williams will be speaking at the S.B.A. on Thursday at 8:00 p.m.

Other sponsors of Williams' visit include th Five College Black Studies Executive Committee, the Five College Women's Studies Faculty Seminar, and UMass International Programs Office, Third World Women's Task Force, Department of Anthropology, Latin American Studies and Afro-American Studies programs.

There is still cause for hopeful excitement around tomorrow's Chicago election. Regardless of the results, the electoral race has already done much to increase Black political power: 200,000 new Black voters were registered during the primary race when Harold Washington emerged the Democratic party victor in a strongly organized campaign.

By now Americans have heard about Washington's bid, but, undoubtedly what is known about him is limited to the racial strife and division the city is experiencing over the race and the controversy over his tax violations, (which occured during the 1960's).

These factors of the Chicago race have been emphasized to the exclusion of what Washington truly represents: something more than the traditional Democratic party output. (This may explain why Democrats have been slow to extend their support for him).

In light of the open appeal to racist fears used in Republican Bernard Epton's campaign — his slogan is "Epton, before it's two late" — a Washington loss would indicate that a deeper struggle may be at hand before Americans can hope for change. A look at Washington's broad and incisive mayoral platform reveals such.

Abbey Lincoln in concert: Black Musicians Conference

Abbey Lincoln will perform Friday in the Student Union.

The Duke Ellington Committee/UPC Productions in association with the 12th Annual Black Musicians Conference proudly presents vocalist/composer Abbey Lincoln (Aminata Moseka) as a part of the 5th annual Solos and Duos concert series, Friday, April 15.

Born in Chicago, Illinois and named Anna Maria, she began her career as a child of six performing to audiences in both church and school. At the age of nineteen, she made her professional debut when she was hired by the minister of a local church to perform for her peers in a cabaret atmosphere in the basement of the church.

Later, she continued to perform in small clubs in California, the Northwest, and Honolulu. In Hollywood, she met songwriter Bob Russell, and this began a fruitful collaboration. In 1956, Abbey released her first album, "Affair" which was followed by appearances in supper clubs throughout America.

In the 60's, Abbey collaborated with Max Roach in the collection of Evergreen recordings which set her apart, and established her as one of the outstanding contributors to music.

While on a trip to Africa in 1973, she was given the names Aminata and Moseka. And for Abbey Lincoln, a name change has always meant a new phase in her career. Abbey continues to perform today, and that now includes lectures and presentations as well as musical entertainment. In addition to her extensive musical achievements, Abbey is also a highly regarded actress having appeared on Broadway in "Jamaica" as well as on several television shows.

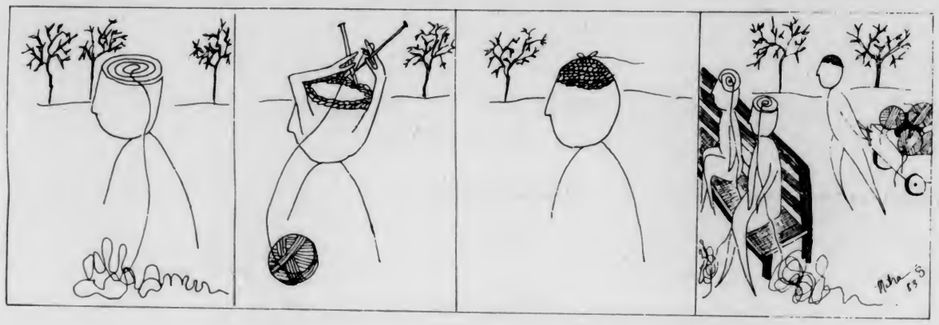
The show will begin at 8:00 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge, Student Union Building. The show is free to the public.

Also, on Sunday, April 17, the Duke Ellington Committee in association with the 12th Annual Black Musicians Conference is honored to present a Day of Gospel with Horace Boyer and Herbert Smith, at Memorial Hall, UMass-Amherst.

Horace Boyer is presently an Associate Professor of Music at the University of Mass./Amherst. He is also a highly regarded gospel performer, having worked with such Gospel greats as Mahalia Jackson, Dorothy Love Coates and the legendary James Cleveland, and has recorded on the Savoy and Nashboro labels. Professor Boyer has written numerous articles on the history of Gospel music and currently serves as Consultant to the Smithsonian Institution on Afro-American Sacred Music.

Herbert Smith was born and raised with gospel music in Dallas, Texas. As a young man, he performed with gospel choirs and ensembles, and also performed with the James Cleveland Gospel Workshop. He is also a trained pantomime, and has used this art as a tool to teach children. Mr. Smith is currently a doctoral candidate at the University of Massachusetts/Amherst, and he has performed with the University Jazz Ensemble and the Voices of Jubilee.

This promises to be a special event, and one that is long over due. The show will begin at 2:00 p.m., Memorial Hall, UMass. Admission is free to the public.



"Perspectives on Black Music" Panel

On Tuesday, April 12, 1983 at 7:30 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge, UMass, the 12th Annual Black Musicians Conference will present a panel discussion entitled "Perspectives on Black Music." Four prominent figures in jazz music, trumpeter/ethnomusicologist Donald Byrd, musician/playwright Archie Shepp, President of the National Association of Jazz Educators, Dr. Warrick Carter, and Jazz program specialist from the National Endowment for the Arts, Jeff Anthony, will convene to discuss the state of Black music and its future. The Panel will be moderated by Frederick Tillis, Director of the Fine Arts Center.

The following are brief biographical descriptions of the panel participants:

Donald Byrd was born in Detroit, a city that had supplied many of the stalwarts of Bop and Hard Bop. Byrd established himself in New York City with Art Blakey's Messengers and Max Roach in the 1960's. He received his Masters in Music Education and a Ph.D. in college teaching. Concerned with the history and culture of Afro-American music, he is a leading ethnomusicologist. His playing with the Blackbyrds avoided the musical cliches of the period and invented new routes to old destinations. Byrd lectures at various campuses on education, Black music, and law as it pertains to music and musicians concentrating on promoting respect of Black music.

Archie Shepp, tenor saxophonist, band leader, and playwright was born in Florida in 1937 and made his earliest recordings with Cecil Taylor in 1960. By 1962 he had emerged as an original voice with the New York Contemporary Five. From the mid-60's he has led his own groups. In the late 60's he toured Europe extensively with musicians of the Bop movement, Hank Hobley and Philly Joe Jones. His attempt to introduce an element of Africanism into his work reflects his concern for Africa where he first played in 1969. In the 70's, Shepp embarked on a new aspect of his career, that of college professor, teaching at the University of Buffalo and then, at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, where he presently is a professor of Music and Afro-American studies. Among his many awards, Shepp was voted by Downbeat's International Music Critic's poll the 1982 Tenor Saxophonist of the year.

Warrick Carter is the President of the National Association of Jazz Educators. He received his B.S. in Music from Tennessee State University, and his Masters and Ph.D. in Music Education from Michigan University. He has performed extensively as a drummer, both nationally and internationally, and has written arrangements for recording artists including Peabo Bryson and Natalie Cole. He is a widely published authority on Jazz education and history. Currently he is the Chairman of the Division of Fine and Performing Arts at Governor's State University.

Jeff Anthony is the head of Jazz Programs for the National Endowment for the Arts. He received his B.A. from Georgetown University in Arts Administration with a minor in Music and is presently working on his Masters at George Washington University in Arts Administration. He has worked as a consultant for Jazz organizations (Smithsonian Institute, Kennedy Center) and radio stations in addition to doing bookings and promotion for several jazz groups. An accomplished bassist, Anthony has performed throughout the country with outstanding musicians of Jazz music.

Donald Byrd, trumpeter and ethnomusicologist will appear as part of a panel of Perspectives of Black Music, April 12th (Tues.) at 7:30 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge — UMass.

Chick Corea does it again

by Richard Thorpe

Chick Corea - his expression of jazz has given rise to numerous jazz artists just breaking the scene: Tom Browne, Rodney Franklin, Bernard Wright, Chico Freeman, and last year's sensation, Wynton Marsalis. The influence of his music on these young artists can be compared with the influence Coltrane had on countless musicians and that of Miles Davis on Corea and fellow musicians Stanley Clarke, Herbie Hancock and Lenny White. Chick is no longer recording solo, rather for the time being, he has settled in smugly with the quintet known as Touchstone.

The same ensemble that performed on the lp "Touchstone" is featured on Chick's new album aptly titled, "Again and Again". The performers include, Steve Kuyala - flute and sax, Carlos Benavent - bass, Don Alias - percussion, Tom Brecktlein - drums, and wrote all the compositions) is also felt. Side two also has that "Weather Report-Return to Forever" sound that may be a bit too intense for many people; the opening three minutes of "Twang" is simply a journey through synthesized textures over the rest of the ensemble. This takes away from the song and makes it sound emotionless.

Probably the harshest comment that I can make about this record doesn't refer to the music but where it was recorded, South Africa. I don't understand why Chick Corea would even attempt to perform in the very country where apartheid - racial hatred and subhumane conditions for Blacks are the rule. The recording of this record at the South African Broadcasting Company in Johannesburg, South Africa was totally uncalled for.

Pianist Chick Corea

of course, Chick residing at the keyboards. Having seen this group last November, I know just how exceptional they are. Most of the material on the album seems tailor-made for them and they handle it with grace and ease.

The album is appropriately titled because three of the six pieces were either recorded or performed in concert.

To classify the record, side one is primarily straight ahead jazz. It features the haunting yet controlled flute of Steve Kuyala, the "fretless" bass virtuosity of Carlos Benavent and the exceptionally gifted percussionist, Don Alias. Side two has more of a progressive or fusion sound to it and this really reaches the fore on the concluding number "Twang". Chick's tight playing and overall direction (he produced, arranged and

On Saturday, April 16th at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts/Amherst, the Third World Theater Series will close its 1983 Spring season with a dynamic and innovative presentation by the Pan Asian Repertory Theater entitled "Yellow Fever." "Yellow Fever," a mystery comedy, is written by Canadian playwright, Rick Shiomi.

"Yellow Fever" toys with the slick, suave character of Humphrey Bogart's Sam Spade and creates with a Pan Asian flair, a Canadian nisei (second generation Japanese) detective, Sam Shikaze. From Powell Street, Vancouver's Asian Ghetto, Sam seeks to solve the mystery of the kidnapped Cherry Blossom Queen while balancing his romantic life with reporter, Nancy Wing. Through comedy author Shiomi shows us the viscious attitudes of the Canadian majority towards its Asian minority population.

The Pan Asian Repertory Theater is a New York based Theatrical group which has established the first east coast professional Asian American Theater company. They have previously appeared at UMass in their touring productions of "Flowers of Household Gods" and "The Soul Shall Dance."

Each play is accompanied by a free workshop. On Saturday, April 16 from 1:30 - 3:00 at Smith College in the Green Room, Ernest Abuba of the Pan Asian Repertory Theater will conduct a workshop entitled, "Introduction to Asian-American Theater: Acting Workshop." All workshops are FREE!

UMass linked to Colorado Supercomputer via telephone

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

Officials sipped champagne yesterday after cutting the ribbon on a telephone line that will link the University of Massachusetts with one of the world's most powerful computers.

Representatives from UMass, Colorado State University (CSU) and Control Data Corporation gathered yesterday to celebrate the signing of an agreement that allows researchers in New England access to CSU's Cyber 205 supercomputer.

The supercomputer, located at CSU's Center for Computational Studies in Fort Collins, is linked to UMass through a 1,601 mile phone link that was installed last month. CSU's Cyber 205 is one of 60 class VI computers in the world. UMass becomes the fourth University in the nation to have access to a class VI computer.

The Cyber 205 supercomputer is able to perform up to 400 million operations per second while UMass' computer, a Cyber 175, can compute a maximum of 13 million operations per second.

"We can really do problems we couldn't do before," UMass chemical engineering professor Michael F. Malone said yesterday.

Malone, who will use the Cyber 205 to continue his 8 years of research on the flow of polymer liquids, recently received a grant from the Control Data Corporation, Cyber's manufacturer, for $10,000 worth of time on the Cyber 205. CSU's Center for Computational Studies charges researchers $1,000 per hour.

George Olsen, vice president of CSU's Research Foundation, said he made the agreement with UMass after UMass Computing Center Director Conrad A. Wogrin approached him to secure such an agreement.

"UMass now has the facility (hook up) because they were approachable," Olsen said. "UMass has a sound, central computing facility. Harvard and M.I.T. do not."

"We also have Connie Wogrin," commented Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey. "M.I.T. and Harvard do not."

Wogrin said CSU will benefit from the agreement because the phone line will increase the number of users paying for the system. CSU leases the supercomputer from Control Data Corporation for $4000,000 per month.

Currently CSU, along with users from five oil companies and 27 research projects, uses 30 percent of the machine's potential capacity, a spokesman for CSU said.

While defraying the cost of CSU's lease, researchers will be able to save grant funds because of the supercomputer's high cost-efficiency.

One UMass researcher who will use the Cyber 205 to perform color enhancements of photographs said the supercomputer will operate 20 times faster than the Cyber 175.

While the UMass computer would take 12 hours to complete an analysis of a photo, at a charge of $9600, the CSU supercomputer would complete the job in 40 minutes at a cost of $600.

Coverage of "Amherst 11" may harm UMass, say officials

By RICHARD NANGLE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts can only be harmed through the publication of the ongoing struggle between the so-called "Amherst 11" and the Massachusetts Society of Professors, according to an official from UMass President David C. Knapp's office and MSP President Bruce Laurie.

Edward Kelley, vice president for human resources said only time will tell whether the events will "help or tarnish" UMass' reputation.

"I'm not interested in going to press, it can only hurt the institution," Laurie said.

Both responded to an open letter signed by the 11 professors who are questioning the legality of the MSP agency fee. Four of the professors were suspended without pay during spring break for refusing to act on payment of the fee.

Knapp suspended professors Edward Harrison of astronomy, Hugh Davis of landscape architecture, Douglas Jensen of physics and Alan Marra of wood science and technology.

The professors refused to file litigation with the Massachusett's Labor Relations Commission (MLRC) because they believed challenging the size of the fee rather than the fee itself was "fighting the wrong fight."

Professors John Palmer of zoology, Vere Chappell of philosophy, William Randall and Robert Kent of landscape architecture, Bruce Jacobson of biochemistry and Michael Kreisler of physics opted to challenge the fee through the MLRC and therefore avoided suspension. John Rhodes, a part time employee at UMass, arranged to pay a pro-rated portion of the fee.

"I don't believe that any of the president's actions forced them to fight the wrong fight," Kelley said. They chose for the longest time to do nothing. We don't have that perogative in this country."

"They are not forced to join the union. They are asked to pay a fair share of what it costs the union to negotiate a contract that benefits all the faculty," he said.

"If all individuals are going to take part in a contract, all should pay. If one is going to stand up to principle one should expect to pay for it," Laurie said, defending the suspensions.

Laurie said he did not support termination of faculty who did not pay the agency fee, but would have if left no other choice. He said suspensions were used as an alternative only after their legality was determined in a California court case.

The professors could afford to challenge the existence of the fee through the courts since the National Right to Work Council has supported them in the past, Laurie said in refuting the professors' claim that they can only afford to fight the size of the fee.

He said the action was taken due to internal struggles within the union.

"Some faculty were bragging that they had never paid the fee. You can imagine the position that puts us in," he said.

He said the Massachusetts Supreme Court has upheld the legality of agency fees in a recent case.

Responding to the professor's charge that UMass is the first university in the country to abandon academic freedom and tenure, Laurie said both are never absolute. But, he added, they have not been abrogated in this case.

"The university has not abandoned tenure or academic freedom," Kelley said.

Mandatory agency fees were agreed upon as part of the collective bargaining process when the union was first formed, Kelley said. He said that provision was made in exchange for something else in order to work out the details of the contract.

Soviet's say mail is from Americans

MOSCOW (AP) — The Communist Party newspaper Pravda yesterday printed excerpts of letters to party leader Yuri V. Andropov — letters it said were written by American citizens.

Pravda ran a photograph of a batch of letters and said that in some Western circles the fact that the letters expressed respect for Andropov and the Soviet Union was met with disapproval.

There was no means of verifying the letters' authenticity.

It was the second time in two months that Pravda has carried such a selection of excerpts. Its article Monday, referring to a similar one Feb. 22, said "Unprejudiced readers saw, in the quoted expressions of the Americans, the exposure of respect by the foreign public of the Soviet leader, and their understanding of the important role which the U.S.S.R. plays in international affairs, as well as acknowledgement of the constructive contribution of our country in search of peaceful solutions of the most acute problems of our time."

Pravda said "Those in the West who are dropping venomous seeds of hostility and tension, as well as (who) try to poison the conscience of people by fables of Soviet military threat and whip up the arms race did not like the letters."

It said The New York Times tried to question the authenticity of the letters by reporting some of the authors could not be found in telephone books and that some of those identified as letter writers denied having written to Andropov.

"But never mind how (this irritates) these specialists on disinformation," Pravda said. "Everything which we quote in our view was expressed by real, existing Americans and accurately reprinted."

The newspaper said many of the letters expose the "disinformation of Americans, and the results of the protagonists of the military industrial complex."

Chicagoans to go to polls today

CHICAGO (AP) — Harold Washington stumped at a breakneck pace yesterday to shore up support among white liberals, while opponent Bernard Epton coasted to the finish line in the city's most bitter mayoral contest in decades.

Washington, a two-term Democratic congressman who hopes today's election will make him Chicago's first black mayor, returned yesterday to a North Side lakefront area where he had rallied with hundreds of white liberal supporters over the weekend.

"I don't like the word battleground, but this is the focus," he said during one of about 10 stops in a hectic campaign day.

He also invited Democratic Mayor Jane M. Byrne and Democratic leaders supporting Epton to join Washington in a unity ceremony after the election. But he warned them they would be working with an "aggressive, progressive mayor," Mrs. Byrne endorsed Washington immediately after losing the Democratic primary to him, then briefly considered a write-in campaign and has remained silent about him since.

Seven year-old tells of abuse

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — A fidgety seven-year-old boy testified at a babysitter's murder trial yesterday that his 3-year-old sister was lifted by her hair and hurled to the ground the day she was fatally injured.

A prosecutor said the toddler suffered a "regular routine" of beatings for months before her death.

"She pulled her up by the hair and threw her on the ground," young Ray Mallett told a Middlesex Superior Court jury considering a murder charge against Elizabeth Hutchinson, 31, in the 1982 death of Brandy Mallett.

Ms. Hutchinson moved into the children's home early last year, about the time the children's mother moved out, a neighbor said. Other testimony yesterday indicated she and the children's father were lovers.

The prosecutor told the jury that neighbors of the Everett home heard the babysitter screaming obscenities and beating Brandy virtually every day for months before the toddler died.

"They had a regular routine of slapping and beating going on within the walls," said Thomas Drechsler, an assistant district attorney.

A neighbor, Linda Isbart, told the court yesterday that once she saw a bruise the shape of a handprint covering one side of Brandy's face.

She also said she heard banging against the wall of the house on Oct. 14, two days before the child was fatally injured.

"During the banging I could hear Brandy crying and crying. She was saying 'Please, Mummy, don't hit me. I'll be a good girl. I promise,'" Ms. Isbart said.

Ms. Isbart said she reported the incident to the Department of Social Services.

Brandy died of a blood clot Oct. 29 at Massachusetts General Hospital, 13 days after she was admitted with body bruises, a broken leg and head injuries.

Little Irish girl "haunts" Chicago castle

CHICAGO — The Irish Castle on the South Side is only a copy and not even a century old, but folks say it has a wee ghostie — with a brogue, yet.

The ghost is said to be a little Irish girl named Colleen who appears in a long, white dress.

The peculiar three-turreted place, supposedly uninhabited, is also said to emit mysterious party sounds.

Witnesses to little Colleen's appearances are as hard to pin down as she is, though there are plenty of second-hand accounts.

There is one witness to the party sounds, but she asks to remain anonymous.

The building's current tenants are members of the Beverly Unitarian Church. Hearing the ghost stories has become an informal initiation rite for new members and the little girl's visit is re-enacted every Halloween.

Guilty but insane plea urged by representative

BOSTON — Massachusetts should worry more about protecting the public and less about safeguarding the rights of the accused, a legislator said yesterday in urging approval of a new "guilty but insane" plea in criminal cases.

Rep. William G. Robinson, R-Melrose said the Bay State legal system has tilted too far in favor of suspects charged with a crime, who can literally get away with murder by pleading "innocent by reason of insanity."

"The general public is absolutely appalled when a defendant is allowed to escape punishment which I believe is due them," Robinson said, citing the uproar following John Hinckley's acquittal on insanity grounds in the shooting of President Reagan.

Critics of Robinson's plan told the joint Criminal Justice Committee that the insanity plea is used rarely in criminal cases and the issue has been blown out of proportion due to heavily publicized cases like Hinckley's.

Robinson and other GOP lawmakers have filed eight bills changing the handling of defendants who say they suffered from mental illness during the time they were charged with committing a crime.

The bills would change the normal plea of innocent by reason of insanity to one of guilty but insane. It would be up to the defendant — not the prosecution — to show such a plea was justified.

Dramatist teaches all he knows in 26 minutes

BALTIMORE — Dramatist Edward Albee says he refuses to teach college courses because he would complete the lessons in a half hour and then have nothing to do for the rest of the semester.

Albee spoke to 50 students at John Hopkins University, where he taught a 26-minute playwrighting workshop.

Albee advised, "Have the major speeches by the main characters given on stage and not off. Have the climax toward the end. Know what everyone has written. But don't always read masterpieces, read some failures, too. If anything, it's encouraging. And that's about it. I taught you everything I know about writing in about 26 minutes."

He commented briefly on the critics' mostly negative reviews of "The Man Who Had Three Arms," his latest Broadway play.

"If they had reviewed the play as a play I had written instead of as a play they had hoped I had written, then the reviews would have been better," Albee said.

Student left locked out

Controversy arose in John Adams dormitory at the University of Massachusetts when a second floor resident who allegedly had left her curling iron on was not let into her locked room by the area head of residence (HR).

Robin Pontremoli said she had sought assistance from HR Jim Drackley after locking herself out of her room, Friday morning. He refused to unlock the door, even after I told him my curling iron was on," she said.

Recognizing the potential fire hazard, second floor residents felt Drackley was jeopardizing the safety of the entire dorm, Pontremoli said.

However, Drackley may not have known about the curling iron.

"At no time was it indicated that this was the reason the women wanted her door unlocked," Robert White, Associate Director of Southwest said.

"Each house posts hours of available assistance and this must have occurred during a time when no one was available," he said.

Drackley declined to comment on the issue.

After being denied admittance into her room, Pontremoli telephoned both the Amherst fire department and the UMass police.

The Amherst fire department reports receiving a call at 10 a.m. Friday morning from Pontremoli during which she said she was locked out, her curling iron was on and she would not be let into her room by the HR. The dispatch notified the UMass police, who said they would handle the situation.

When UMass police phoned Drackley "it was the first time the fact about the curling iron had been introduced," White said.

Drackley then unlocked the room, Pontremoli said.

Hampshire starts new program

By RICHARD EISENDORF
Collegian Correspondent

New students entering Hampshire College this year have the option of participating in a new program designed to integrate them into Hampshire life as smoothly as possible.

By combining a sense of community, a common set of goals and close teacher-to-student interaction, the Coordinated Basic Studies program (CBS) got underway.

A similar program exists at Evergreen State College in Washington where Richard Muller, one of three founding professors, saw the program in effect and brought the idea back to Hampshire College.

After its first semester's trial run, CBS has "worked moderately well", said Donald Poe, Social Science professor in the program. For most students, the program provided more structure and more individual attention for the first semester.

Under the regular system many students were not able to handle the unstructured nature of the individually designed curriculum. According to Andrew Scott, Director of Programs for New Students, although Hampshire College fares well compared to other alternative educational institutions, 35 to 40 percent of entering students do not return for a second year.

To change this trend CBS tries to ease the transition from high school to college. This aim is exemplified by the goals of the program: to teach a subject matter and to familiarize students with Hampshire College thus facilitating their adjustment.

CBS "acted like a bridge" from a structured high school to Hampshire College, said Pier Takal, a first year student in the program.

The goals of CBS are achieved through three courses: one based on readings, guest speakers, and discussions; the second devoted to the theme of "Living with Technology"; and the third involving the Hampshire College program in which students have workshops on writing skills, research, and Division I exams.

Regular students take a "smorgasbord of courses" for the first semester, said Poe, and are on their own to work on their Division I exams. In CBS students work closely with professors in a more structured curriculum. Many students saw this as an advantage and they are "moving through the system faster," observed Poe.

In addition CBS provided a strong sense of community for the new students by starting the semester with a one-week retreat in Cape Cod. In daily contact with professors and other CBS students, some feel the tight community was the one aspect of the program that didn't work.

Joanna D'Amato said she found the community "kind of swamping" where they were always seeing the same people, in and out of class. Poe describes this as the "greenhouse effect."

A look back at union's past

By BROOKE STATES
Collegian Staff

April 12, 1963, AFL-CIO president George Meany came to UMass to present (Local 1776, American Federation of City, County, and Municipal Employees) with its charter. Today, its twentieth anniversary, the union faces new challenges and old problems.

The drive for union recognition began in early 1963 when 75 janitors picketed the old South College Administration building for two days, protesting working conditions and personnel decisions.

"Many people including myself were dissatisfied because promotions were given to friends. Hiring of personnel was done in a very lackadaisical way," said Paul Korpita, first union president.

The state labor relations commission held elections in May of 1968 to determine additional representation for workers on campus, according to Bernie Davidow's history of Local 1776. As a result of these elections AFSCME won representation rights for workers in service maintenance, agricultural and manual, security, and later food service classifications. The local represents 1200 workers on campus.

Members of 1776 were instrumental in getting the Federal Credit Union on campus for employees. A 1776 member was the credit union's first president, according to Davidow.

Davidow states that on September 16, 1968, 120 workers refused to come to work, complaining about low wage scales, lack of job classifications, and poor parking conditions. At the time millions of dollars worth of buildings were under construction on campus. Workers refused to cross picket lines set up by local 1776. The university agreed that no action would be taken, provided that striking employees took the time as sick leave or vacation.

On April 1, 1973 the University created the position of coordinator of labor relations, and the current structure of collective bargaining took place, Davidow said.

"We had the best college contract in Western Massachusetts. We were able to resolve grievances before they got on paper," said Roland Messier. Messier was union president in 1976-1977. He is still active with AFSCME in Boston.

"We had a good relationship with the administration. We also had good stewards and they knew what to do. I am afraid that we will lose rights that we have won when the next contract comes up," Messier said.

"We have a long history of struggle, service and leadership, innocative grievances, and a sophisticated membership," said John Tuttle. Tuttle was union president from 1978 to 1982.

"Unions are a fact of public employment in Massachusetts. The Board of Regents does not appear to be more anti-union than the Trustees were, they will probably try to force a bargaining unit election to minimize the number of contracts that they will have to deal with," Tuttle said.

"The problem that AFSCME faces is the problem that many public sector unions face after PATCO. They are afraid to strike. No-strike clauses restrain the rights of workers," said Alan Compagnon, AFSCME shop steward.

"We are negotiating with the Board of Regents for the first time, instead of the Trustees. They want to limit and constrain our future contracts. We were active in the Democratic Party issues convention, but we need to be more active, and be a more democratic union," Compagnon said.

Anti-semitism trainers hired

By PAUL DESMOND
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts has become the first school in the nation to hire Jewish Awareness/anti-Semitism trainers to deal with the problem of anti-Semitism on campus.

Two trainers, both graduate students, have been hired as a result of the recommendations of a committee of faculty, staff, and students who were part of last year's campus-wide "Year Toward Civility" campaign. That year-long program focused on the problems of racism, sexism, anti-Semitism and other forms of oppression on campus.

The trainers run workshops, plan programs, work as consultants and advocates, and make recommendations for further study in the area of anti-Semitism. One trainer works in the residence halls while the other works with Recognized Student Organizations (RSOs) and campus agencies.

Robin Miller, the trainer working with RSOs and campus agencies, said so far student response has been very good.

"Every workshop has been remarkably successful and very moving," Miller said.

Workshops are designed to raise awareness about identifying anti-Semitism and stereotypes she said.

"Student response has usually been one of amazement at how much learning happens in workshops," Miller said. "People don't realize about stereotypes and how much they don't know about Jews."

Miller said her workshops attempt to promote a positive understanding of Jewish history and culture which she believes will result in the decline of anti-Semitism.

Another function of the anti-Semitism trainers, according to Miller, is to serve as "crisis interveners". The trainers will check up on reports of anti-Semitism among faculty, in dorms, or elsewhere on campus.

Precipitation forces worms up from earthly homesteads

By RITA MURPHY

Did you ever think about worms?

They're those slimy little animals seventh graders like to fling at their classmates when the teacher is not looking.

They're also those Lumbrica terrestri students dissect in high school.

They're those things that you've been squashing and slipping on for the past couple of days on your way to Physics for Poets.

Because of the recent downpour of rain in the area, worms have come out of the ground in "unusually large numbers," said Doug Smith, curator of invertebrates in the zoology department.

"Because of the unusual amount of rain, worms have been forced to leave their homes in the ground and come to the surface. If they don't, they will drown," said Smith.

After the worms emerge from the ground, they crawl around trying to get away from the water, but usually meet up with a worse fate than drowning, he said.

"Worms are easy pickings. If they don't drown, then they usually either get stomped on by people or are eaten by birds," he said.

This area has a large number of starlings which eat worms for survival, he said.

If worms get squished or drown, it doesn't take long for their bodies to decompose, usually only a few days, he said.

Most of the worms in the area are on the average, about four to five inches long, but "I've seen nightcrawlers a foot long stretched out," said Ralph Mankowsky, entomology professor.

Worms are very important to area farmers because they take air out of the soil, thus enabling plants to breathe better, Mankowsky said the recent rainfall may even produce a shortage of earthworms.

Because of the recent rain "there is no question there are going to be fewer earthworms around," how few is still unknown, he said.

Smith said there have been hundreds of thousands of worms killed in recent days, but "millions still remain in the area."

"There is a huge mortality rate with worms, but they reproduce at an incredibly rapid rate," he said.

Student charged with assault in Southwest auto rampage

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN

A 19-year-old student was arrested by University of Massachusetts police early Sunday morning and charged with driving while intoxicated, several motor vehicle violations and assault and battery with a dangerous weapon (an automobile), police said yesterday.

Police said the incident occured on Fearing St. near the Southwest Residential College at about 2:30 a.m. Sunday. Police observed the Duxbury resident leave the scene of a disturbance and strike a parked vehicle twice, moving it about five feet, they said.

Police said a woman stated the student hit her car and attempted to strike a friend of hers with his car. Police also reported that a person had to jump on the hood of a car to avoid being hit.

The student was also charged with operating to endanger and operating without a license in his possession.

In other police action:

— A 19-year-old student from Mashpee was arrested Saturday night and charged with breaking entering in the nighttime with intent to commit a felony in connection with an incident at the John Adams dormitory in Southwest.

— Police arrested a 19-year-old man early Saturday morning and charged him with having no license in possession, failing to operate in a single lane and being a minor transporting alcoholic beverages.

Police said the North Andover resident was observed weaving south on North Pleasant Street. He was unable to produce a license upon request, police said, and was arrested after taking a field sobriety test.

— A jeep carrying seven people near Alumni Stadium was pulled over Saturday evening and the operator arrested after he refused to submit a license and registration to a police officer, police said.

The 23-year-old driver was charged with refusing to submit a license and registration to a police officer, driving while impeded (having an excess amount of people in the vehicle) and having no license in possession.

— Police said they stopped a 20-year-old Deerfield man near Campus Center Way and charged him with possession of a firearm on campus. The gun, a .22 caliber bold action rifle, and a box of ammunition were found in the man's pickup truck.

— A 22-year-old Brockton man was arrested Saturday night shortly after 8 p.m. after police observed him attempt to back his vehicle over a curb on Eastman Lane, police said.

Police said the man was arrested and charged with driving while under the influence of alcohol. A 21-year-old woman passenger in the vehicle was placed in protective custody.

Amherst police report several flasher incidents in vicinity of North Prospect street in past week

Amherst Police reported several incidents of indecent exposure last week in the vicinity of North Prospect St. Police said they responded to a call from a young woman at 12:48 a.m. last Wednesday who said a man in his early 20's was banging on the rear window of her ground floor apartment and performing an indecent sexual act. Police returned to the scene after a second call at 1:29 a.m. when the woman said the flasher had returned.

Similar incidents have been reported from that neighborhood, police said, including one occurrence in the rain last Thursday. No one has been apprehended in connection with the incidents.

Australians and beer go hand in hand

By RICHARD MARTIN
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: second in a series of articles from Australia.

BRISBANE AUSTRALIA — Australian beer is so rich, tasty, and satisfying that it worth every penny of the 11,000 mile trip to get Down Under, even to spend just one night in an Australian pub. Australian beer and drinking habits, however take a little while to get used to.

First of all, the beer in the State of Queensland has about three times as much alcohol as American beer making it impossible to drink twelve beers and remember where the car is parked.

Everybody in Australia calls beer "piss." Instead of "drinking beer", Aussies go out and "sink piss." Instead of "getting drunk", Aussies "get pissed." In different parts of the country beer can be called "grog" or ever "brew."

There is no such thing as a "bar" in Australia. A "pub" is usually a place to go just to drink, and not necessarily to listen to music or meet people. A "hotel" is a drinking establishment that is usually open air and spills out on to the sidewalk. Hotels usually have a live band playing, and more often than not it is also outdoors. A "Club" is limited to members and their guests, and it is a combination of both a pub and hotel (somewhat like downtown Amherst's "The Pub"). It usually has a live band on the weekend, but it also has pool tables, video games, and recreation.

Whether in a pub, hotel, or club in Australia there are three different beer sizes. When a "beer" is ordered, it comes in a seven-ounce glass. Ask for a "schooner" and it comes in a 16-ounce mug. Instead of ordering a "pitcher" of beer customers ask for a "jug."

The drinking age in the state of Queensland is 18, but it is not enforced. However, owners of drinking establishments are just as financially liable if a patron leaves a place in a drunken condition and cause some type of damage. This law is strictly enforced, so its not unusual to see a bartender deny somebody a drink.

Drinkers don't "buy a round" of beer, they "shout for piss, or shout for "grog". In other words, each person sitting at a table takes turns buying the beers. It is considered to be extremely rude to shout for beer out of turn or buy one beer.

Beer-drinking is considered to be a masculine thing in Australia, and Australians take their beer-drinking seriously; they consume 30 gallons per every man, woman and child — which is staggering when considering that females and children don't drink beer. That average, by the way, puts them slightly behind the Belgians and Bavarians, but Aussie beer is twice as strong as those brands.

Most pubs have nightly "skulling" contests. "Skulling" a beer means drinking a full beer (whatever size it happens to be) all at once. This is usually done in teams of four drinkers in relay fashion. In order to signify that he has finished drinking his beer, the "skuller" must tip the beer glass upside-down and place it on top of his head. If any remaining beer drips onto him then the team is automatically disqualified.

What do the winners get? Why, usually they complimentary pub mugs to drink more beer. What else?

Sporting goods co-op provides variety of goods

By MICHELE DOLAN
Collegian Correspondent

The sporting goods co-op, appropriately named "Get Physical — Sporting Goods for Less", is a student-run business organized to "provide low-cost sporting equipment to students", said Sue Kindlund, manager.

The inventory of the store has doubled since last year, Kindlund said. In addition to the usual racquets, balls, and athletic shoes found in sporting goods stores, the co-op has the "largest supply of frisbees in Amherst", Kindlund said. The store will be getting in Hacky Sacks, hand-sized bean bags that are juggled by deflection off the knees and feet.

"Basically all the merchandise in our store is new, however, some of it is blemished", said Kindlund, a fashion marketing major. A blemish that might appear on a racquetball racquet wouldn't effect play, but would reduce the cost from $53 to $25, she added.

All of the sneakers in the store are new. A pair of Converse All-Star leather high tops, $44 at the Hampshire Mall in Hadley, would cost $37 at the co-op.

The new equipment is bought wholesale and the prices are low because there is a low mark-up. The store keeps its inventory high by procuring a lot of equipment on consignment.

The store was started in 1978 by students in the university's sports management program. It is now being run by nine students, four of whom are marketing majors. Some students working in the co-op receive three credits per semester for their work.

Kindlund attributes the success of the co-op to the "innovative marketing done by the marketing representatives", who have promoted the co-op by spreading flyers around the campus, setting up window displays, and working at a table set up in the Campus Center.

An intramural frisbee team will be organized by the co-op within the next few weeks. There will also be a freestyle frisbee competition sponsored by the co-op later in the spring.

The sporting goods co-op is open to everyone. The co-op is located in the Student Union, next to the Post Office. It is open from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Women idealized in African sculptures

By ROBERTA RUBIN
Collegian Correspondent

The African woman has become an idealized woman in African sculptural themes, said an art history professor from the University of Illinois, last night at Mount Holyoke College.

"One finds idealized images in traditional African art, of womankind concerning purity, maidenhood before marriage and the hard labors for the woman after she is married," said Anita Glazer.

Glazer makes references to the slides of sculptures and masks which she used to describe the different art forms that visually praise women as having spiritual and physical power.

Glazer describes the Queen Mother in an African tribe as being a mother to not simply her own offspring but to all the women of her kingdom.

"The infancy mortality rate is very high and so, children are very precious to an African mother."

The Queen Mother is a commemorative figure, honoring women of the highest rank, she said. The term "mother" not only describes the woman who nourishes and protects her child, she said. She becomes a symbol for someone who cares about the community of the tribe.

Through the art, she said, the female is conceived as having higher stature as well as having a fuller human form. This could be shown through the sculptures which present women as having elongated wombs, full breasts and an exaggerated naval.

"The infancy mortality rate is very high and so, children are very precious to an African mother," she said.

Besides the role of an African woman as a mother, one of the most interesting aspects of the African tribes is the emphasis on the male-female couple, she said.

The ideal social unit in the African tribe is the male-female pair, she said.

Figure sculptures with a man or a woman alone, are missing a half, she said. Glazer said that it is the blending of male and female elements to become the completed whole which makes it the most interesting.

Glazer also said that she finds the fascinating interrelationships are the crosses between the male and the female.

A human person has all the elements of male and female traits. The female and the male are both considered as aggressive, stable and active, she said.

Full Costing — another botched play

This is a year of changes, there is now the USFL, and the Red Sox are again considered to be pennant contenders. There is one constant, no — make that one unconstant that has been maintained in my life for the past four years — you never know what can happen at this university. So after all this time it comes as no surprise to me that the Board of Trustees have endorsed a proposal which would guarantee a large increase in fees for next year.

Chris Ferretti

To any Football fan, punting on first and goal would not only be a major tactical error, it is simply not done in the game of Football. It seems however that the Board has in effect committed such an inopportune turnover. All this was accomplished when the motion to implement the "Full Costing" proposal was passed, rather, fumbled by the Board two months ago.

Full Costing is the title given to a budgetary measure which will ensure that all the university trust funds must be financially accountable for their administrative costs. On theory this seems sensible — as a layman fan I would probably have voted for this proposal too. However, I expected a little more from our Trustees who are seasoned veterans. Pros of this type should not be faked out by what seemed to be a simple answer to a complex problem.

In terms of responsibility they have taken this proposal and they have fumbled on the University's goal line. This proposal will be an improvement over the old measures alright, but only in the areas of redundancy. No where is it stated that this change will result in a gain in efficiency.

In fact, there is absolutely no rationale that even mentions the possibility of efficiency — the thrust of the proposal is to guarantee the accountability of administrative costs. There is no mention of any kind of reform through this measure — realistically we will actually be paying even more for less service. By passing this proposal the Board has demonstrated that it has the potential for exceeding the New Jersey Generals offensive line in terms of vulnerability to the blitz.

Instead of a projected increase of $35, this new measure guarantees at least a minimum increase of $100. Pass rushes, screens and lateral passes are a part of Football, that is how the game is played. When a new budgetary proposal is to be considered however, then that should not be the strategy to be followed. Because in the end it is not the quarterback who gets sacked, it is us, that do.

The figure 2.4 is most quoted. No, not the size of Hershel Walker's contract — but the percentage of the cost of this measure on each trust fund. This is the amount that each trust fund must pay for their accounting, data processing, personnel and fee collection services.

It is hard to find any real justification in this measure, but the implications are obvious. It marks a gradual increase in the responsibility of the students to carry what has been the financial burden of the state. What in the short term means an escalation of our fees, means in the long term a gradual reduction in the obligations of the state to its financial commitment to public higher education. From an extreme point of view our only penalty is that we are a public university, and our defensive line — the Board of Trustees have allowed the opposing team to score at our own goal, and the resulting touchback is now our problem.

This time in an effort to provide financial stability, the University Trustees have decided to punt on the first down, and that I am afraid, is not the way to win ballgames.

Escort service is important

At the core of many vital issues commanding our attention today, lies the basic premise that people care deeply about a subject that influences their lives.

Here at UMass, campus crime is one such issue. If there is a righteous service available that promotes the aversion of violence, that service deserves heralding exposure.

It is my intent to both praise and explain the recently revived campus escort service, not simply because myself and many others have chosen to join, but because the concept behind the service represents a forthright effort towards humanitarianism. In today's turbulent, unsure world, even the smallest step in a philanthropic direction is an instrumental achievement. The finest place to make that step is on a college campus.

Wholeheartedly dedicated to the cause are the program coordinators, Anne-Marie Maynard and Laura O'Shea, who have dilengently applied themselves to the task of planning and organizing the service. According to Ms. O'Shea, "The service was initially put into operation because of violence on campus. Safety in numbers was the original intent. In addition to making people feel safe, it's a nice way to travel back and forth. It's nice to know someone cares about your well-being and it gives you a sense of security."

Beginning Monday the eleventh day of April, an escort may be easily identifiable. They will wear badges clipped to their clothing. The badges will look exactly like an I.D. card with bright yellow stickers applied to them.

Jorge A. Syiek

The escorts travel in pairs, and there are two primary routes. The first leaves Orchard Hill/Central at Webster, on the hour beginning at seven P.M., making a stop at the Tower Library in the vicinity of twenty past the hour, and completing the route around half past the hour at Goodell Library. On the opposite end of campus, another pair of escorts will leave Southwest at J.Q. Adams also at seven P.M., make a stop at the Tower Library at fifteen minutes past the hour, and travel onto Goodell Library, arriving at half past the hour. The escorts then retrace their steps, returning to the point of origin (dorm) to begin the route again. The service continues through twelve midnight Monday through Thursday evenings.

When asked, "What role does the escort play?" Laura O'Shea said, "He or she plays the role of a companion. Someone who cares about other people on campus. Escorts are friendly. They take the responsibility of approaching people in a positive manner. If they see someone hesitating who looks like they might feel a little funny asking, escorts will take the step instead of making people feel intimidated. Escorts are not police, not elders, they hold no rank other than responsible peer.

When asked, How are escorts prepared to be responsible? She said, "We tried to devise a coherent program including human services. We attempted to get workshops pertinent to information an escort should know. For example, the confrontation workshop explains to the escort exactly what procedures he or she follow, what their responsibilities are, and how to carry them out in the event of a given confrontation situation while on their route. The subject of another workshop, basic first aid emergency training, will help them in the future as well as their role as escort. Another example, is the rape awareness workshop, where in case anything happens, the escort is taught emergency techniques and provided emergency phone numbers that will assist them in dealing with the situation."

Students earn two Human Service credits with pass/fail grading from the Education Department upon completion of a semester's commitment. The service is funded by the Chancellor's office.

"Hopefully, the service will grow to be an accepted an integral part of the University," O'Shea said, "I don't think any group directly opposes the escort service. Certain people do not see the need, they don't think there is a problem with people being intimidated by walking alone. They are not representative of the entire University. As long as people appreciate and need the service, we think it's necessary regardless of the numbers."

Feel free to join your escorts while they walk their routes. They are there to support you, but can only do so if you support them.

SSAM one of five questions

To the Editor:

Today, April 12, UMass students should vote to fund the State Student Association of Massachusetts (SSAM). The SSAM funding referendum is #1 of five important questions we must settle in this SGA-sponsored election.

sponsored election.

SSAM is new, but already it's a proven, effective guardian of state students' interests. Last year SSAM and the office of Third World Affairs coordinated the largest one-day voter registration drive in Massachusetts history — 1,400 Amherst voters registered. Statewide, SSAM registered 6,000 students. Without funding, SSAM has had its constitution approved at fourteen state schools, including UMass; run a hugely successful voter registration drive; worked with student organizers, labor representatives, state legislators and community leaders to rally support for financially starved Roxbury Community College; and continues to inform and organize students. SSAM's record more than justifies this request for support, and the need is clear.

Under Dukakis and King, from 1974 to 1982, Massachusetts dropped to 49th place in state higher education funding. Decreased aid was combined with tuition hikes far outpacing inflation. Under Reagan, the Department of Education will be dismembered, and state power over our funding and policies will increase. If the first Dukakis administration's record on education is an indicator, state students have cause for alarm. We must unite to defend ourselves against more funding cuts, tuition hikes, and regressive educational policy-making.

College administrations have staff and funding to press their claims on the legislature; faculty members have a union. We also must have a funding and a network of advocates to defend our interests as students. Funding SSAM will guarantee student input in decisions affecting students. SSAM would have the stability, strength, and resources to ensure our voice is heard. SSAM will propose a three year statewide public education tuition freeze, back legislation to put a student on the Board of Regents, and work with other State Student Associations on national issues.

As with the SGA presidential election, ballot boxes are in dining commons, the Hatch, and the Newman Center. Show your support and act now, vote YES on Question 1.

Chris Sullivan, Speaker of the SGA Senate

Registrants not represented

To the Editor:

I am writing in the interests of students who are subjected to the unfair representation anti-draft registration letters received in this section. A great majority of the male students have registered for the draft and don't like reading about "students who can't get financial aid because they refuse to register." Worse than that, I have read only one letter in favor of the Solomon Amendment. It is the responsibility of the Collegian to consistently print both points of view when selecting letters to be printed (no matter what the topic). You will probably not print this, but you'll also lose your credibility by continuing your current practices.

Bella Lewitsky- dance with a touch of magic

Members of the California-based Bella Lewitsky Dance Company wowed UMass students Friday night.

BELLA LEWITSKY DANCE COMPANY
Friday, April 8
Fine Arts Center

By JULIE PROCOPIOW
Collegian Staff

I left the UMass Fine Arts Center last Friday night in a state of awe. No, I hadn't just seen Bruce Springsteen in concert, nor had I witnessed a performance of the Ringling Brothers and Barnum Bailey Circus. I saw, simply, one of the best magic shows in the world, the Bella Lewitsky Dance Company.

This California based modern dance group treated its audience to a night full of magical dance, and three curtain calls the company received at the conclusion of their performance perfectly expressed everyone's delight.

Artistry in space distinguishes the Bella Lewitsky troupe. They are internationally recognized for their interpretation of contemporary dance, combining rhythmic and acrobatic movement in time and space.

The first piece performed, "Changes and Choices," included the whole cast, as they danced to the music of Larry Attaway. This piece was really quite amusing and served as a successful ice-breaker to those first-time viewers of modern dance.

Accompanied by the abstract synthesizer rhythms of Attaway, the company filled the stage wearing identical, all-white leotards. This piece really got under way in about five minutes, when a funny-looking line, with strings hanging from it like a clothesline, was brought on stage. At this point, the changes began. I couldn't believe what I saw on stage. The dancers were actually changing costume on stage, as the couples took turns running back and forth to the line and yanking garb off the line. The donned gloves, sleeves, leg warmers, bands which covered the chest and even trunks! It was hilarious and innovative, if not a quite interesting idea.

After a brief intermission, the second piece, "Continum", followed. Danced to the music of the classical artist, Igor Stravinsky, "Continuum" was especially interesting. The piece included a prelude, followed by a solo - first, second, and third duet - and a finale. This reminded me of movements motifs that one finds in classical music. I found the classical overtones of the music, along with the movements, a pleasant compliment to the modern style of the dance.

"Spaces Between" followed the final intermission, and was a phenomenal exhibition of the group's excellence. Accompanying the music of Cara Bradbury Marcus, the piece's nine dancers heightened the work's dark imagery by appearing in greenish-navy leotards.

After the cast's commencement, various plexiglass-like boards were lowered from the ceiling. A sense of vast spaciousness dominated the stage, as it was difficult to see how the boards were suspended. At points during the piece, members of the troupe would stand on these boards as they gently swayed.

Interesting images were also created by the dancers. Mirror-like images were produced as dancers walked across the board while members below the board reflected their movement. The resulting illusory effect was magnificent.

As the lights dimmed at the conclusion of the show, I like everyone else in the audience, just sat in amazement. We'd all fallen prey to the hypnotizing magic of the Bella Lewitsky troupe performance. Never have I been so affected by a dance concert, but I hope if won't be the last time...when did you say the Five College Faculty Dance Concert was?

Daniel Albert shares some insights into his profession

By JULIE PROCOPIOW
Collegian Staff

One member of the Bella Lewitsky Dance Company was especially excited to be performing in last Friday night's dance concert. You see, Daniel Albert, who is now a professional dancer with the Lewitsky Company, is also a UMass alumus (Class of 1977).

Albert was in his fifth year at the university as a science major when he decided to take Modern Dance I (under the instruction of Micky Taylor) as an elective. The rest is all history.

After graduation from the university, Albert moved to California to dance with the San Francisco Moving Company for about a year. He then thought he should apply himself more intensely, and so he went to New York on a scholarship to work at the Alvin Alley Dance Center and also with Jennifer Muller. In completing his work at the Center, Albert went back to San Francisco and worked with the San Francisco Opera, before eventually heading to Canada to work with the Dance Makers of Toronto.

Surprisingly enough, Albert quit dancing between the summer of 1980 and the summer of 1981 because it was "too much like an expensive habit." However, he did decide to take a master-class from Bella Lewitsky in San Francisco in April of 1981. He later attended her summer workshop and two weeks later was invited to be an apprentice to the group. Albert is now on a contract with the Company until September of 1984.

"It's a very demanding and disciplined career I've launched myself into, but I love it," Albert said after the show Friday night.

When asked how he felt about performing at UMass, Albert responded, flashing a smile, "It's special to me."

On the dance program here at the university, Albert claims, "I learned a lot at UMass, not only in dance technique but also in (just) thinking about dance."

"There's a professional attitude here," Albert added, "and I feel that (the department) is strong in prepping their dancers for the professional world of dance."

If this is true, maybe the world should be prepping itself for the emergence of other UMass dancers like Daniel Albert. They, too, will undoubtedly contribute to the magic of performance that groups like the Bella Lewitsky Dance Company so beautifully create.

UMass Department of dance alumnus Daniel Albert now performs with the Bella Lewitsky Dance Company.

ELEVEN ALUMNI
April 9 - June 5
University Gallery, FAC

By FRED STEINWAY
Collegian Correspondent

On Saturday April 9, the University Gallery in the Fine Arts Center opened Eleven Alumni, on exhibit of the works of graduates of UMass' MFA program. It is the first alumni exhibit at the University Gallery.

Barbara Haskell, curator at the Whitney Museum of American Art, and Sam Hunter, a professor at Princeton University, selected the eleven finalists from among 228 UMass graduates who submitted slides.

The Gallery filled rapidly on Saturday for what Director Hugh Davies observed was "the largest show opening attendance we've had. We're mobbed," he said.

Prominent in the display are paintings by Northampton resident Scott Prior. Realist in mode, Prior's works do more than reproduce his home's interior detail for detail. Each painting is filled with an ambient sense of light. Prior says "in like God's voice, the way it touches and plays over all things." One of the works includes a portrait of Prior's wife, Manny. I noticed, with a double-take, that she was present at the opening with the artist.

Is he comfortable with the sobriquet "superrealist"? "Realist is enough," smiled Prior, who's work is also on exhibit at the Maxwell Davidson Gallery in Manhattan. Asked to explain the pulling sensation his works produce, Prior explained that his work "intensified reality with more detail. I look very carefully — it's my business," he said with a twinkle in eyes clear and warm as the light in his paintings.

Alumni Al Souza's work included a large encaustic and oil painting and several recently completed paint and Xerox-transfer works. Many of these show very striking juxtapositions. One shows a falling orange figure pierced by a jagged line. Hawley Hussey, BFA candidate present at the opening, commented, "This is an actual sign in France, warning of lightning danger. I know because I've seen it there," she said.

Across the room, Saul Ostrow's stencil and spraypaint installation spread across the wall. This mural features portraits of oppressed peoples. "That piece would probably do even better on its own," said candidate Hussey of Ostrow's mural. "It's very site-specific. Here it has to compete with other works."

Alumni Deborah Coolidge displayed several large pieces in clay and paint. These colorful towers and cuplike shapes rested on the Gallery rug as if they had grown there overnight. They looked like nothing usual or familiar, rather, like thoughts and emotions have shape and color.

Scott Prior's realistic painting, Bedroom Morning.

UMass MFA (82) MaryLou Blakeslee, who is currently teaching art at Hampshire College, showed a special attraction for Coolidge's clay pieces, "probably because it's what I'm interested in working with. They're optomistic, and she's doing things with clay I haven't seen a lot of," said Blakeslee.

In a corner of the room alumni Harvey Goldman's low fire earthenware glowed in the Gallery's effective lighting which was used here to special advantage. The odd, squat shapes were far from utilitarian, although they might have held a single flower. But the artist's intent was more sculptural than functional. Orangutan, an enormous bellybutton-shaped object, showed reddish glaze cracked like mosaic tile around the top, the rest a marled green and white crazed surface.

Kids and adults clambered up and down on Separate Ground by alumni artist Jeffrey Schiff. Later it served as an informal cocktail bar where visitors lounged to chat and observe.

Also in the exhibit were drawings of public gardens by Barbara S. Solomon, paintings and lithographs by Oriole Farb Feshbach, paintings and sculpture by Stevan Jennis, Christine Couture's predella paintings, Elizabeth Strasser Rubin's abstracts with their echoes of swatch and patch, and Carolyn Webb's arcs in sculpture and drawing.

THE UNCLE FLOYD SHOW
ALBUM (MERCURY)
The Uncle Floyd Show
By DAVID CHEVAN
Collegian Staff

Uncle Floyd: outrageously funny, impeccably dressed, and a role model for kiddies everywhere.

Back in 1974 a new kiddie show was aired for the first time on New Jersey television. It had all the important elements of a kiddie show: clown outfits, contests and audience participation, but somehow the show seemed more to resemble a visit to the Twilight Zone than a kiddie show. Finally the TV executives got the bright idea to air the show late at night and thus the Uncle Floyd show was born.

Uncle Floyd, an alias for the inimitable Floyd Vivino, is one of the funniest comedians on the air. His specialty, bad humor, puts most other comedians to shame. What makes him so funny is, to be brutally honest, he is absolutely not funny at all. His jokes fall flat, his skits are horrendous, and anything that is at all funny is dragged out so long it loses its punch. So why is he so funny? I don't know. But the album, his first, is a good example of what makes Floyd work.

Mixed in with all of Floyd's bad humor is a vaudevillian's sense of timing. Had Floyd been around before the advent of television, he'd probably have been the opening act of the vaudeville show and movie at the local theater. His jokes ring of that era, and the songs Floyd performs tend to be old chestnuts like the classic, "Josephina Please No Leana on the Bell," the tale of a girl who rings bells in New York tenements. Like any good showman, Uncle Floyd writes or rewrites material to fit his needs. In the Dull Family skit, the Dull family, the dullest family in all America, sings their rendition of "There's No Business Like Show Business." Not one voice is in synch or in key with any other, perhaps never before in the history of recorded sound has anything this bad been captured on vinyl. It's great.

Floyd's tribute to Bruce Springsteen, "On the Boardwalk," features a voice which sounds incredibly like the "Boss" himself. The harmonica and piano opening are arranged just as Springsteen would set them up. The lyrics are all about a guy taking a girl to the Boardwalk, eating raw clams, Italian sausage sandwiches, jumbo shrimp, frozen custard, salt water taffy, and sno-cones. Following this he takes her on a ride, whereupon something goes wrong: the guy starts blowing his food all over his date. Bruce Springsteen finally telling life as it really is? No, just another of Uncle Floyd's excessive romps in bad taste.

All that UMass babbling: watch out for the worms

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Some random thoughts accumulated over some tall six packs of the cheapest beer that could be found in an area which is quickly becoming devoid of empty cans and bottles.

Some enterprising students found that it is more profitable to wander around the outskirts of Boyden Field on Saturday collecting empties. They were treated with comtempt by a lot of fans who assisted the collection by throwing cans (empty of course) at these garbage collectors.

Gorilla goaltender Gerry Moreau went for a run on Sunday to help take his mind off of the Rutgers loss (14-13). It was raining very hard on Sunday.

But, it wasn't raining on Saturday. Whoever controls the weather around here is obviously a lacrosse fan. The three best days of the semester (unless you like rain, snow and/or cold weather) have been the days of the first three Gorilla games. Regardless of the outcomes (one good, two not so good), the fans got tans or burns or burnt.

Speaking of lacrosse, rumor has it that the Maryland game scheduled for May 8 may be held in Alumni Stadium. We'll have to wait and see.

Why is men's lacrosse the only sport with any sizable drawing power during the spring? People should realize that baseball, women's lacrosse, softball, and tennis all put on pretty good shows, too.

And, for those fans who never really watch anyway, all you have to do is get organized and start your own trend in attendance.

Rumors abound as to whether or not certain men's basketball team members are going to transfer out of the University. These are, of course, unconfirmed rumors and no one is really saying anything concrete but, some hoopsters do have their eyes open in case any desirable opportunities present themselves.

UMass sports information director Howie Davis got to go to the final Four of the NCAA tournament where he mixed both with and for reporters. Apparently, Davis was the official bartender in the press courtesy room, according to a source at his office.

The eventual champion of the tournament was the Wolfpack of North Carolina State in case you didn't know. I know because I owe several people sums of money due to the outcome of the final game (But, I wasn't really gambling, Mom.).

Time to see what the Celtics are really made of as the NBA playoffs approach at a rapid rate. If they do manage to rise up and get it back, Larry Bird will be the hero. He has to be the main force.

Be careful, spring joggers. April showers bring May flowers but, they also litter the streets and sidewalks with worms.

After a comment like that, I'm sure to be banished from the newsroom. Oh well, back to the packy for more killer b's. And I'll take my own empties thank you.

New York City and UMass water polo don't mix that well

Driving to New York City is tough. Driving to New York and then jumping into a pool and playing water polo is even tougher. New York and Queens College was the destination of the University of Massachusetts women's water polo team this weekend and they ended up dropping two tough games.

UMass dropped their first game to host Queens College, 5-2, after driving three and a half hours to the city and getting there half an hour before the meet. The Minutewomen didn't get any warmup time.

Still, UMass wasn't ice cold and Caroline Freitas and Nancy Connolly scored the two UMass goals. Kerry O'Brien also played well.

Injury riddled softball team takes on Westfield

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Like a curse that is just waiting to pounce on you, it patiently waits. Then, all of a sudden, with full fury, it hits you. It is the malady that every coach dreads, the injury bug.

UMass softball coach Elaine Sortino is well aware of this not so welcome pest. Last season, it crippled the softball team. This year, it is at it again. Four key players have been hurt and it is questionable where these players will play in today's 2:30 p.m. doubleheader with Westfield State at NOPE if they can even play at all.

The situation shapes up as follows. UMass started the season with two healthy top-notch catchers. Now they have none (totally healthy). And the number two bat in the lineup and the only pitcher with experience from last year are hurt.

"The rain (it cancelled Saturday's doubleheader with New Hampshire) was frustrating, but we needed the rest. We're hurting in key positions."

All-American catcher Jackie Gaw has been plagued with a sore arm since the day after last week's doubleheader with Rutgers. Against URI, Gaw played DH to rest her arm. Sortino hopes to use her in the outfield tomorrow.

"It handicaps us to use her as a DH. It's too big of a hole to fill offensively and defensively," said Sortino.

Gaw's backup, the equally capable Beth Talbott, woke up Friday morning after the URI game with a swollen knee. Talbott had originally hurt her knee in South Carolina earlier this Spring and catching the doubleheader irritated the knee. It should be OK for Talbott to play today hopes Sortino.

At second base, Missy Oman is missing her second consecutive year due to injury. She hurt her wrist in South Carolina sliding into a base. Sortino had expected her back last week and hopes to use her in at least one game today at second base. Oman, was the number two batter in SC and a top notch bunter.

Pitcher Patty Masury, the only pitcher with any varsity experience this year, is gone for the year with a bad shoulder.

"It was a devastating injury," said Sortino, "because we lost a player who could do a few more things for us (than just pitch)."

This afternoon at 2:30, the Minutewomen, 12-4 face a tough Westfield State squad, that finished 3rd in Division III (in the nation last year and had three All-Americans (Div. III).

With help from the JV, Janet Miller and Krista Stanton, and the reemergence of Mary Ann Lombardi's hitting and the steady play of Allyson Rioux and the rest of the team, UM will attempt to shake the ole injury bug off and get back on the healthy track.

Herder likes his new shirt

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

John Herder's favorite tee-shirt is the one that has the Trinity College emblem right smack dab in the middle of the chest. In fact, he wore it all day on Saturday after he took it from a member of the Trinity College crew team.

When crew teams race against each other they bet shirts, known appropriately as betting tees on the race (except for programs like Amherst College who only bet shirts when they know they can win which is not against UMass). Whichever team comes in first place gets the shirts from their vanquished opponents.

John Herder rows in the varsity eight for the University of Massachusetts crew team which, for the first time in six years, defeated Trinity during the regular season on Saturday in one of the most exciting races the two schools have had in quite some time.

It was a head-to-head battle on the Trinity course from start to finish as neither boat was able to pull ahead until, in the final 30 strokes of the 2000 meter race, the UMass eight was able to outpull Trinity in the sprint enroute to a scant two second victory.

"The varsity's win over Trinity was the most important win for any crew I've put on the water in five years," said a jubulant head coach Dave "Cook" Kumlin, who was a UMass oarsman himself before becoming first the freshman coach and then head mentor.

In the junior varsity race, UMass held a slight lead throughout the race but ran into control problems down the stretch and lost by a slim one second margin, but Kumlin still thinks that they will be a force to be reckoned with in the future.

"The JV 8 is one of the best JV boats we've had in a long time. They should leave just as many crews in their wake as the varsity will," he said.

Strong talk, but the proof was self evident on Sunday when Wesleyan College came to UMass water to face the local oarsmen on the Connecticut River and were sent away winless (and shirtless, too).

"Wesleyan is caught in a rebuilding year," said Kumlin. "Their varsity eight was never really a threat and was buried by 28 seconds. The jayvees had a tougher race but walked away from Wesleyan in the last 1000 meters."

This Saturday, the team will host a very tough Temple University crew which placed second in the nationals last season. John Herder would like to be able to pull out another victory over the water going Owls.

"I like their tee shirts, too," Herder smiled.

Men's track impressive in 4th place finish at BC

By LAURIE FISHER
Collegian Staff

Although, they did not upset the strongest track teams in New England such as Northeastern, Dartmouth and Boston College, who hosted the meet, the University of Massachusetts men's track team came through with some impressive performances and finished fourth, Saturday, in a field of six.

The team finished where they expected to with the leading individuals showing that they are ready to score after a six week competitive lay off and with some freshman indicating they have the depth to perform well against the top teams, coach Ken O'Brien said yesterday.

The seasoned competitors not only scored high, but they all improved their individual performances from last year.

Senior, John Wright won the 110 high hurdle event hands down with a time of 14.2 seconds.

"He was a flight (a hurdle) ahead of everyone else," O'Brien said. Last year, Wright's time was 14.6 showing "significant improvement."

Despite nagging injuries, Steve Hyder took third in the shot put event throwing a distance of 52' 3". It was a good example of his improvement because last year at the first outdoor meet he threw 49' 6".

Runner Brian Osborne followed suit and took a third in the 400 meter event and junior, Rodney LaFlamme, placed fourth in the steeplechase event.

The freshmen refused to be ignored. Ferde Adobe took second in the triple jump with a distance of 44' 10" and Tom Tullie placed fourth in the pole vault event at 13' 6".

The throwers were equally impressive. Freshman Kyler Foster threw the javelin 193' 2" and took second. After coming out of shoulder surgery in September, Al Madonna also placed in the javelin event. A distance of 189' earned him third.

"Both looked exceptionally good for an opening meet, giving us reason to believe this should be a strong event," O'Brien said.

O'Brien is hoping for another sunny, breezy day this Saturday when the mens and womens track department will host over 50 schools in the UMass relays.

NL West: Padres look to take first title

Phil Niekro has the hopes of the Braves riding on his aging arm.

By ELLIOTT KALB
Collegian Staff

Since divisional play infested major league baseball in 1969, the National League West has been the least competitive division. Only two teams have ever won the World Series (the Cincinnati Reds and the Los Angeles Dodgers) from this division, while the Padres and Astros have never seen a World Series game without benefit of a ticket and the Atlanta Braves and San Francisco Giants have to go back over 20 years. This year, things could be different.

SAN DIEGO: In the words of an ancient Bible sportswriter, "And the last shall be first." Or at least competitive. This team has a legitimate Hall-of-Famer in ex-Dodger Steve Garvey; several All-Stars like catcher Terry Kennedy and shortstop Garry Templeton; and a youthful pitching staff headed by Tim Lollar. In this division, it may be enough.

ATLANTA: This really is America's team, sent into orbit via the satellite. Ted Turner may be eccentric, but this ballteam was constructed by solid baseball men and may well sneak off with their second consecutive division title. This is a team without the frontline pitching that San Diego or Los Angeles has, but it counters with the best two-man bullpen in the majors. Gene Garber and Steve Bedrosian will have plenty of opportunity to put out enemy fires.

LOS ANGELES: This is a team struggling to put their finger into a dyke and plug holes. They have several players playing out of position, including Pedro Guererro at third base and Mike Marshall in right field. They are weak in the bullpen, behind the plate, and their manager isn't going to win any games for them. Still, if San Diego is still a year away and Fernando Valenzuela and Jerry Reuss put good years together, they may be capable of pulling it out.

SAN FRANCISCO: Frank Robinson did it with mirrors last year and the Giants will have difficulty maintaining last year's stretch run. They are a second division club with several weaknesses. They lost the heart and soul of their club when Joe Morgan and Reggie Smith left. They need big years from Chili Davis and Jack Clark, hope that a few clubs fall apart, and then maybe they can come away with the West. Not this year.

CINCINNATI: After hating the Reds for so long, I almost hope that the other teams keep stomping on the Reds now that they are down and in a period of decline. Without Sparky, Pete and company, it is hard to believe that this is the same Reds organization. If Latin America turns out the way Reagan is afraid it may, then it would be only appropriate for this team with Latin Americans like Dave Concepcion and Mario Soto to be nicknamed the Reds.

ASTROS: The Astros are merely following the lead of the other contending professional sports teams from Houston: the Oilers and the Rockets. They are a terrible team, with the poorest offense and the most porous defense. That is not the way to win baseball games.

Regents appease Board of Education over admission standards disagreement

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Board of Regents is attempting to make amends with the state Board of Education, which has opposed the Regents' proposed admission standards policy.

Chancellor of Higher Education John B. Duff said yesterday that the Regents will pass "interim" admission standards policy at their May meeting, after which the Regents will hold a joint meeting in June with the Board of Education to discuss the implementation of that policy.

"They (the Board of Education) have suggested a joint meeting before this summer to discuss several issues...(including) admission standards," Duff said.

The interim admission standards policy will be passed in May so it may be implemented by next fall, Duff said. The policy will be re-examined during this time and any changes that are needed will be made then, he said.

Duff said the Regents' plan will include a sliding scale admissions policy that will enable students with high SAT scores but low high-school class rank or low SAT scores with a high class rank to be eligible for college acceptance at the state institutions. Previously the Regents proposed that students achieve a minimum level in both criteria for eligibility.

"The word 'interim' is to stress the Regents' willingness to make changes," James Martin, chairman of the Regents said.

The Regents were asked by the Board of Education to support the earmarking of a certain proportion of local aid for primary and secondary education, however it was tabled until next month.

"Our proposal to increase admission standards is going to cost money," Duff said endorsing the plan.

Commissioner of Education John Lawson has expressed opposition to the Regents admission policy because it would cost school districts to much money to implement.

Duff said, "Education, the kindergarten to twelfth grade, has suffered much more under Proposition 2½ than any other service.

"This Board should see education as a whole, from kindergarten to graduate school. This (secondary schools) is where (college) students eventually come from," he said.

Several of the Regents requested more information on the specifics of the law before they were willing to vote on the endorsement.

"I sense enough reservation among the Regents (to endorsing earmarking local aid for education). However no one should interpret this postponement...as opposition," Martin said.

In other business, Duff announced that the Regents will pass guidelines for the dispersal of $15 million in newly-allocated student aid at the May meeting.

Duff said the additional money will be used to increase the number of students receiving scholarships by 10,000 as well as increasing the amount of money a student can receive.

Also students from families with incomes of between $15,000 and $20,000 will be eligible to receive assistance, Duff said.

SSAM passes while Senate remix stumbles

By JOHN O'CONNELL

University of Massachusetts students overwhelmingly voted to support the State Student Association of Massachusetts (SSAM) in the Student Government Association's (SGA) Referenda elections on Monday and Tuesday.

Students also gave strong support to a plan that would expand University Residence Hall living options and favored continuation of the residential colleges, in the non-binding referenda. Opinion was more closely divided on question two, which asked students if they favor a proposed plan to reorganize the Undergraduate Student Senate and question five, which concerned University funding and sponsorship of academic contacts with South African educational and government institutions.

The unofficial turnout was 2,558 votes out of 17,073 eligible student voters. Elections Coordinator Mindy Ordway said the 13 percent turnout was "pretty good for the second election in a semester," but emphasized that "nothing is binding."

UMass students voted to increase the Student Activities Fee by $1 per semester to fund the UMass chapter's contribution to SSAM. SSAM, a lobby group for student concerns in the state legislature and other policy making groups, will eventually have chapters on all 28 state college and university campuses, State Student Coordinator Michael Ferrigno said.

Students voted to support SSAM by 2,135 for votes to 387 against.

"It's an overwhelming victory," Ferrigno said. "We clearly got a vote of confidence from the students."

A plan which would expand on-campus living options was favored by 65 percent of student voters. Mark Welch, author of the question, said this expresses student desire for the administration to allow the option of co-ed bathrooms in co-ed dormitories which eliminates forcing students to use bathrooms on a floor other than a floor on which they live.

Students voted 1,893 to 339 to continue residentially-based academic programs in the residential colleges. Bruce Levy, assistant to the SGA president, said he wrote the questions in response to administration and faculty proposals which would eliminate the system.

"The residential programs provide direct service to the students and we felt it was important to ask students if they want them to continue," Levy said.

Students voted down the proposal to reorganize the Undergraduate Student Senate by only 52 percent. Forty-eight percent, or 1,109, voted to "reduce the number of senators and elect at large," and 1,319, 52 percent, voted to keep the system where senators are elected by dorm, from the Third World population, and from the Greek and commuter areas.

Speaker of the Senate Chris Sullivan, an opponent of reorganization said, "I don't think that cutting the size of the Senate in any way addresses the problems that the proponents of cutting the senate say exist." He added that the vote is "an indication that people feel the senate is working for them."

Students favored regulation of UMass funding and sponsorship of academic contacts with South Africa by 1,454 votes to 819.

George McKenzie, student senator and Third World Caucus member, initiated the question. He said he hoped that this would be the first step in establishing "a specific policy to deal with academic exchanges with South Africa."

Redenbacher popcorn, Bounty found all wet at science fair

By DAN STOCKFORD
Collegian Correspondent

Popcorn, ice cream and acid rain were among the topics of science projects presented yesterday by more than 100 junior and senior high school students participating in the Western Massachusetts Science Fair held in the Student Union Ballroom.

The contestants entered their projects in five categories, including the behavioral, biological, environmental and physical sciences and engineering.

Twelve-year-old Lonnie Barber's was to evaluate several different brands of popcorn attempting to determine which brand was the best value.

Orville Redenbacher Popcorn lost because it cost 8.3 cents an ounce, while others cost less than a penny an ounce, she said. "Also there were 27 unpopped kernels in an ounce of Redenbacher, and it had the lowest volume of any of them."

Other projects ranged from "The Effects of Thyroxine on the Metamorphosis of the Rana Pipien" to "Getting Your Licks out of Ice Cream."

Mark Lin, 12, of Dalton, concluded from his experiment, titled "Which Paper Towel is the Best?" that Job Squad brand paper towels were best. He said, "Bounty did pretty good, but it costs more than a couple of the others so it lost out." Price Chopper paper towels placed second, he said.

"The Biological and Environmental Effects of Volcanism on Acid Rain Phase II" was the title of the project presented by Kristin Skrabis, 17, of Orange. She said she spent over two years on the heavily-detailed presentation, which included aquariums and terrariums showing fish and plants in environments of differing acidity.

Anthony Strout, 13, also of Dalton, showed an animated film in his presentation entitled "3-D Animation." "I've been interested in animation for a long time," Strout said. "I got the idea from watching Christmas specials like "Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer."

The winners received their awards at a special banquet in the Campus Center. The participants had the opportunity to view slides of their exhibits.

The projects were judged by a large panel of volunteers from government, industry, and education, including many UMass professors.

The top winners in the senior division will go to the state science fair at M.I.T. and Harvard on April 29 and 30, according to Chris Emery, a science teacher at Amherst Regional High School and chairman of the event.

Washington surpasses Epton in the homestretch

CHICAGO (AP) — Rep. Harold Washington, bidding to become the city's first black mayor, pushed into a narrow lead over Republican Bernard Epton on last night after a record turnout in a racially charged election.

Epton, a white millionaire lawyer, hoped to become the city's first Republican chief executive in 52 years, while Democratic Washington bid to become the city's first black mayor.

With 1,847 of 2,194 precincts reported, Washington had 395,331 votes or 50 percent to Epton's 390, 638 or 49 percent. Socialist candidate Ed Warren received 2,338 votes. It was not known which parts of the city were reporting first, so it was unclear how well the early pattern would hold up.

The Chicago Board of Election Commissioners estimated that 88 percent of the 1.6 million voters had cast ballots under sunny skies. That would eclipse a record 77 percent turnout in the Feb. 22 primary in which Washington narrowly captured the Democratic nomination in a three-way race.

A WLS-TV poll of people leaving the voting booth projected shortly after the balloting ended at 7 p.m. that Washington would win with 55 percent.

Another exit poll conducted for WBBM-TV said Washington was leading in early returns and was running stronger than expected in the predominantly white Northwest Side and the liberal North Side lakefront area. However, WBBM did not project a winner.

Washington's own pollsters projected a victory margin of 160,000 votes, according to WBBM.

"We feel good. It looks solid," Washington, 60, said after a deli breakfast in his Hyde Part enighborhood where he votes. "We've been ahead since day one."

Washington planned to campaign through the day, while Epton — who had been a quiet candidate in the final days — headed for the Chicago White Sox home opener against the Baltomore Orioles.

"Hopefully we'll start off with a victory there, and if we're lucky and the Lord is willing we'll has a victory when we end the day," Epton, 61, told reporters at a movie theater where he voted.

As in the primary, assistant US. attorneys and others monitored for possible vote fraud. By late morning, the offices of the U.S. Attorney and the Cook County's state's atttorney reported more than 200 complaints. The elections board reported a quiet election.

Reagan proposes new hotline link to avert nuclear accident

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration proposed yesterday the bolstering of "hot line" communications with the Soviet Union, including a new link between military centers, as a means for averting nuclear war through accident or miscalculation.

"These are very simple things. They would benefit everybody," said Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger at a news conference.

The proposals include upgrading the existing teleprinter "hot line" between U.S. and Soviet leaders to a high-speed system that could relay photos and charts, creation of separate lines between military commands and also between embassies, and provisions for consultation over nuclear terrorist incidents.

The proposals were announced a day before the House is scheduled to vote on a resolution calling for a freeze on nuclear weapons, a measure strongly opposed by President Reagan. One worry of nuclear freeze advocates is the possibilty of accidental nuclear war.

The announcement, effectively making formal ideas aired by Reagan himself months ago, also comes as the Senate nears a showdown vote on Kenneth L. Adelman as the nation's arms control director.

But "No, there's no relation to any other events involved," insisted Weinberger.

Weinberger said he talked over the proposals last Thursday in a meeting with Soviet ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin. Dobrynin was "noncomittal" and promised to transmit the proposals to his government, Weinberger said.

Amendment supporting guns proposed by Quincy legislator

BOSTON — A proposed amendment to the state constitution guaranteeing the right to own guns was defended by a legislator yesterday as a way to prevent state and local bans on handguns.

The bill, filed by Rep. Robert A. Cerasoli, D-Quincy, spells out the right of the "law-abiding citizen" to own and use firearms, including handguns, pistols and rifles, and proponents of handgun bans quickly opposed it.

"We oppose this bill because it makes a mockery of our constitution and because it will decimate almost every existing handgun control provision currently found in our statutes," Steven Masters, director of Citizens for Handgun Control, said in a statement prepared for the hearing before the Legislature's Natural Resources Committee.

Cerasoli said he proposed the constitutional amendment to safeguard gun ownership in the face of the annual onslaught of anti-handgun proposals.

"If we address it in the constitution, we don't have to worry about local ordinances," the legislator, a life member of the National Rifle Association, told the committee.

He added later that his proposal would also promote hunting — as a sport and as a "necesssary method of fostering the propagation, growth, conservation and wise use of our renewable wildlife resources."

A proposed constitutional amendment has to be approved by two successive legislatures before going to voters for ratification.

"I think there is a lot of support for it out there," Cerasoli said in a telephone interview.

Reagan ups deficit forecasts

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration issued a revised budget forecast yesterday that adds $4 billion to the record deficits previously projected for fiscal 1983 and 1984. But it said the red ink in later years will be less than expected.

The White House Office of Management and Budget said the deficit for the current fiscal year is now predicted at $21 billion, up $2.5 billion from the last official estimate made in January. The deficit for 1984 was put at $190 billion, up 1.4 billion.

The budget office said a reduction in the deficits stemming from an improved forecast of economic activity in 1983 was more than offset by other factors, such as lower tax revenues from oil producers because of a decline in petroleum prices and higher spending on Social Security and the jobs program recently enacted into law.

During fiscal years 1985 through 1988, however, the deficits will shrink from the January forecast, by amounts ranging from as little as 3.1 billion in 1986 to as much as $14 billion in 1988, according to the report. The smaller deficits are due entirely to the improved economic forecast for 1983, budget officials said.

Still, the administration, which came into office promising to balance the budget, foresees chronic deficits exceeding $100 billion a year through 1988.

N.Y. rep. predicts MX death

WASHINGTON — The congressman who led the successful fight to deny the Defense Department money to produce the MX missile predicted yesterday that the new nuclear weapon will finally go to its grave this year.

But the MX critic, Rep. Joseph P. Addabbo, D-N.Y., also said he believes the margin of defeat for the missile will be far closer this time than the 245-176 vote last December by which the House deleted the $988 million earmarked for building the first five missiles.

Addabbo, chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee on defense, said part of the reason, besides the simple reluctance of some congressman to kill the MX, is that a presidential advisory commission has linked its development to a proposal to build a small, single-warhead missile that would be more politically popular.

In what was seen as an effort to make the MX program more palatable, the panel recommended Monday that 100 of the 96-ton, 72-foot MX missiles be placed in underground silos now housing Minuteman III weapons in Wyoming and Nebraska, while an arsenal of 1,000 15-ton mobile missiles is developed and produced over the next decade.

Some congressional moderates, including Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, have long supported the concept of the smaller, single-warhead missiles, dubbed "Midgetmen," instead of the MX "Peacekeeper" intercontinental missile, which would carry 10 warheads each.

"We will not win by the majority that we did last December, but we still have enough of those members of the House" who consider the MX a waste of money and will defeat it, Addabbo told reporters.

Correction

Two stories in this past Monday's Collegian dealing with occupational safety hazards for women contained several factual errors. In a story about Women Organized for Occupational Safety and Health (WOOSH), it was incorrectly reported that the newly-formed local chapter had joined with a group based in Boston. The local WOOSH, in fact, has joined with a western Massachusetts group, based in Springfield. In addition, it was reported the organization comprised 11 members. The executive board of WOOSH has 11 members but the total membership totals 34 unions and 30 individuals in western Massachusetts, including 11 individuals from UMass and the surrounding area. The organization formed two years ago, not three months ago, as stated in the article.

In an accompanying story on the effects of Video Display Terminals (VDTs) on pregnant women, Myra Hindus, coordinator of the Working Women's Task Force of the Everywomen's Center, was quoted as saying that a study done at a Canadian Hospital showed VDTs do have an effect on pregnancy. Hindus did not make the statement. The information came from the Radiological Health Bulletin from the National Center for Devices and Radiological Health.

The Collegian regrets the errors and any inconviences they may have caused.

DA's firing action questioned

By ROBIN MANDEL
Collegian Staff

Charges of sexual discrimination against the Hampden County District Attorney have been made by former director of the Consumer Protection Agency in Northampton regarding her recent firing.

Joan Sammel Weston, who was fired by District Attorney W. Michael Ryan last February, said her dismissal was not only a political maneuver but also an attack against women.

"It is no accident that I was fired becuase I am a woman and other women in the agency are not planning to continue working under the district attorney after this incident," she said.

Ryan denied the accusation that he fired Weston on the basis of sexual discrimination.

"Joan Weston is not some champion of the women cause. I have not treated her unfairly and I feel that I have a pretty good record in the hiring of women. If any bias is shown it should be mentioned that is all pro-women," he said.

Ryan said there are at present four women attorneys working under him and that he was elected by the people to make decisions.

"The people wanted a change and that is what they are going to get. I don't mean to belittle the Consumer Agency but I think it is open for improvements. We should be more aggressive and take action against the classes of complaints that are being made. The Consumer Agency should be focused more on civil rights and housing laws, and therefore needs to be headed by someone who is more familiar with these issues," Ryan said.

Director of the University of Massachusetts Off-Campus Housing, Joanne Levenson said Ryan's firing of Weston is "outrageous."

"Joan Weston started the Consumer Agency and has lasted through the changes of offices. She has done incredible work to defend the basic rights of consumer individuals. The district attorney just doesn't understand what makes this office work the way it is," Levenson said.

She said if Ryan's aim was to make the office accessible to greater issues, he is not doing so by firing Joan Weston.

"The district attorney claimed that his immediate aid was to improve this director's position. But in my opinion, he is not doing that. He is in effect downgrading that aspect of the office which he spoke so highly about," Weston said.

After bringing her case to her lawyers, Ryan agreed to allow Weston to continue to work until May 1 and to receive a salary until June.

Warrants request shelter funds

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

Among five articles for consideration during the May 2 Town Meeting, presented to Amherst Selectmen by petitioners last night, were two which arose due to the closing of Amherst's Prospect House on March 31.

The first, warrent article number 39, was filed by Rev. Donna Schaper of Amherst for the new Hampshire County Emergency Shelter, which opened March 31 in Northampton.

The article called for the town to vote to appropriate $1,197 as the Town's share of "local-match" funding for the shelter, known as "Jesse's House."

The figure represents Amherst's share of a 25 percent county-wide match of federal funding for the shelter, Schaper said.

The second article, number 38, also filed by Schaper for the shelter, asked the Town to vote to appropriate $5,000 to fund a revolving loan account to be used for security deposits for low-income Amherst residents.

"The cause of much of the homelessness in the area is a lack of a down payment on housing," Schaper said. "By establishing this fund, we can hope to stop homelessness before it starts."

This pool will be available only to the homeless in Amherst, she said. At present, there are planning problems that need to be "ironed out," she said. "There is a need to do this but a need to do it right," she said, "I assume we will keep trying (to solve the problems) until the Town Meeting."

The plan will also serve as an initiative for other communities serviced by the shelter to work towards establishing a county-wide fund, said Betsy Loughran, who is assisting Schaper with the plan.

Ron Plant, regional director of the state Office for Children, expressed a need for such a fund. "It's important to establish a strong relationship between realtors and a social service such as a shelter," he said.

Duffey says colleges to stay despite Long Range Plan

By BILL WALL
Collegian Staff

Although the academic affairs section of the Long-Range Plan has called for the "phasing out" of the current residential college programs, that proposal has come under attack for not considering the recent changes made within the programs.

"The Faculty Senate issued a report in the summer of 1981 on the location of special programs such as the Inquiry Program, the University Without Walls (UWW) and the residential colleges. In the fall of 1981, the two colleges (Southwest and Orchard Hill/Central), the Inquiry Program and UWW were administratively merged with the School of Education," said Prof. Robert Wellman, who has worked extensively with the reorganization.

"The merger and what has been done within the School (of Education) and programs in merging has been ignored. The plan has not taken into account what have occured to and within the Residential Colleges in the last two years," Wellman said.

The Academic Prioritites Committee of the Faculty Senate has been instructed to look at the Residential Colleges as they presently exist and then report their findings to the Faculty Senate and subsequently Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, according to the chairman of the committee, Prof. Harold VanderZwaag of the sport studies department.

"We received reports from the various people involved in the Residential College programs. We are inviting representatives from the School of Education (to discuss the programs) because the colleges have been under their jurisdiction since last fall. It is our responsibility to make a recommendation to the Faculty Senate regarding the future of the Residential College," VanderZwaag said.

Duffey said the plan was a first draft and therefore was subject to change. The academic affairs section, including the proposal to eliminate the colleges, was prepared by outgoing Provost Loren Baritz and was widely circulated on campus before Duffey's arrival.

Duffey said he has been cautious in reserving the right to change the parts of the plan, pending review by the University.

Wellman said that he disagreed with the phasing out of the residential colleges but agreed with the plan's statement that residential education was sound.

"Far from eliminating, we are attempting to expand the programming and services. What we are committed to is expanding the residential program to the whole campus. We have not moved in any way to phase them out but rather we've redirected resources to create programs campus-wide," Wellman said.

The Northeast/Sylvan residential areas are currently without an educational college.

1984 may ring in new service

By DIANNE KELLEY
Collegian Correspondent

In response to student complaints, University of Massachusetts Housing Services will conduct a survey this fall to determine what students need from the on-campus telephone service.

The survey is being conducted because "students' needs aren't being met," said Kathleen O'Dowd, a housing services accountant.

"The survey will concentrate on options students feel they need," she said.

Currently under the Centrex system, the $25 resident phone fee covers monthly phone rentals, new lines and equipment and services rendered by a part-time employee who works jointly with University Housing and New England Telephone. During the semester the only additional charges are for long-distance calls.

O'Dowd said the basic residential phone service does not enable students to obtain a second phone for computer lines or "money saving" services, such as Baystate, which offers two hours of toll-free calling within the state.

In the upcoming month, the University will be working on the technical and financial problems involved in changing the contract between the phone company and UMass to include these advantages.

Jack Briggs, public relations manager for New England Telephone in western Mass said "UMass and its students is the largest single customer in the western part of the state."

He said, "Baystate service may be a thing of the past. Bell System is being broken up to encourage competition in long-distance business", but that an alternative option may be developed.

Democratic support of abortion raises debate in Western Mass.

By MARY BALDWIN
Collegian Staff

An amendment to the Massachusetts State Democratic platform supporting reproductive rights adopted by a large margin of delegates at last weekend's Democratic Issues Convention in Springfield, has fueled mixed reaction in Western Massachusetts.

The amendment supports abortion and both a man's and woman's right to reproductive health. It pledges to work for programs to improve the health and safety of pregnant women, family planning, counseling and services with special care to the disadvantaged and underprivileged.

The amendment recognizes the religious and ethical concerns which many Americans hold concerning abortion.

Regarding the wording of the amendment, Mark Zuchowski, a member of Massachusetts Citizens for Life, said "It's equal to saying, 'I realize all the ethical and religious considerations when looking at the nuclear arms race' but still supporting it. We will never be happy with a statement that perpetuates abortion as it is now."

Before this amendment, there was nothing in the women's right's section of the charter regarding abortion," said Florence Frank, chairperson of the Amherst Town Democratic Committee and former commissioner on the Governor's Status on Women Council before it was dissolved by the King administration.

"It was a real thrill on Saturday to get it passed," Frank said.

This is the first year the reproductive rights amendment which supports the 1973 Roe vs. Wade Supreme Court decision on abortion rights came up at an issues convention.

"This is saying that the platform of the state Democratic Party will prohibit the anti-abortion referendum. We are hoping we can get the Legislature not to pass it," Frank said.

"This is not binding and it is not law but it's saying where the Democratic Party is going now, she said.

Timothy Ryan, delegate to the issues convention and pro-life supporter said the amendment is meaningless.

"It's only a platform. Platforms have been ignored before and they will be ignored again. State Sen. Martin Reilly, D-Springfield, is against the amendment," Ryan said.

"He won't support the pro-choice amendment," he said.

Ryan said there is no set plan to counteract the amendment.

"The Democrats under Dukakis were in control that day. It's just one minor battle," he said.

Donald Ross, former member of The Progressive Caucus advocating the amendment's passage said, "An issue was voted down that would have made candidates stand for the platform.

"If they didn't abide by the platform, they would have to say why. It had a simple majority but not enough to amend the charter," Ross said. In the future, candidates will have to support the platform or else say why they are not, he said.

"If you want the child, the child is human. If you don't want the child, it goes out of consciousness," said Lucien Miller, editor for "Reflection, a healing dialogue for women and men who experience abortions" and a professor at the University of Massachusetts.

"Reproductive rights and political action are the in thing but people don't look at the pain and suffering, he said.

"I interview people who have abortions. It's not recognized what is going on. All the suffering by women and men and unborn children," he said.

YOUR LAST 2 YEARS OF COLLEGE COULD BE YOUR FIRST 2 YEARS OF MANAGEMENT.

The Army ROTC 2-year program trains you to become an officer for a modern organization—today's Army, which also includes the Army Reserve and Army National Guard.

An officer who is not only a leader of men, but a manager of money and materials as well.

That's why one of the things you'll learn in our 2-year program is management training skills.

Your training will start, the summer after your sophomore year, at a six-week Army ROTC Basic Camp.

You'll earn over $400 for attending Basic Camp. And up to $1,000 for each of your last 2 years of Army ROTC.

But the biggest reward comes on graduation day. That's when you receive both a degree in your chosen major and a commission. And join the Army management team.

"You're Hired!"

If you're like most graduating students, these are the two words you want to hear most. But today the job search is tougher than ever. Fewer jobs, more applicants. You know it. We know it.

We also know you're skeptical of people selling answers by mail. So we won't guarantee that our book, "How to Land the Job You Want," will send a flood of job offers your way. We will, however, guarantee that if you dedicate yourself to its precepts, you'll maximize your chances of someone telling you, "You're hired."

"How to Land the Job You Want" provides practical guidelines for all phases of the job search—not theoretical job-hunting rhetoric. It will help you identify career alternatives that make the most sense for you. Write an effective resume. Get, prepare for and handle interviews. And decide between job offers.

What makes our book special? It was developed by the very people you want to hire you: executives at major U.S. corporations. We've used the principles outlined in "How to Land the Job You Want" to advance our own careers. We've successfully coached others to advance theirs. And we've interviewed applicants who have followed them...as well as those who haven't. "You're hired" is what we've said to those who have.

Get the edge on your competition. Send for your copy of "How to Land the Job You Want." Do it today. The book is only $9.95. The results could be worth a whole lot more.

Pre-menstrual syndrome deserves serious thought

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

Better health care is one of the most important steps women can take to alleviate the problems associated with pre-menstrual syndrome, said a gynecologist last night to a group of fifteen women at the Bangs Community Center.

Pre-menstrual syndrome (PMS) occurs in many women about seven days preceeding a woman's menstruation. Why it affects some women and not others is not yet clear, Ellen Kaufman said.

"We don't know how to stop it; but if women take responsibility for themselves, then there are a lot of things we can do about our lifestyles to help control PMS," she said.

There is no documented proof that PMS exists, but from "five percent to 95 percent of women complain about some changes before their period," she said.

Many women who do experience PMS are in their early reproductive years, from 20 to 30, she said.

There is no concensus in the medical field as to what causes PMS, but most researchers theorize there is "some type of estrogen and progestrone (female hormones) imbalance," she said.

While many physicians disagree on several theories about PMS, most agree "that there is a tremendous interplay between emotional and biological factors," she said.

Joyce Clement, a nurse practitioner, said whether or not PMS exists is not as important as the fact the symptoms do.

"There is nothing more detrimental for a patient to be told their symptoms aren't valid," she said.

As a nurse practitioner, Clement says she has difficulty getting physicians to seriously look at the problem of PMS, because "unless it is scientifically proven" doctors will ignore the problem.

Of the women who go to see Clement and claim to be suffering from PMS, most of them say depression and irritability are the two most common symptoms occurring.

Many women also claim to suffer fatigue, bloating, acne, bowel changes and inability to concentrate, she said.

There have been cases of women committing murder or suicide and after it is found they suffered from PMS, Kaufman said.

"But there is a difference between making PMS a legitimate health concern versus a legal defense," said Kim Kendall, a University of Massachusetts graduate student.

It is important that people start "taking the syndrome seriously, but not too seriously," she said.

Campus Center crepe cooking out of pan and into fire

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

The controversy between the Campus Center administration and Mary Kate Small over her efforts to set up a crepe stand in the Campus Center continues as Small said she plans to again set up her operation.

She has gone through all the proper channels to sell her crepes and the only thing stopping her is the Campus Center administration, she claims, which is "afriad of setting a precedent" and "holds a monopoly over all interests in the Campus Center."

Last November George Reed, environmental health and safety specialist, granted Small a permit to sell crepes in the Campus Center. Following that, John Furbish, then vendor certification coordinator on the Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) certified her as a vendor and issued her a vendor identification card.

However, she still had to have a third form, an approved Campus Center Food Waiver, as are all groups outside Food Services required to have to sell or cater prepared hot food in the Campus Center.

Although George Reed did sign her waiver form on Nov. 29, 1982, neither the Campus Center director nor the Food Services manager signed the document, and this is what has prevented her from selling.

Bernard Wilkes, assistant director of the Campus Center, acknowledged that the Environmental Health and Safety specialist had approved Small's operation but said that Reed had "reservations" about her operating in the Campus Center.

"The health specialist identified potential risks and said the Campus Center is not the place and we agree," he said.

"I received Environmental Health's permission and although they have reservations I feel those reservations can be eliminated by obtaining a proper food cart which I have discussed with George Reed," Small said.

"Reed suggested the meeting and there is a need for it. I am willing to buy all necessary equipment that would meet regulations and I am willing to take all health risks upon myself, she said.

"It would be the same thing as the hot dog stand and they do allow that," she said.

Contrary to what Director Harris believes, Small said she does have student support on the issue and is now in the process of getting signatures for a petition.

"Students love my crepes and I would like to sell them. If the Campus Center administration is liable for bake sale brownie why can't they take on the libability for crepes, she said.

"The administration is afraid of setting a precedent on this issue and they are hiding behind the Environmental and Health reservations which I can work out."

Bad tires and rain cause accident

Amherst police said yesterday a 19-year-old man, after losing control of his car on wet pavement Monday morning, drove over a curb on East College Street, hitting shrubs and striking a parked car near Converse Hall at Amherst College.

The 1970 Chevrolet, driven by the man, caused extensive damage to a 1981 Oldsmobile, police said. The driver was charged with operating with defective equipment, bald tires, police said.

Police said they responded to a report from a female resident of Sunset Ave. at 4 a.m. Tuesday of a man committing indecent acts near her home.

Also, police reported that a man left a gas station on North Pleasant Street at 6:10 p.m. Monday without paying for his gas.

A Unive sity of Massachusetts student remains in the hospital in fair condition after suffering a fall from a second story porch over the weekend.

Amherst Police said the man, whose home address is listed as Lexington, sustained a skull fracture when a flagpole which he was shaking detached from the wooden railing to which it was attached, causing Walsh to fall approximately 15 feet, headfirst to a concrete sidewalk.

Police said that they were called to the Phi Sigma Kappa house at 6:30 p.m. on Saturday evening and immediatly called an ambulance which transported Walsh to Cooley Dickenson Hospital where he was admitted to the Intensive Care Unit.

A hospital spokesman confirmed that Walsh sustained a fractured skull and will be in ICU for an undetermined period of time.

Verheyden-Hilliard was returning home at 9:15 p.m. Monday when he saw a green blur move toward the train.

"I had no idea she was jumping in front of the train," he is reported saying. "I thought someone was just trying to get on real fast."

When he realized what had happened, Verheyden-Hilliard jumped the six feet from the platform to the tracks yelling, "'I'm a medic.'"

He found the woman, who was not identified, pinned under the third car of the train.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

An open letter to David Knapp

(Editor's note — the following is an open letter to UMass President David Knapp from the so-called Amherst 11. The eleven co-authors refused to join the Massachusetts Society of Professors and pay the $235 agency fee which goes along with such membership. Four of the professors were subsequently suspended for one week. The below document was dated April 4, 1983.

We are writing to you filled with shame for our University, with anguish over the failure of collegial traditions and with despair for the academic community as a whole. By your recent actions, we believe you have chosen to abrogate the concept of tenure and thereby severely shaken the foundations of academic freedom at the University of Massachusetts. We have selected an open letter because you have not responded to our attempts to communicate with you and because our fellow faculty and students deserve to be informed of your actions, of our response, and our reasons.

The Amherst Eleven

On March 10, 1983, you had a letter hand delivered to the homes of 11 Amherst campus faculty. In that letter, we were informed — without prior warning, consultation, or hearing — that we were to be suspended without pay during the week of March 20 for failure either to pay an agency fee to the faculty/librarian labor union or to communicate to you our reasons for not so doing. Not only is suspension of faculty not a legal course of action, but the lack of any academic hearing on the grounds for such action makes it truly reprehensible. The garnishment of salary for work already performed (the week of March 20 was a non-teaching week) and the apparent lack of knowledge of the voluminous correspondence involved makes us question the care with which such a letter was drafted.

The issues at stake, however, are far more important. It has little to do with the amount of the fee. In fact, four of the Amherst Eleven have chosen to accept suspension — incurring a far greater financial loss — rather than compromise their principles. All of the others have spent an inordinate amount of time defending those principles rather than gain surcease by paying.

Those principles, President Knapp, are central to the existence of any major institution — specifically, both tenure and academic freedom. By your actions, you have eliminated both. We and our colleagues are being harassed for our belief that a union does not belong on the campus of a major, high quality university.

We were granted tenure for demonstrating excellence in research, teaching, and service. To make our continued employment contingent on the payment of a fee makes a mockery of the original award of tenure. Should future contracts require particular political or religious affiliations, would we also be punished for failure to comply? It is this threat of coercion which has so seriously eroded our belief in academic freedom.

It does no good to draw a distinction between suspension and termination. Not only is the punitive intent of either action the same, but a suspension without hearing is a more severe punishment. To claim that it is the law ignores the fact that you did not have a sign a contract with such a clause or to enforce the union's demands so willingly or brutally. Were we uncharitable, we might suspect that you chose suspensions so that the stigma of firing tenured faculty would not taint your career.

Did you take this action on your own? Why didn't the various Chancellors and Deans comment loudly about your action?

As faculty members, we are depressed by the fact that your action forces some of us to lose a considerable sum of money. Others have been forced to join in litigation about the size of the agency fee and not about its existence.

Many of our fellow faculty have told us that they support our position. They would take similar action but are terrified of similar suspensions. Thus, your action has effectively blocked other faculty from the expression of their beliefs.

President Knapp, we feel your actions have brought shame on our University and on academia itself. You may have forced some of the Amherst Eleven to actions against their beliefs but in so doing, you have lost a more important war. UMass is the first major University to abandon completely tenure and aspects of academic freedom. By your actions, you have hurt this University seriously. We are truly ashamed.

The "Amherst 11" are eleven university professors serving in various departments at UMass.

Dracula takes a bite from Coffee Shop

Who are these dark and fanged Draculas in the Department to Change Things Around? Once again this Department rears its ugly head with plots slithering underfoot to close the Coffee Shop and replace it with yet another mercantile. Such magnificent thinking! After all, there's the Campus Center Store and the Mini Store; why not uproot the already half-displaced students and commuters and construct a Midi Store?

Used to be, the Coffee Shop was a haven for older students, quieter than the Hatch, and possessing a certain intimacy that can't be found anywhere else on campus. A poster on the Student Union stairwell says, "Don't let them take our Coffee Shop away." Well, they have already taken it half out of usefulness. What kind of coffee shop would close at three in the afternoon? Students don't all go home at three. Those who stay must retreat to the noise and fluorescent glare of the Hatch, where one can't even listen to a song (from a limited selection, no less) without its being interrupted by calls of a pizza or spaghetti nature.

Steve Masse

The Coffee Shop should not have shut down evening hours simply to justify the cost of unnecessary Hatch renovations. Food Service seems to have slipped away from its concentration on food and service, and fallen into the scramble for the profit margin, at the expense of the staff and the consumer. If profit is so desirable, then why not allow the poorer student to choose from more than a cup of coffee, a bagel, or fries? Why can't I get a side order of spaghetti at a low cost, or a slice or two of pizza? Why can't I self-serve a cup of water or tea in the Hatch without asking the busy workers?

Isn't there enough opportunity in one building complex to squander what limited funds the students have? There's the University Store, which is not in a bad location, and a Mini Store which in spite of a so-called boycott to protest unnecessary renovation expenditures, is saturated with snack and nicknack buffs. Adding on another store in the direct path of students is reminiscent of Malden's incredible City Hall, which was built right in the middle of route 60, so that the street had to be re-routed to accommodate the new monstrosity. Perhaps students are seen to be as befuddled as Maldenites, who needed to have something dropped right into their path in order to realize it's there. After all, if students pass the first store on their way to eat or blow their last quarter on a video thievery, perhaps Dracula might get them to spend that quarter instead at the Midi Store on a post card or Smurf eraser.

What more can I say? Perhaps I'm being selfish, in that I am (was?) a Coffee Shop afficionado. But I think I speak for a lot of quietly dissatisfied students and community members. The Hatch has its own attractiveness, but it is not the Coffee Shop. Each eatery should be open equal hours.

Calling for a boycott would obviously be in vain, as we can see from the apparent success of the Mini Store. If students were really "active" in decisions that affect their lives (another embarrassing media falsehood), then all this confab about closing the Coffee Shop would never have come about. The Mini Store would not have made enough profit to justify Dracula's lust after the Coffee Shop's arteries.

The sad part of it all is that money you spend in the Campus Center Complex could be used with disregard, and not appreciation, for your continued patronage. Should your sparse funds be channeled toward the aggrandizement of the Department to Change Things Around?

Let's hope that the Coffee Shop isn't closed down and replaced with a foundering mercantile before Dracula realizes there's only so much money students can spend. Food comes first. And think of this: Will we get the Coffee Shop back if the Midi Store fails? Highly unlikely.

So before the Coffee Shop is yanked from under our feet, let's remember our fellow students, as well as future students. Will we be responsible for bequeathing three glorified souvenir shops, when two were more than sufficient? Or will we insist that the perfectly serviceable, intimate and unique Coffee Shop stay right where it is. If there's that much money to squander on renovations, then perhaps it should be channeled into dropping the price on food so even more people will patronize the Coffee Shop and make it worthwhile to keep it open longer hours.

Arts review narrow minded

To the Editor:

RE: Richard Nangle's review of a slamdance and punk show at the Pulaski Club.: No offense, Richard, but this was one of the most infantile, self-serving, simplistic reviews I've ever read, even in the Collegian. You sound like "Babar Goes Slamdancing" or "Dr. Seuss Gets a Mohawk."

Even a 'hardcore punk' groupie like yourself must realize that your "evil-looking" hero Simon gets attention because he's a bit of an exhibitionist. Not that he doesn't have a right to be the way he wishes, but your calling anyone who reacts to his affectations "narrowminds who can't deal with people who don't wear alligator shirts or monogrammed sweaters" is just a bloody half-grown parody. I suppose you think you're hip and revolutionary or something — your division of the world into Mohawks or Preppies might suit your own childish worldview but it's only narrow minded, and has little to do with reality.

Dig it Richie — you're not writing for "Tiger Beat" or "Teen", so spare us your pathetic pretensions.

Growing racial tension at U Mass discussed by Duffey.

By JIM FINKLE
Collegian Staff

After meeting with adminstrators yesterday to discuss rising racial tensions at the University of Massachusetts, Chancellor Joseph Duffey assigned three working groups tasks to alleviate those tensions.

"This (UMass) is a place that is crowded," Duffey said. "Pressures are very intense. I don't think this campus will be an isolated island of purity."

Administrators at the meeting said they were troubled by racial incidents ranging from offensive graffiti in dormitories to death threats and physical assaults.

They said minority students often do not report incidents of racial harrassment because they do not believe the judicial system will punish offenders.

"They have lost some confidence that those (judicial) systems might be working fairly for them," Duffey said.

However, some adminstrators said the system cannot work fairly because the University has not established policies for handling racial harrassment.

"We need the same kind of sophisticated tool the sexual harrassment (policy) now has," Jean Guiou-Curtis, a head of residence in the Southwest Residential Area, said. "You need clarity, backup and support (from the University administration)."

"We need teeth. We can (stop racial harrassment) if we have teeth and people who care."

Duffey said he became aware of the serious racial tensions on campus at a recent reception when a professor made jokes insulting blacks, Poles and Jews. He said he did not know how to appropriately react to the comments.

"I frowned," Duffey said. "I made some remark. Everybody became strangely quiet."

Reflecting on that experience, Duffey said, "My hope is that the word will get out that we will simply not tolerate harrassment of this kind."

To improve the situation Duffey asked Louis Fischer, associate to the chancellor, to work to clarify existing racial harrassment procedures, "just as we have done with sexual harrassment."

Duffey also asked professor Vincent Detheir to continue his work as chairman of the Chancellor's Commission on Civility. Thelma Griffith-Johnson, the University's affirmative action director, will develop specific proposals for corrective action and training of personnel. Human Relation Coordinator Judy Davis will work on the racial harrassment policy with Fischer, Duffey said.

The administrators will meet again in approximately three weeks to discuss progress of their plans as well as further plans, Duffey said.

Popular musical group Spyro Gyra and the Ellis Hall Group will perform at Mt. Holyoke's Chapin Auditorium Saturday night at 8 p.m.

Spyro Gyra in S. Hadley

By GUS MARTINS
Collegian Staff

The Association of Pan African Unity and the Campus Program Council of Mount Holyoke College will present the musical groups Spyro Gyra and the Ellis Hall Group this Saturday April 16, at 8:00 p.m. in Chapin Auditorium.

Over the past few years Spyro Gyra has catapulted into America's mainstream music fusing the less understood elements of traditional jazz with pop, rock, soul and latin blends.

Jazz, having vitally tended to affect much of what we hear in today's instrumental music serves as the basis of their writing, but the band relies more on popular trendy melodies rather than some of the technical complexities that makes jazz difficult for the average listener to enjoy.

Hailing from the Buffalo New York area, the band's first notable exposure came after the release of their debut album entitled "Spyro Gyra" in 1978. Since then the band has gone on to record five more albums, each picking up where the last left off, with no noticeable departures and no disappointments.

Their 1981 release "Freetime", continued to guide the band into the commercial arena in which they have become a fixture. The album's seven songs range from ballads to blues, and contains some very acute technical mixing.

Spyro Gyra's latest effort, "Incognito", is an interesting sign of the band's maturity. If there is one criticism of Spyro Gyra, then perhaps it could be their inability to produce anything new. While it is true that all their music has received critical acclaim, the band's sound has remained predictable.

Incognito's use of some of the most popular east coast studio musician's adds a special flair to the album. The most immediate example is the funky all-encompassing sound of electric bassist Marcus Miller. Miller's list of credits are so long it leads one to wonder if this young man ever sleeps.

John Tropea is added on guitar, as well as Hiram Bullock, the guitar man that screams on his axe nightly on the Dave Letterman Show.

This album, except for the lead cut entitled "Last Exit", may take more than one listen, but if given time it will get better each and every time it is played. It has some very good stuff on it and is suffused with a strong Latin influence.

Group leader and saxophonist Jay Beckenstein said of one of his compositions on the album, "Old San Juan", "is the latest of a line of Latin tunes which I've written. I wanted to convey a grandness, like a procession deep into a rain forest, and I'm happy with the way it evolved."

The warm-up band, the Ellis Hall Group was during the late 70s perhaps the best funk-jazz-soul fusion band in Boston. Then they disbanded and Ellis Hall left to pursue his own career in the music world.

Ellis Hall is an extremely talented and multi-faceted musician. In addition to playing his usual keyboards, he plays bass, guitar, drums and has a powerful singing voice. The fact that Hall is blind is as much a liability as having two first-round draft choices in the upcoming Pro football draft.

The women at Mount Holyoke have put together a hot one this Saturday evening, a show that you'll be sorry you missed. Get your tickets now and spend some "Freetime" with Spyro Gyra and the Ellis Hall Group.

Tickets are $6 with Mount Holyoke stickered I.D. $8 general admission and are available at Faces in Amherst and Country Comfort in Northampton. For additional info call 538-2178.

Officer states view

By BARRON ROLAND
Special to Black Affairs

Yesterday, while the people of Chicago were busy voting for the mayoral candidate of their choice, Nelson Acosta, a Recruitment Coordinator for the Bilingual Collegiate Program shared his views surrounding the election.

"For fifty years Chicago has had democratic mayors in office. This year Chicago is encountering more of a racial issue as opposed to a political issue. Washington vs. a white political machine. In the past, the black community, which is forty percent of the city's population, has supported the democratic party.

Washington is opposed to a white political machine. Of course, there is opposition from the democratic party, in Washington's running. The community at large is not ready for a change in the status quo.

The democratic political machine is most prejudice at this time and not ready to deal with a change toward a black mayor. With 20 percent support from the white democratic electoral, plus the black vote — Washington will be the first black mayor of Chicago.

Alberti's Buried Child forces you to think.

BURIED CHILD By Sam Shepard
Directed by Joe Alberti
April 6 - 10
Hampden Theater

By PAM MADNICK
Collegian Staff

Joe Alberti's production of Sam Shepard's Pulitzer Prize winning play Buried Child drew mixed reactions from audiences when it opened this weekend. For people who had never heard of Sam Shepard, never seen the script or read about the play, there was too much information. I got the impression that many of the people who saw this show went to be entertained. Shepard, however, is anything but entertaining. He is challenging, and forces the audience to think about why people behave the way they do. He is a puzzling playwright and maybe this is the reason so many people were confused by the performance.

Buried Child, set on an Illinois homestead, is the story of a grandson (Christopher Graham) who returns home with his girlfriend (Katherine Scott), to see his grandparents, expecting everything to be the same as it was six years ago. But when Vince comes home, no one recognizes him. No one recognizes anyone.

After Vince left home six years ago, Halie, his grandmother (Elsa McCann) gave birth to a baby boy, a product of incest between Halie and her son Tilton (Alan Arenius). Dodge, Halie's husband (Barry Langdon) is asked to pose as the baby's father. In frustration, he murders the baby and buries it in the backyard.

Arenius and Alberti were superb in their roles. Everything Arenius did was consistent with his character. His posture, movement, and speech won the audience's sympathy and concern for this deranged young man. Alberti was just as direct in disturbing other characters and keeping the secret.

I question how Alberti was able to act and direct objectively, however his decision to cast Arenius and Graham was genius. The two are fine actors and have similar facial expressions, and bone structures, and to have them appear as father and son made complete sense. It added to the realism.

Vince (Christopher Graham) confronts his girlfriend Sheley (Catherine Scott) in Joe Alberti's production of Buried Child.

Graham appeared as a persistent, confused young adult looking for his roots. He was easy to identify with. His posture, slightly hunched like his father's sunglasses and directness made him easy to like.

Katherine Scott and Peter Morin, who played Father Dewis were funny to watch. Neither of the characters were related to the family, yet had the patience to wait around. Father Dewis, who is having an affair with Halie, is a weakling in the worse sense. He keeps saying he doesn't know what his position was in these family matters and kept quiet. Sheley wasn't so weak, she walked out after Vince inherited the house.

The only character that was miscast was Halie, played by Elsa McCann. She was too young to sound or look like a 60-year old; even with grey hair, her face had very young features. Dodge, played by Barry Langdon, came off as a smart-assed old man, who was tired of life.

R-Complex brings out the reptiles at SUB

R-COMPLEX
Saturday, April 9
Student Union Ballroom

By FRED STEINWAY
Collegian Correspondent

"The only band that will take their clothes off onstage," said the lead guitarist of R-Complex. I was backstage at the Student Union Ballroom just before R-Complex came on stage Saturday night. "And we have, too," he added. "We also have T-shirts."

R-Complex features Ernoid F. Quebec (a.k.a. Harry Truman) on guitar and vocals, M-do-click on bass, Boy Wonder on lead guitar, and Nestle Selassie on drums. The group has recorded demos at the multitrack studio in Northampton this last year, and will release a casette and video this June.

"The name 'R Complex' comes from Carl Sagan," explained Boy Wonder. "It's that reptilian part of the brain that governs heartbeat and body temperature. That's what we plan to do tonight, raise your heartbeat and body heat," he said.

The dance marked the opening of the Eleven Alumni show at the University Gallery in the FAC. The UMass Graduate Arts Students Association (GASA) co-sponsored the dance in conjunction with the Gallery.

The Graduate Arts Students Association started just last fall. Felice Caivano, GASA president, created the postage-stamp tickets to the dance on sale at the Gallery, which opened earlier that day.

"We're here to voice the opinions and needs of the Graduate Arts students and to develop new programs," said Caivano of GASA. "We've applied for a grant to sponsor a visiting artists lecture series. On April 1, we started a free film program showing Fridays in Herter Gallery. In February we sponsored a bus trip to the Philadelphia meeting of College Art Association, a contact group for graduates seeking art teaching jobs," said Caivano.

The opening act, Square 1 began to set up in the ballroom. The band is composed of several members of R-Complex — Boy Wonder, Matt Cullen ("The guy who bought UMass," according to Wonder) — and Aurin Taylor bass.

Square 1's material was energetic, sharp and clean. On "Song 12" Wonder had a way of playing the lead line so it sounded like a tape played backwards — the fade in first on the notes, ending sharply. Square 1 showed a fondness for clean endings in a reggae boogie piece "Broken Eagle". They finished with an instrumental, and by this time the dance floor was full as some began to pogo.

R-Complex came onstage with "Nothin to Do," a song about summer in the Pioneer Valley ("I want a job/I want work/I'm no jerk"), and some reggae rock in "The Day-oh Song." "The Come Dance" is "about going out to a place like this, picking up someone and taking them home," bandleader Truman explained. "Elevator followed, with "Don't You Understand," and "Follow me to the End" — a bright piece with a hooky riff.

Beckett on rye, no mayo

By T. HOWE
Collegian Correspondent

Brown bag lunches and canned soda hardly fit in with traditional conceptions about theater, but they are nonetheless a part of the UMass Department of Theater's "Lunch in the Lobby". "Lunch in the Lobby" is a program in which plays are performed in the lobby of the Rand Theater during the lunch hour. The performances are free and the audience is encouraged to eat their lunch while they enjoy the play.

"Lunch in the Lobby" is the brainchild of Dick Trousdell, a UMass faculty member who teaches an undergraduate advanced directing class (Theater 445). The plays are directed by members of Trousdell's class.

"It's not graduate of faculty directed, it's undergrads which gives it a freshness. It has a nice young feeling to it," Trousdell said.

Performing in the lobby at lunchtime gives the plays a distinctly loose atmosphere according to Trousdell. He related a story of one play which required that a banana peel be thrown onto the floor. Shortly after this was done, a janitor happened onto the scene, picked up the peel, and walked off, while thirty or forty people sat watching and eating their lunches.

"It's unpredictable but it's all theater," Trousdell said.

The plays put on in this series have to be relatively simple in form, in order to go over well in the lobby. The plays selected for the first week of the program were five modern plays, including Zoo Story by Edward Albee and Krapp's Last Tape by Samuel Beckett.

The plays are selected by the students, who must justify to the class their commitment to the play and feasibility of performing it in the lobby. Once the play is approved, the student director is given a free hand, Trousdell said that he goes to auditions "if invited."

Trousdell estimated the attendence at the first week of shows to be around 35 to 40 people each day, which almost constitutes a full house, or — if you will — lobby. He went on to say that he was very pleased with the quality of the first weeks plays.

"The quality of the first five shows was very high," Trousdell said, "I'm very impressed."

Jean Johnson, a senior Theater major in Trousdell's class said the course is one of the best offered at the university. She was also very enthusiastic about the entire Theater Department.

The second week of "Lunch in the Lobby" will be May 16 through the 20th. Auditions for these plays are being held April 4 through the 8th. Students interested in auditioning should consult the bulletin board in the lobby of the Rand Theater for more information.

At 8 p.m. on Tuesday, April 19, feminist folksinger Betsy Rose and the "nuclear comedy" team of Fran and Charlie will appear in concert in the Campus Center Auditorium, UMass. The program entitled "Singing and Laughing in the Nuclear Age" will be an evening of music and comedy to celebrate people's ability to care about each other in these absurd and troubled times. Admission is free. For further information, contact Jim Matlack at 549-4600, ext. 405.

WORCESTER — After having two of its first three matches postponed due to inclement weather, plus a disappointing loss to Boston College last Saturday, yesterday's trip to Worcester for the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team was just what the doctor ordered: A nice E-A-S-Y match in which the Minutemen destroyed Holy Cross 6-0. (The doubles were cancelled because of rain).

The Minutemen didn't drop a set in the convincing triumph. Neal Mackertich, at number one seed, as usual, whitewashed Larry Egan 6-0, 6-0. Stuart Goodmen destroyed Kevin McCarthy 6-2, 6-1 at number two. Steve Jordan waltzed past Scott McGavick 6-0, 7-5 at number four. Mike Duseau and Earl Small, both playing singles for the first time this year, had little trouble at number five and six singles. Duseau recorded a 6-2, 6-3 victory over John Sugrue, while Small crushed Andy Guillette 6-1,6-1.

The Minutmen look to continue their winning ways on Thursday against M.I.T. on the Boyden Courts, at 3 p.m. Szlosek expects a tougher match against the lads from Cambridge because of M.I.T.'s talent in spinning, twisting returns and lobs. In baseball lingo it's called junk.

On a more somber note, Nick Julian, the number four singles player and a chemical engineering major, has voluntairly left the team due to academic pressures.

Because of Julian's leave, the number five and six singles are up for grabs. Rich Lindgren, who did not participate in the match yesterday, will move up to number four. Among the contenders for the last two spots are Gelinas, Duseau, Small, Dave Singer, and Dave Salem.

This weekend, the netmen will face Central Connecticut and Bowdoin in a tri-match on Saturday and Clark University on Sunday. Next week, the Minutemen travel to Springfield College to take on the Chiefs, before embarking April 22 for the Atlantic 10 championships in Pittsburgh.

will host two other New England rivals, Boston College and the University of New Hampshire.

"The next three games are very important as far as the New England Championship goes," said Garber. "We have to win all three of them."

Garber felt that the team played well on Saturday and that if they are able to eliminated a few mental lapses that took place that they can get bck on the winning track.

The Gorillas had better get swinging right away today though, Bruins can run, climb, claw and mawl. And, even kill the season at an early date.

chipped in three assists.

The stickwomen outshot Smith by a count of 38-13, scoring on half of their shots. Hubner only had to make three saves, while the Smith goalie made nine.

The team did other impressive things besides scoring. They showed a fine passing display near the end of the game as Smith attempted to pressure the ball, and hustled on defense as they converged on the Smith ballhandlers and did not let many shots on goal.

UMass will take its 4-1 record into Saturday's game at home against Harvard, one of the top teams in New England and the country. It should determine who has control in New England.

New hoop recruit signs today

New University of Massachusetts head basketball coach Ron Gerlufsen is expected to sign his first recruit as a college head coach today.

Carl Smith, a 5'11" point guard from Fork Union Military Academy is expected to sign a letter of intent to attend UMass today, the national signing day for college bound hoopsters.

Minuteman freshman Tom Emerson attended Fork Union last year. Smith, along with transfer Jackie Sheehan, are expected to be the only new recruits this year. Smith averaged 10 pts. a game and six assists for Fork Union.

UM softball sweeps, baseball splits

Men take 2nd

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Staff

First came the grey overcast sky. Then came the 30 degree winds blowing in from left field. And finally a few rain drops even fell on UMass' Lorden baseball field.

But when it was all over, the 31 fans in the who had endured the weather had seen UMass split a doubleheader with Harvard.

It was a big day for Chris Waszczuk. UMass' left-fielder is proving to be a candidate for Academic All American honors, and cracked a solo home run in the opener, a 6-5 loss for the Minutemen, and a two run homer in the second game, a 10-7 victory for UMass.

On the day, Waszczuk, whose cumulative average in civil engineering bounces between 3.5 and 4.0 (give or take a summa or a magna) had four hits, six RBI's and scored four runs in addition to his two homers.

In the opener, UMass was forced to play catch-up as it gave up four quick runs to Harvard in the first inning. After playing in a slow and steady (wins the race) style, UMass finally was able to tie the game in the sixth inning on a Bruce Kingman single.

UMass wasn't able to keep the game deadlocked for long, or get its own go ahead runs, and the Crimson won it in the seventh on a grounder to the shortstop which scored the runner from third.

UMass quickly regrouped (head coach Dick Berquist held a fast between games pep talk) and played seven innings of solid baseball in the second game.

But it looked like an instant replay in the Crimson first inning when Ed Farrell, Harvard's first baseman stroked a grand slam over the 370 foot mark in right center field.

Farrell (or Professor Farrell as his teammates call him) had arrived in Amherst late after taking his Graduate Records Examination for six hours earlier in the day in Cambridge. He definitely swung at a smart pitch.

Dean Bennett slides safely under the tag of the Harvard Crimson in yesterday's game at Lorden Field. UMass split with Harvard.

UMass playing a steadier game than in the first, and tied the score after getting two runs in the first and two in the second inning.

Harvard took a one run lead in the third inning, but UMass went ahead in the fourth for good on a two run single by designated hitter Bruce Emerson.

UMass got its insurance runs from Waszczuk (a two run homer) in the sixth inning to ice the win.

The Minutemen, now 4-11, travel to Providence, R.I. today to play Brown in a doubleheader, and the UMass winning streak (one) is expected to be kept alive by the Minutemen hardballers.

Missy Oman lays down a bunt in yesterday's sweep over Westfield St.

Oman, Gaw lead in romps

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

When the going gets tough, the University of Massachusetts softball team gets going. Bolstered by the play of a hurting Jackie Gaw and Missy Oman and complimented with an all-around hitting attack, the Minutewomen disposed of Westfield State 6-0, 12-1 to sweep yesterday's doubleheader at NOPE.

Coach Elaine Sortino was very pleased with her team's effort.

"We hit the ball very well. We made things happen out there," said Sortino. UMass pounded out 12 hits in the opener and 13 in the second.

Massachusetts, which is ranked first in New England, didn't get things going in the opener until the third inning, when UMass put three runs on the board highlighted by Oman's shot to left (1 RBI) and Chris Coughlin's single to left (1 RBI).

In the fourth, Debbie Pickett led off with a single, folllowed by Rioux's hit, single's by Oman and Gaw and a sacrifice by Coughlin which gave UMass three more runs and the 6-0 advantage.

Cathy Reed upped her record to 9-2 with the three hitter. Gaw had three bases stolen on her in the first game and her throws were off due to her injury — but not by much.

"The first couple of times (I really threw hard) it (shoulder) was pretty stiff," said Gaw. "But it loosened up during the game."

The second game was one to make a highlight film from. Rioux (3 RBIs), went 3 for 3, Oman (1 RBI) went 2 for 2, Gaw (1 RBI) went 3 for 4, Sally Maher (2 RBI) went 2 for 2, Mary Ann Lombardi went 2 for 2 and Pickett hit in 2 RBI while going 1 of 2.

UMass picked up one run in the first, two in the second and eight in the fourth, getting six hits and going through 12 batters.

Lynn Stockley was on top of her game with five strikeouts while giving up four hits.

What was so remarkable about Oman today (besides that 5 for 6) was that she played with a sore wrist and had to bit the bullet. It was sore after the game so she may sit out tomorrow's UNH doubleheader. Friday, UMass will host Vermont, also at home.

The tough will just have to get tougher.

Laxmen to take on the Bruins

By JIM FLOYD
Collegian Staff

Today's clash between the University of Massachusetts and Brown University will be the biggest game of the season for the men's lacrosse team to date.

The reasoning behind that statement is simple. The Gorillas monkeyed around a little too much during the last two games and all of a sudden find themselves with a 1-2 record. Losing two games in a row is a common occurance even for Division I powerhouses but losing three in a row makes it a losing streak.

The Gorillas do not want to find themselves on the wrong end of a losing streak.

"It'll be tough to get off the deck after this one," head coach Dick Garber said, after his team had dropped what turned out to be a classic 14-13 seesaw battle against Rutgers University last Saturday afternoon.

"The players were somewhat deflated after the game and so was I," Garber said of the impact of the loss.

The Bruins are a potentially explosive squad that could give UMass fits if the team is not initiated today. Though the rankings will not be available until this afternoon, Garber speculated that Brown would take the top spot in New England.

"Brown will probably be the top ranked team in New England at game time," said Garber.

The game will be the first inter-New England battle that UMass will play as they try to regain the New England Intercollegiate Lacrosse Championship for the ninth time in the last 20 years.

Following the Brown game, the Gorillas

Gazelles devastate Smith

NORTHAMPTON — The University of Massachusetts women's lacrosse team showed why they are the defending national champions as they crushed Smith College yesterday by a score of 19-0.

UMass totally dominated the game from start to finsih as Smith spent most of the afternoon chasing the Gazelles around the field. UMass had nice, crisp passing, and a dominating offense which constantly kept the ball in Smith's defensive end.

"We started to move the ball offensively now that we are getting people healthy again," said coach Pam Hixon. "We started out wanting to fast break, which we did successfully, and then we began to play a control offense by spreading out and using a four corners offense, which we did to some extent," said Hixon.

The Gazelles broke on top early as Linda Haytayan poured in three goals before Smith even knew what hit them. They poured on the offensive attack and consistently scored to take a 12-0 halftime lead.

UMass began to settle down a little in the second half and spread out the goals a little more, as Smith played a little stronger. But goalie Rita Hubner and the tough defense would not yield a goal to Smith as UMass cruised to its 19-0 victory.

UMass had a balance scoring attack as they received hat tricks from four different people. Haytayan led the onslaught with five goals and four assists, followed by Pam Moryl who finished the afternoon with five goals and three assists.

The attack was helped by attackers Tish Stevens and Bunny Forbes who had three goals each, Sue Kozloski who had two goals and two assists, and Michelle Boyer who

Anti-nuke film leaves viewers feeling scared

By TRICIA A. YACOVONE

Feelings towards the nuclear arms race were described as "hopeless" by members of a capacity crowd yesterday in the Campus Center Auditorium after the showing of the controversial Academy-Award winning Canadian film "If You Love This Planet."

The film, sponsored by the Graduate Student Organization (GSO), the Division of Public Health, was preceded by a request by Robert Gage, a professor in the public health program at the University of Massachusetts to decide whether the film is actually propaganda as the U.S. government claims, or whether it is really worthy of its Academy Award.

In only twenty-five minutes, the film depicted the effects of nuclear war and the capabilities of the two nuclear superpowers, the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. The film used newsreels, old film clips of Ronald Reagan, and films of Japanese wounded by the atomic bombs dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Some people in the audience cried. Some people left before it was over. Some just sat and thought.

After the film ended, Gage asked for the opinions of the audience on the film, and more specifically on nuclear war.

"Hopeless" and "helpless" were among the emotions expressed by the crowd. Gage sympathized with the audience.

"Nuclear war is tough, frightening, infuriating," Gage said. "It is so overpowering that we don't know what to do; yet we feel the need to do something."

"Nuclear war is tough, frightening, infuriating," Gage said. "It is so overpowering that we don't know what to do; yet we feel the need to do something."

Gage then turned the discussion over to Dr. Alan Krass, professor of Natural Science at Hampshire College and former associate of the Stockholm Peace Research Institute, who offered "logical and reasonable arguments why to disarm" in his speech, "The Myth of Deterrance."

Krass explained that even though the freeze movement is a recent development, the arms buildup is not.

"The U.S. and the U.S.S.R. have been preparing for a nuclear war for thirty years, but no one has really said anything against it until now," Krass said.

Krass said the choice to create a nuclear arsenal was a political, not a military decision.

"None of the military of the nuclear-capable countries were consulted before they received nuclear weapons," he said.

This politicization of nuclear weapons in the military, and the arms race is based on the myth of deterrence, Krass said.

"The U.S. and the U.S.S.R. think they can increase their nuclear arms in the name of deterrence. This is a myth. Deterrence serves to make the irrational rational, the unthinkable thinkable," he said.

Krass said the word "deterrance" has been made totally useless by years of misuse, and its only function now is to confuse people.

Krass advocated a reduction, and ultimately an elimination, of nuclear weapons.

"Once two countries have agreed to maintain a balance of any kind, they can live with any kind of reduction . . . even living with no weapons," he said.

In the face of such a situation, people want to know what they can do. Krass said to use the best skill that each individual does best.

"To do something is the main thing. Right now, we have to undermine our myths about the Soviet Union. We have to overcome our fears and then help others to overcome theirs," he said.

Krass concluded by stating the uselessness of nuclear weapons, which "are not useful -- unless you want the complete destruction of civilization."

Students at Smith seek greater input

By BILL WALL
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Under sunny afternoon skies yesterday on the Seelye Lawn of Smith College, a group of about 150 people gathered to sing songs and listen to speakers demanding student input into the faculty tenure-granting process at their school.

The students were protesting the lack of "genuine" student involvement in tenure decisions in general, and specifically the recent denial of tenure to six faculty members, according to organizers of the rally.

"We formed an Ad-Hoc committee on student input for tenure and promotion because we wanted to bring students' concern to the attention of the administration. They have not been taking student opinion into account when making tenure decisions, said committee member Pam Wilkinson.

Merrie Baldwin, president of the Smith College Debate Club, expressed in a speech her concern that the faculty who are to judge a professor on the ability to teach only observe the professor once or twice a semester, which she said is insufficient time to make an informed decision.

"We sit with the professors day in and day out. We are the ones who can judge if that professor can communicate these ideas. We are the ones who can judge if the teaching effectiveness is really there," Baldwin said.

The decision to grant tenure is based on scholarship, teaching ability and, to a lesser degree, public service, Wilkinson said.

"We feel we should not have input into the scholarship end (of the tenure evaluation process). However, we believe on the teaching end is where we have a lot to say," Wilkinson said.

Baldwin read a list of six demands given to the administration, including the appointment of a non-voting student member to the faculty's Tenure and Promotion Committee, strengthening student liason to each department, and official public explanation of all tenure decisions, unless the effected professor requests otherwise.

Baldwin said one of the main problems with the current process was that the decisions were explained in very vague terms.

"It was very, very arbitrary; one professor was told that his teaching ability was not up to the college's standards. We believe that he is an excellent teacher," Baldwin said.

The only current student input into the tenure decision is the evaluations filled out by students, but these were not mandatory until this semester, said committee member Carla Cataldo.

The six professors who were denied tenure after seven years of service were Gill Tunnell of the psychology department; Alan C. Lamborn of the government department; Carla Golden of the psychology department; Kathy Spencer of the French department; Andrea Hairston of the theater; and Thomas Riddell of the economics department.

"We lament their loss," Baldwin said.

Trustees vote $70 increase in student fees

By MARK J. WELCH
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees yesterday voted to approve student fee increases for next fall totalling $70, after reducing the Campus Center fee by $3.50.

The Trustees overrode their own Trust Fund Management Policy, passed Feb. 9, in accepting the Campus Center fee of $84, an increase of $5 over the $79 requested before the "full costing" policy was passed.

The original policy said student fees should not increase more than 2.4 percent for "full costing" charges, which are assessed to pay for central administrative services, such as accounting and data processing, which are used by each campus trust fund, including the Campus Center.

"According to the policy, students cannot be charged for any more than their share of (full costing charges on) the fee, and that's $2," argued outgoing Student Trustee Jim Murphy.

Murphy made a motion to reduce the fee to $81, but the motion was defeated.

Murphy argued that the Board should not "contradict its own policy one meeting after it was passed," by approving the Campus Center fee at $84. But Trustee John Sweeney argued the policy was not absolute.

"When we passed the Trust Fund Management Policy, nobody ever said it was set in stone," Sweeney said. "The compromises that have been made should be sufficient."

The Campus Center administration had requested a $79 fee in January, but increased the request to $87.50 after the policy was passed in February. After objections raised by Murphy at a committee meeting two weeks ago, the request was reduced to $84.

In other business, the Trustees did not consider the Long Range Plan, as had originally been scheduled, because UMass President David C. Knapp was able to obtain an extension from Chancellor of Higher Education John B. Duff. The plan will be revised and considered at the August meeting, Knapp told the Board, and will then be sent to the Board of Regents.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey announced to the Trustees that two professors at UMass, Amherst received Guggenheim fellowships, as did two UMass, Boston professors.

Duffey also announced that Professor Stephen B. Oates will receive the Robert F. Kennedy Award for Distinction in Publications next week for his book, Let the Trumpet Sound: The Life of Martin Luther King.

The Board also approved a University Medal to be awarded to Judge J. John Fox for his efforts in creating the UMass Medical School in Worcester.

Reagan lobbies for Adelman

WASHINGTON (AP) — While President Reagan and his high command lobbied by telephone, Senate opponents of Kenneth L. Adelman's nomination as arms control director asserted yesterday his selection raised doubt about the administration's commitment to curb the nuclear race.

Supporters of the embattled nominee said they had the votes to gain confirmation by a narrow margin when the Senate votes today. An Associated Press survey showed they were close.

They also claimed the strength to defeat any effort to kill the nomination by returning it to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, one option available to the opposition.

The committee voted 9 to 8 against endorsing the Adelman nomination on Feb. 24. Then, in order to get the issue to the Senate, the panel voted 14 to 3 to send the nomination to the Senate floor with a recommendation that it be rejected.

Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, said he would strongly oppose the tactic to recommit the nomination to the committee.

"What in heaven's name would be accomplished by that?" asked Percy, an Adelman supporter. "Nothing is going to happen in the committee," he said. "No further hearings are going to be held."

Opponents said if they decide to offer an amendment to send the nomination back to the committee, it would most likley be today, the day the full Senate is scheduled to vote on the nomination.

A poll by the AP showed 48 senators in favor of Adelman's confirmation or leaning toward voting for him, 38 against and 14 undecided. One of the 14, Sen. Robert Packwood, R-Ore., will not be present for the vote today because he is attending a Republican conference in his home state.

King says Chicago race helps

BOSTON (AP) — Mel King, who hopes to become Boston's first black mayor, said Harold Washington's election in Chicago should help get blacks to vote and put him on top this fall in Boston.

"It's going to get a lot more people together," King said yesterday. "The believability in the possibility of electing a black has increased."

The race between Democrat Washington and Republican Bernard Epton attracted a record turnout in Chicago, with close to 100 percent of blacks voting and a reported 98 percent of voters in the city's black wards choosing Washington.

About 40 percent of Chicago's population is black, compared to 22 percent in Boston.

"I know the numbers are vastly different here and in Chicago," King said. "But I am running because I think...that the fact that I've been a state representative in a district that is 75 percent white and I have a record of being able to reach out and work with a very good cross-section of people will be a good basis for my being successful in this effort."

King, interviewed at his office at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology where he is an adjunct professor in urban studies, said voter registration will be the key to his success.

"That is what is key and that's what made Chicago," he said.

Asked if he expected the kind of turnout from Boston's blacks that Washington got in Chicago, King said, "I think it's going to be a lot more difficult here, but in the final election I think I'll come very close to that."

Holocaust remembered in D.C.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Speaking in Yiddish on the steps of the Capitol, a young congressman asked Jewish survivors of the Holocaust yesterday to remember the gentiles who risked their lives to save Jews — like his father — from the Nazis.

Rep. Sam Gejdenson, born in 1948 in a camp for displaced persons in Germany, won the hearts of his audience of thousands by speaking to them in a fading language once known to virtually every Jew in pre-World War II Europe.

Gejdenson, a Democrat from Connecticut, took part in a ceremony in which the government turned over to the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council two abandoned government buildings near the Jefferson Memorial.

They will become the site of a Holocaust museum and memorial, to be built with $75 million raised in private contributions.

Vice President George Bush presided over the transfer, saying to the survivors: "We join with you — God's remnants — in speaking out" against Adolf Hitler's attempt to exterminate an entire people.

Senate kills budget cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republican-controlled Senate Budget Committee sheathed President Reagan's budget knife on welfare, food stamps and other key social programs yesterday as it tentatively crafted an overall spending program containing $11.3 billion more than he wants for non-defense items.

In contrast, the same panel had slashed his defense buildup by one-half in a lopsided vote last week.

The committee left welfare, food stamps and subsized housing programs virtually unscathed, and slowed his cutbacks in Medicare, Medicaid and other health programs considerably. And instead of a 1-year freeze on federal pay, it voted for a 6-month delay of the next boost.

Still ahead was a decision on possible tax increases, yet another area where aides said the panel was likely to override Reagan.

The committee was expected to complete work on its tax and spending blueprint late yesterday or today. Some aides cautioned, though, that a majority of the panel might reject the emerging plan entirely if the deficit became too large.

Freeze vote delayed again

WASHINGTON (AP) - With plenty of votes to spare, the House yesterday rejected efforts to dilute a nuclear freeze resolution labeled "a formula for permanent insecurity" by President Reagan.

House Democratic leaders remained confident of victory for the largely symbolic call for a "mutual and verifiable" half in the arms race. But, with 39 amendments still pending, the House quit work on the measure in the early evening, putting off further consideration until next week.

By 229-190, the Democratic-run chamber rejected a major modification proposed by Rep. Elliot H. Levitas, D-Ga., that would have permitted older nuclear weapons to be replaced by newer ones in lieu of a flat freeze, with the new ones replacing the old ones in a one-for-two "strategic build-down."

Assistant to governer links education to state economy

By KEVIN BOWE
Collegian Staff

Gerald Indelicato, special assistant for educational affairs to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, last night outlined some of the educational priorities of the Dukakis administration during the next four years in an address before the Undergraduate Student Senate at the University of Massachusetts.

"(Dukakis) has been clear in saying that economic development and education are intricately related. A strong economy is based on a very strong education system. We need, must maintain and improve our educational system," he said.

The Dukakis administration has recommended a nine percent increase in the budget for public higher education. This is the largest percentage increase for a state agency, Indelicato said.

Areas of special interest to the Governor include increasing funding of new programs such as engineering, information sciences and health sciences, providing funds for maintenance of deteriorating buildings like the UMass library, and the purchasing of new equipment, he said.

Indelicato said he favors an admission standards policy that is formulated at the "local campus level" and that allows "flexability" in determining what kinds of students are accepted to the institution.

"How do you measure motivation?" Indelicato rhetorically asked in pointing out the need for local campus discretion.

The Dukakis administration supports a student on the Board of Regents, he said. In the past, the Regents have opposed student representation.

"I don't understand why the Board of Regents will not accept (student representation). I suspect we will have some favorable movement in that area," Indelicato said.

In his opening remarks, Indelicato expressed support for the need for more student input in deciding how educational funds are spent in higher education, particularly when the funding is being supplied by student fees.

"Students should have a more intimate role....We need to listen, be involved with the consumer, (in deciding funding) and that is the student," he said.

Chicago vote produces hope

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The election Tuesday of U.S. Rep. Harold Washington as the first black mayor of Chicago yesterday was viewed with hope for the city by a political science professor and a Third World leader at the University of Massachusetts.

In a race in which more than 90 percent of all registered voters participated and in which the 51-48 percent margin of victory required until yesterday morning to decide, Washington, the Democratic nominee, defeated Republican Bernard Epton.

"The closeness of the race is already a very strong sign" of racism in an electorate which has consistently and overwhelmingly voted Democratic since 1931, said political science professor John Brigham.

George McKenzie, the Office of Third World Affairs' liason to the Undergraduate Student Senate, agreed "racism played a large part," and called the victory "a tremendous feat." However, he said the race issue was transcended, since "in 1983, everyone understands that when Ronald Reagan is on the hill, they've got to go out and put Reaganomics on the defensive."

Brigham, who teaches a course in Civil Liberties, predicted Washington's victory should mean Blacks, who make up 40 percent of the voting population, may now become part of the political "machine" which has ruled the city for years.

The Democratic "machine" will "be rebuilt with the Black population," he said, "and be stronger for it."

"I don't think Mr. Washington's election is an end," agreed McKenzie, "I think it is a beginning."

Reproductive rights in danger of losing ground in elections

By ONAIDA FOX
Collegian Correspondent

NORTHAMPTON — Women's reproductive rights are being endangered even though 90 percent of the people in the U.S. are pro-choice, a member of the National Organization for Women (NOW) said last night.

The Hampshire county chapter of NOW held a meeting last night at the Unitarian Church in an attempt to mobilize support for women's rights to reproductive freedom.

"Many people do not know how endangered a woman's rights are," said Tamar Raphael, a member of NOW.

Prior to the state Democratic convention held last Saturday in Springfield, pro-choice advocates got more than one thousand signatures to get the issue of abortion placed on the agenda for the convention, Raphael said.

"When Massachusetts legislators vote on the next anti-choice issue, we at least have a strong Democratic influence, which is a good achievement since Massachusetts is primarily Democratic," she said. "It's great; we get victories so rarely under Reagan."

"Pro-choice does not mean pro-abortion", she said.

"Pro-choice means we are pro-freedom of conscience", another member said.

"Many pro-choice advocates are anti-abortion", said Warren Rasmussen, the only male member present. He said these people themselves would not have an abortion, but they respect the rights of those that would. He said more emphasis should be placed on family planning.

Catholic and Jewish organizations, although against abortions, are pro-choice, Raphael said.

The federal "Squeal Rule," which would have forced a birth control clinic to notify parents if she were under 18 and seeking birth control, was permanently disqualified.

"Another victory", she said.

Half of eggs fail to fertilize after intercourse and abort naturally, she said. Abortions are 10 times safer than giving birth, Raphael said.

"Two-thirds of the world population is in favor of abortions", she said.

The Northampton chapter of NOW has 50-75 active members.

It was established last year "because of concern for women and reproductive rights", Raphael said.

Legislation may regulate and prohibit abortions, but it has to be approved by a majority in Congress and then voted on by the people, Raphael said.

NOW "wants to make sure pro-choice advocators are aware that this is going on and have them go out and vote," she said.

Senate demands Coffee Shop remain in Campus Center

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night unanimously approved a motion demanding the Campus Center Coffee Shop remain as it is, and filled out a committee to select a Student Government Association (SGA) Attorney General.

Campus Center Board of Governors Vice Chairman Mike Reilly told the senate public response to an opinion questionnaire given out at the Coffee Shop during the past week was "five to one against the (University) Store taking over the Coffee Shop."

"Well over a thousand" students answered the questionnaires, Reilly said.

The motion stated that since "undergraduate students pay a Campus Center fee of $88 per year," and "changing the Coffee Shop into a store selling souvenirs will serve not the students but rather visitors and conference participants," then the Coffee Shop should "be maintained in its present form."

Senate Rents and Fees Committee Chair Mitch Gaslin, who wrote the motion, added that students "support the majority of the Campus Center" through purchases.

Reilly said the motion would add "more impetus to show student opinion" in favor of the Coffee Shop.

The senate also elected Rosa Pereira and Dianne Arico to the Selection Committee for Attorney General. The two senate appointees thus filled out the nine-member committee which also contains two student advocates, two student judges, two members of the senate Governmental Affairs Committee, and acting Attorney General Liz Hill.

SGA Co-President Tom Ahern said, "Our goal is to have an Attorney General before we break for summer."

The SGA has had an acting attorney general "for over a year," according to assistant attorney general Randy Chapman.

In other business, the senate approved the composition of the Search Committee for the Director of the Office of Third World Affairs, and granted $3,000 to Union Video Center (UVC) for a color camera.

UVC Production Coordinator Dennis Martin said there are "about 150 people in training workshops," working on creative projects with "only one camera."

Pentagon correspondent tells of Reagan's defense problem

By MITCH ZEMEL
Collegian Correspondent

In a lecture given at Mount Holyoke College last night, Richard Halloran, Pentagon correspondent for the New York Times, said "the most glaring weakness of the Reagan administration is the declining national consensus on defense."

Halloran uncovered and wrote the initial article on the Reagan administration's plans for winning a limited nuclear war. He said it is important to understand this plan because it is a new step in the policy of the U.S. government.

When the policy became public knowledge, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger first denied the report, then said it was taken out of context, and then said the Russians are doing the same.

"A democratic society will support a military policy only if the vast majority of the people support the venture," Halloran said.

Because the administration has failed to muster this support, it has seen its military budget crumble, he said.

The Congress has recently cut President Reagan's proposed military spending growth from 10 percent to 5 percent. Halloran said Reagan's military budget will even probably fall below former President Jimmy Carter's projection for 1984.

Halloran said Reagan does not seem to see the connection between military and domestic policy.

"It's a simple lack of leadership," he said. "Reagan does not have command of the subject."

It is important for the administration to let people know its policy because it serves to inform its allies, and it deters its enemies, he said.

The government must find out what its national interests are and then fit its weapons to the strategy. Halloran said the administration has failed to show that it knows what it is doing in basing the MX missle.

"The administration must have a policy, decide if it is defensible, and set about defending it. I say they have not," Halloran said. The administration has failed to persuade the Congress and its allies that its policy is the right one, he said. They spend much time and energy on defense, but they lack a basic plan, he said.

Science discovers feminism

By PEGGY SHAW
Collegian Correspondent

Feminism is producing a slow but influential change in how scientists work and who they are, well-known feminist author told a group of more than 35 people at the University of Massachusetts last night.

Traditional attitudes and norms are under transition as "feminism disrupts the things once thought to be clear. Like science, feminism sees what has always been there to see, but has different thoughts," Vivian Garnick said as she read from her new novel Women In Science — Recovering the Life Within, which will be published this fall.

Garnick discussed the inequality in status between men and women scientists.

Male scientists unquestionably achieve greater status with their experience, while "most female scientists are frozen in a research associate positon," she said.

This position is lower in status and is limited in mobility, she said. The women scientists at this level are unable to make decisions about the type of work to be done and who will do it, she said.

"They are not considered to be professional by their collegues," she said.

Garnick said the women scientists she interviewed "were torn between their passion for science and their passion for feminism. Because these women stay in science, they hold an important, dynamite presence."

The difference between women scientists a generation ago and women scientists of today involves their personal development, she said.

Student injured in SUB fight

By RAY BEAUCHEMIN
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts police yesterday reported a complaint of assault and battery in connection with an incident Tuesday morning in the Student Union lobby.

Police said a male student was assaulted by another man passing out leaflets after he took a leaflet and threw it away. The complainant, according to police, said he threw the leaflet in a nearby barrel. The alleged assailant, according to police, said the man threw the leaflet at him.

Police reported the complainant said he was hit from behind, then turned around and was struck again several times in the face. He and a witness reported the assault to police at 11:23 a.m., immediately following the incident, police said.

The victim was treated and released from the Infirmary and had been advised of how to take legal action.

A show cause hearing for assault and battery has been set in connection with the incident.

The 36-year old alleged assailant was passing out leaflets concerning a Student Government Association referendum question at the time of the incident in question.

A 22-year old resident of Washington dormitory in the Southwest Residential College has been charged with driving while intoxicated and cited for leaving the scene of a property damage accident, police said.

Witnesses said the man was observed about 12:30 a.m. yesterday backing into a motor vehicle, performing a U-turn and striking a second vehicle, then speeding off down Van Meter Drive without headlights, police said. Witnesses identified both the car and the driver.

Police said a security officer observed the car parked in Lot 50 in Southwest. Police arrived and, based on witnesses' observation and the condition of the suspect during a police interview, arrested the man and charged him with driving under the influence, police said.

Damage to the first car, a 1983 Datsun, is estimated at $600; damage to the second was not reported. The damage to the defendent's car was listed at $200.

Students should be aware of effects of 'lookalike' drugs

By Tim MacPHEE
Collegian Staff

With final exams fast approaching, University of Massachusetts students who routinely pump themselves full of coffee and other stimulants to help cram should be alerted to the possible side effects they could get from these and other "lookalike drugs."

Lookalikes are so named because they are deliberately made to look like controlled substances, especially speed. While their ingredients are usually legal, they can be dangerous if taken in abundance or in combination with alcohol according to University Health Services (UHS) officials.

"I first heard about the stimulants from an ad in a magazine article, either 'High Times' or 'High Society', said a sophomore Northeast Residential Area resident who requested anonymity.

"People could make money selling them as drugs, but I just plan to keep them around for exams, or in case anybody wants one," he said.

He also said he considered them to be safe, although "people I know have taken a couple at the same time and gotten an upset stomach from all the caffeine."

The student said he received his stimulants from a company based in Avenel, N.J. called Netcong Vitamin Emporium Enterprises. The firm sells tablets containing epidrene (an antihistimine for sinuses) billed as "diet supplements". The company also sells stimulants in regular, double, and triple strengths, containing from 225 to 325 milligrams of caffeine and epidrene. Prices range from $12 to $60 for 1,000 triple strength capsules.

A company spokesman contacted by telephone, who wished to remain anonymous, stressed "these are not drugs, they are stimulants and perfectly legal."

While caffeine-laced stimulants may be legal, UHS staff are not sure how safe they are.

"We first heard about these drugs when a fraternity sent us an ad which said to send in money and you would get drugs billed as diet aids," said Dr. Thomas MacBride, UHS director.

He said he didn't really know how prevalent the problem was campus-wide, but said "there are two problems with taking any drug. First you have to be sure of the quality of the product. Then, with caffeine, in capsule form, you have to make sure that you don't take too much of it.

"Caffeine seems to get related to abnormal cardiac rhythms. Stimulant drugs like caffeine can play havoc with sleep and wake rhythms of the body which is not completely understood."

He also said one special problem is mixing stimulants with alcohol, which is a depressant, because their combination can cause stomach irritability.

According to a UHS handout on lookalikes, "they pose particular dangers to persons with heart disease, high blood pressure, diabetes, or thyroid disease. In doses of more than 600 milligrams a day (about six cups, brewed), it can cause periods of sleeplessness, irritation and anxiety."

Although extreme reactions such as these are spotty and infrequent, the danger lies in the fact that there is no way of predicting in advance whether people might have a hyper sensitivity to these drugs, health officials said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The many faces of the Democratic party

The Issues

It was billed as a Democratic Issues Convention. But during the cattle show proceedings the only place one could find real issues was outside the arena at the Civic Center.

Yes, it's true that the Civic Center can sell its leftover Springfield Indians hot dogs to the starving delegates. But the tables sporting literature for almost every cause conceivable were at least equally popular.

There were numerous liberal causes represented. These included MassPIRG, gun control, Jobs with Peace, the National Women's Political Caucus and even a Greater Boston Walk for Hunger.

The most interesting liberal table was the one with Democratic socialist literature. What the Democratic socialists actually do is support issues that are truly in line with Democratic platform policy. They include the Equal Rights Amendment, Right to Know legislation for toxic chemicals in the workplace, consumer utility boards and free day care.

Unfortunately socialism is a four letter word in today's society. No matter how good it sounds or is, the masses will never accept it.

They point out things like the fact that the United States spends considerably less of the GNP on social programs than does Germany or Japan. Both of these are industrial countries that enjoy greater economic health than the United States.

One of their arguments is worth thinking about.

"One of the reasons the word 'socialism' sends many Americans foaming at the mouth is because there is no socialist movement of any consequence. So there's always been an open season. You can say anything absurd about socialism. "Unless this country gets over its anti-socialism, it will not simply lack a socialist movement, it will lack any kind of decent liberalism as well."

You can be sure that conservatives are well aware of that.

But the most fun of all centered around the conservative tables. In this case some of them were fascist tables. They were outrageous.

One table was run by so-called "Pro-Life Democrats." If you find that to be a contradiction in terms you're not alone. Pro-Life Democrats claim to "speak for those who have no voice."

Their literature says they support anything that is anti-life including war, nuclear armament, poverty, hunger, racism, sexism and abortion. My question is when has a conservative done anything to eliminate any of the afore mentioned other than abortion? The answer of course is never. Conservatives oppose the nuclear freeze, cut social spending and oppose affirmative action and the ERA.

According to the Pro-Life Democrats, abortion "...does much more than kill an unborn child. It makes society sterile, barren. It makes society unyielding. It makes society retreat backwards into the yesterdays gone by (this must explain Ronald Reagan) into the goals already fulfilled. It destroys the tomorrows of hope, the futures of new discoveries, new goals to reach, new dreams to come true. It takes the brightness out of the rising sun which brings a dawn of enlightenment to a world recovering from the terrors of a long, dark night...Stop abortion before abortion grinds the world to a halt."

This is pretty strong stuff for arguing against a woman's right to determine the destiny of her own body.

And whoever heard of a bleeding heart conservative?

And even more preposterous table was run by a group of people carrying petitions to "Beam the Bomb." These people support Darth Reagan's proposals to build satellites in outer space that will shoot down Soviet nuclear missiles and keep the world safe for democracy. Even more preposterous was the fact that these people billed themselves as Democrats.

Behind the movement is none other than Lyndon LaRouche. You might remember Lyndon as being a candidate for president in 1980. He is now talking of running in 1984. If he does it will be interesting to see whether he can beat out former Florida Governor Reubin Askew for last place.

LaRouche commented in a newsletter that Ronald Reagan achieved greatness when he proposed the laser satellites for outer space.

The last thing we need is a Democratic party that emulates the Republican party.

These "LaRouche Democrats" play a large part in a newspaper called the New Solidarity.

"It was by the press that the morals of this country have been ruined, and it is by the press that they shall be restored," claims a quote on the masthead of the paper.

Heaven help CBS news and the Boston Globe.

Jobs the real winners in Springfield

The Event

The convention only comes once a year, and this one promised to be special because of the upcoming '84 presidential elections. This was the foundation of democracy, I thought, the living heart and soul of the Constitution — where things are actually decided. There were six presidential hopefuls on hand, and every other Democrat worth a vote was on hand to lend prestige to the event. The contestants would make speeches, and the mob would pick the one they thought the best in a non-binding straw poll.

attacking the incumbent, the Great Communicator of our time, Ronald Reagan. He was followed by the five others, with their "jobs, not jellybeans" Bible thumping slogans — "I was the youngest of six children, and public education got me where I am today." — and if you just had read the texts, you wouldn't have known one candidate from the other. As Gary Hart from Colorado said, it was just like a cattle show, because they all looked the same and made the same noises.

When it came time to judge the candidates on whatever merits they might had, the crowd used every criterion imaginable. The little old lady from the third district voted for Walter Mondale because "he seemed like a nice boy," and the Rotary Club type with the cigar from district seven cast his ballot for Glenn, "the astronaut." A lot of them even voted for "JOBS" just so they wouldn't have to make a decision. JOBS came in second place, after Fritz Mondale with 25.6 percent of the vote.

The JOBS candidate was a move initiated by AFSCME, and the AFL-CIO, the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees of Massachusetts, and the American Federation of Labor — Council of Industrial Organizations. There are approximately 500,000 "organized labor" workers in the state, with an estimated 700 delegates attending the convention. Voting as a bloc would cast a winning vote to any candidate, and although the poll was non-binding, (they wouldn't have to keep their promise) AFSCME was politically astute in voting for JOBS. They, at least, could see through the shallow facades of the candidates, who all said the same things. They, at least, wouldn't be swayed by the theme from Star Wars that played before John Glenn gave his snoozer of a speech.

JOBS won 884 out of 3448 delegate votes, or 25.6 percent — good enough to come in second behind Fritz Mondale. Senator Paul Tsongas, D-Mass., had openly supported JOBS before the start of the Convention. When asked why, he said, "I've met Harry Jobs and I like him — he's a nice guy." Tsongas said he supported at least three of the front-runners at one point or another, but "found that they were indistinguishable in substance and rhetoric." Tsongas agreed that there is a lot more appeal in a candidates personality than in the issues. Thus, we have Mondale, the nice boy, and Glenn, the astronaut. This way of choosing candidates goes across all political spectrums — by party and by ideology. Just look at Jimmy Carter's smile or Ronnie Reagan's jowls.

When I left the convention, I thought to myself about how I'd finally seen how the electoral process works. And you know what? It scares the hell out of me.

Editorial trash and insanity

To the Editor:

In his latest editorial, UMass alumnus Jackson Katz delivered the same kind of garbage that UMass student Jackson Katz delivered in semesters past.

Once again, Katz insisted on portraying President Reagan as a stooge of the New Right and a right-wing extremist. Katz is obviously oblivious to the fact that the true right-wingers in this country feel that President Reagan has sold out to the moderates in the Republican Party, having given little more than lip service to the New Right's social agenda. Further evidence of President Reagan's relatively moderate political stance is the fact that he has been able to build bi-partisan coalitions in Congress.

Katz's charge that President Reagan is on the "extreme fringe of American politics" is particularly absurd considering that Katz's own political views would probably place him far to the left of what most Americans consider to be middle-of-the-road.

Every time I read one of Jackson Katz's editorials I can not help but think that Katz was born twenty years too late. Katz's radicalism would have been no less ridiculous and offensive in the 1960's, but at least he would have been able to plead temporary insanity due to peer pressure.

Consistency is vital for change

To the Editor:

Once again I am left amazed and slightly dumbfounded after reading a Collegian article. The article in reference covered the lecture given by Sheila Tobias; co-founder of the NOW organization, and appeared in last Friday's paper. My reaction is not a result of the quality of the reporting, but, rather a result of the contents of Ms. Tobias' lecture.

As I read through the article and came to the second paragraph, I read what I considered to be a very astute perception on the part of Ms. Tobias. By stating that; "Continuity in the women's movement is essential. To lose momentum would be disaster." Ms. Tobias aptly expressed what I have long since concluded is lacking in most movements working on social changes. When a movement's purpose is social change and the ideas expressed or people involved lack continuity, the movement inevitably causes its own collapse. Though Ms. Tobias expressed the importance of "continuity" in the feminist movement, not 20 lines later in the article, she contradicts herself by stating that associating feminism and lesbianism is "damaging."

I do realize that I may be misinterpreting Ms. Tobias' "damaging" statement and, that, rather than trying to negate the involvement of the lesbian community in the feminist movement, Ms. Tobias is trying to assure the female heterosexual community that feminism and lesbianism are not synonymous. However important Ms. Tobias thinks this sort of assurance is for the feminist movement and the female heterosexual community, as a heterosexual female, I consider her words to be condemnatory of the lesbian community. Lesbians, regardless of their sexual preference are deserving of equal rights just as is the female heterosexual community. Those women who need to be reassured that they will not be considered lesbians if they are involved in the feminist movement should re-evaluate their concept of equality.

Through discrimination because of personal differences, the women's movement, or any movement for that matter, will be plagued with internal conflict which will stifle the ultimate goals of the organization. I think that people like Ms. Tobias who lead up an organization purporting social change should realize that the more ideologically consistent and internally stable an organization is, the more reputable the organization will be regardless of personal differences, sexual or otherwise.

Taking offense at defense

To the Editor:

It is remarkable the lack of response in and by the Collegian on President Reagans' new 'Star Wars' defense program for the U.S. This program, which aims at ninety-five percent efficiency, would at that level allow one in twenty Soviet missiles through its barriers, and even at a ninety-nine percent efficiency rate it would allow one hundred of the Soviets' ten thousand missiles through. Doctor Teller, who has backed this system since last October, has been berated by collegues from all sides because of his stand on this issue. Dr. Jerome Wiesner, a former president of MIT, and a presidential advisor during the nineteen-sixties has been quoted as saying that Teller "believed in a lot of things that haven't worked out", when asked about Teller and the new system. Fusion Energy Foundation spokesman Steven Bardwell stated that we could have a first generation system in five years if intensive research starts now, but he also states that it would only be after an additional twenty years that a system which could protect the U.S. in an all-out nuclear war could be implemented. These arguments might be responded to by proponents of the Energy Intensive Weapons System, were it not for the simple additional fact that with the invention of the Cruise missile system, which allows nuclear weapons to fly under radar, this EIWS is already outmoded because to target the warheads radar systems must be utilized. As President Johnson stated many years ago, a nation which believes it is fully defended from a nuclear attack will be much more willing to start a nuclear war.

The presidential shuffle has begun

The Candidates

The Democratic State Issues Convention in Springfield this past weekend decided to go big time and hold a presidential straw poll vote. Apparently the planners of this convention neglected to check their calendars in staging this exercise in presidential politics. With the election just over nineteen months away, who would pay attention to a poll this early? As early as four years ago, the answer would probably have been no one. But in this age of million dollar campaigns, prepackaged candidates, overly affluent political action committees, and news-hungry media hounds, the candidate who starts earliest, starts best. With this in mind, Springfield played host on Friday and Saturday to the Mondale, Cranston, Hart, Glenn, Askew and Hollings

John F. Hudson

Road Show. Cajoling undecided delegates, and mugging for the press, the candidates pressed the flesh and pushed free food and drink to all takers in hopes of winning, or even placing, in the vote held early Saturday afternoon.

After the vote on Saturday, and the massive media coverage which went along with it, candidacies obviously left Massachusetts changed. How they changed is examined below.

Walter Mondale — the former Vice-President under Jimmy Carter emerged with 29.3 percent of the vote, by far the largest total out of any of the living candidates. (JOBS, an issue pushed by Big Labor received 25.6 percent of the vote — for more on this, see Josh Meyer's column on today's page). By far the most well organized and financially stable organization, the Mondale For President Committee showed impressive advance work and well planned floor work at the convention. Mondale could not have afforded to lose this one. As the front-runner from the start, the former vice-president would have walked out of Springfield with egg on his face had he not swept to victory in the impressive manner in which he did. It should also be noted Mr. Mondale impressed many an observer by his much-improved oratorical skills. His speech was by far the most stirring effort out of the six candidates who chose to address the convention. Most definitely he is the odds-on favorite for 1984.

Senator Alan Cranston (D. California) — a liberal's liberal, the candidate most to the left on the political spectrum, Cranston surprised many by running third in the straw poll vote. Though he won a similar vote in his home state earlier this year, political analysts gave Cranston little attention, and viewed the senator as one of the first also-rans in the field of Democratic candidates. But with good advance work, numerous stops in the Bay State this past month, and a witty speech which successfully satirized Reagan's tenure in office, the 68-year-old lawmaker emerged as a winner of sorts, and now finds himself in a stronger position for the long race to 1984.

Senator John Glenn (D-Ohio) — Before the convention, this ex-astronaut was comfortably in second place in most polls involving the major candidates for the Democratic nomination. His speaking abilities, lambasted in the past, were now supposedly vastly improved. His campaign staff saw Springfield as a good opportunity to solidify the public's perception of Glenn as available, strong candidate. Then things started to fall apart. Glenn failed to show up on Friday night, unlike almost all the other candidates who used the evening for some informal delegate lobbying. Strike 1. Upon entering the Civic Center on Saturday for his speech, Glenn decided to accompany his "dramatic" appearance with a little mood music straight out of Star Wars or a thousand other movies like it. Strike 2. And then the speech. Great material but — uninspired delivery, rehashed rhetoric, and a rather anti-climactic ending. Strike 3? Perhaps not, but Glenn left Springfield limping, not flying.

Senator Gary Hart (D-Colorado) — this JFK look — alike received 10.5 percent of the vote and placed a disappointing fifth in the vote before the convention, Hart was widely acknowledged as the third-place runner, stable, safe, and possibly poised to make a move toward the top of the candidate heap. Yet one of the main problems of his short-lived campaign badly damaged his chances in the straw poll. The only major constituency group Hart currently controls are the college students. Because of this weakness, Hart showed poorly at the convention where a vast majority of the delegates were over 25. If the Senator cannot create a more broad-based coalition, his efforts for the presidency will surely be doomed.

Former Florida Governor Reuben Askew and Senator Fritz Hollings — I lumped these two together for the simple fact they polled a mere .35 percent of the vote. Both suffer from problems of underexposure, fiscal uncertainty and non-existent national organizations. Without these, the two simply won't have a shot at the White House in 1984. Nice try guys, you can join Senator Dale Bumpers (D-Arkansas) (a recent drop-out) on the sidelines. This just ian't going to be your year.

The race has begun. The candidates are off in a flurry of handshakes, public opinion polls, mass mailings, and anti-Reagan rhetoric. By starting this early, the most qualified candidate just may get the Democratic nomination for president. But don't count on it.

The media blitz — was it legitimate?

The Media

Now that the Massachusetts Democratic State Issues Convention has filled the columns of numerous daily newspapers and made its way into countless households across the nation via television sets, Chester Atkins, chair of the Massachusetts Democratic Party can sit back and gloat at the success of his three-ring circus that played Springfield last weekend.

In the first ring, Atkins arranged his delegates to shine brightly under the intense television lights illuminating the Springfield Civic Center. He would crack his whip and the animals would perform.

Atkins cracked his whip each time he wanted to call attention to his main event — the six presidential candidates seeking the Democratic nomination. He worked hard to organize his main event displaying it in the center ring, but not quite as hard as he worked to keep happy his act in ring number three; the press.

Not that the press was a mere puppet of Atkins. Because of the press, none of the six candidates dared to ignore Atkins' issues convention because — though none liked to admit it — each one clearly recognized that the one who came out ahead in Saturday's straw poll would enjoy increased fund-raising ability. Not to forget, that the loser would suffer under an onus of skepticism from contributors when he comes aknockin' for funds.

Anyone who questions the media's power to influence a candidate's popularity has only to ponder the question of the straw poll's significance had the media not reported the show under the big top.

But that's just the problem; how great is the media's influence and does the media create the event or merely report it?

A political reporter for a local newspaper group called the relationship "symbiotic" between the press and participants of event such as the convention. The role of the media raises some questions and people wonder who's setting the agenda. "On one hand," the reporter said, "the press has a responsibility to cover it and, on the other hand, the media has no right to create events."

And the question of which came first, the chicken or the egg, the event or the media? gets reinforced when one considers that the 1984 presidential election looms almost two years away. Why is so much attention given to an event that has so little bearing, according to many political spectators, on the final outcome of the competition for the Democratic nomination?

Television stations and newspapers certainly did not phone Chet Atkins and arrange a weekend binge of fanfare and placard waving for the public to overdose on. The event was clearly the work of Atkins and for a designated purpose; to bring attention to Massachusetts and its Democratic Party as a bellweather Democratic state and to detract from the Iowa caucus and New Hampshire primary.

That much is clear. What isn't clear is the effect of giving into urges to predict winners and losers. Stories such as the one in yesterday's Boston Globe written by the Washington, D.C. bureau chief predicting Walter Mondale's securing of the Democratic nomination, stories such as those over the weekend labeling Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., as a loser?

"The inevitable thing was the usual winners and losers story," the reporter said. "It's the classic early-primary syndrome, who was perceived as winners and losers. We are all arm-chair analysts.

"You know other reporters are going to do it. We political reporters take pride in our ability to analyze. The problem is when it becomes a self-fulfilling prophecy," he adds.

So, perhaps the media did not create the Democratic Issues Convention or the straw poll, but it is now the duty of the press to keep that story alive. It is the press' responsibility to its readership and to those candidates who have ideas which may not have fared well in Springfield last weekend. Ready or not, election '84 has begun.

The Department of Dramatic Arts of Amherst College will present Lorraine Hansberry's A Raisin in the Sun tomorrow, Saturday, and Sunday in Fayerweather Theater at Amherst College.

Set in Chicago's Southside Black ghetto in the 1950's, the play, which has been called "pivotal in the history of American Black Theater," revolves around the divergent dreams of and conflict within three generations of the Younger family.

All performances begin at 8 p.m. General admission is $1.00. For reservations call 542-2277.

On Saturday at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, the Third World Theater Series will close its 1983 Spring season with a dynamic and innovative presentation by the Pan Asian Repertory Theater entitled Yellow Fever, a mystery comedy written by Canadian playwright, Rick Shiomi.

Yellow Fever toys with the slick, suave character of Humphrey Bogart's Sam Spade and creates with a Pan Asian flair, a Canadian nisei (second generation Japanese) detective, Sam Shikaze. From Powell Street, Vancouver's Asian Ghetto, Sam seeks to solve the mystery of the kidnapped Cherry Blossom Queen while balancing his romantic life with reporter Nancy Wing. Through comedy author Shiomi shows us the vicious attitudes of the Canadian majority towards its Asian minority population.

The Pan Asian Repertory Theater is a New York based Theatrical group which has established the first east coast professional Asian American Theater company.

The University Ensemble Theater will present John Guare's Landscape of the Body, April 19-23 at 8 p.m. in the Curtain Theater of the Fine Arts Center. Tickets are $2.50 for the general public and $1.50 for students and senior citizens. Reservations may be made by calling 545-3511.

Moliere's The Imaginary Invalid, a social satire translated by Donald M. Frame and directed by Endre Hules, will be presented in Smith College's Theater 14 at 8 p.m. tomorrow and Saturday, and again April 21, 22, 23. For reservations call 584-3023. Dollar Nights are April 14 and 21.

More new romantics — Modern English will stop at the Agora Ballroom on May 21 during their second American tour.

Live Wire

A few words about local music. Back in the late 60's, early 70's, this valley was a hotbed of musical activity. UMass was one of the favorite spots in the country for national acts. Groups like Fleetwood Mac, and Ike and Tina Turner made this a regular stop on their touring itineraries. They knew the "happy valley" held an appreciative audience so the valley was regularly treated with superb musical visitations. On a more local level, the valley was leaded with top notch performers and bands. If a band could get a regular gig, they'd play on the Amherst common. And, it seemed, there were more clubs to play at. The difference between nowadays and way back when isn't actually that great, there are just as many bands in the area and just as many good performers. The difference is more of musician's attitudes than anything else. The musician's community in the valley has splintered. The give and take between players has diminished, the sense of sharing between most area bands has almost completely disappeared. In its place has arrived backstabbing, lying, and outright deception between musicians in an attempt to get gigs and publicity at the expense of other players. While I would not suggest a complete return to the "good old days", a return to the values and sense of fair play would be a breath of fresh air.

Despite these comments there still is a good degree of fair play in the area with some local bands, including quite a few who'll be playing out this weekend. Tonight features a variety of sounds, The Incredible Casuals with a NRBQ-like bluesy sound are at the Seperate Entrance in South Deerfield, while the modern sounds of R-Complex are to be heard at Sheehan's Cafe. The Fine Arts Center will present one of the all time jazz greats, the tenor sax player Dexter Gordon. At the Hangar One, you can relive the sixties with Through the Doors, one of the better "clone" bands on the circuit.

Tomorrow night Boston's The Dark will play the Bluewall, the Bobbies, a Police (what else) clone band will be at the Hangar One, Syncopation Station will play one of their final whistle stops at Sheehan's, and Winds of Change, an earth music-jazz group will play at the Iron Horse Coffeehouse.

Saturday night presents a treat for country music fans, Elvin Bishop will play at the Rusty Nail. Heroes in Trouble, a new local band will play at Sheehan's. Arabus, a popular Top-40 band plays the Wok.
